IF any man doubts of the evils that ariſe to a ſtate from granting out tracts of land to individuals, let him only think of Ruſſia and Poland, where the people having no property in the lands, are abſolute[illegible]; or of Germany, France and Spain, where they are in the loweſt ſtate of vaſſalage to their Lords, who permit them juſt to exiſt.

Unhappily for England, William the Conqueror ſeized upon it, granted the lands to his favourites and followers, in the deſcendants of whoſe hands great part of it remains to this day; ſuch only excepted as belonged to the church; great part of which at the reformation, Henry the Eighth confiſcated, and which he gave to the Nobles; leaving however ſome in the hands of the Clergy. From theſe and other cauſes, the titles and tenures of lands are very perplexed. We have freehold, copyhold, leaſehold, college-lands, church-lands, ſome are held by lives, other pay fines, &c. But very few hold a [illegible] abſolutely free and independant; and therefore the people muſt ever remain poor while their landlords are Princes. Thoſe evils have been long ſeen and felt, but never [illegible].

[illegible] ted in this country fled to New-England they ran the three colonies of Boſton, Connecticut, and Rhode-Iſland, out into lots of ten miles ſquare; theſe they called townſhips, and granted them to forty or fifty perſons jointly, their heirs and aſſigns for ever, and obliged them in ſeven years to build a church and ſchool: Thoſe ſettlers ſubdivided to their children, and they again to their's; ſo that every man in thoſe colonies is a free-holder, and thereby actually enjoys more liberty than any people in Europe or America; the Colony is alſo better cultivated, and infinitely more populous than any other of our colonies.

But in the very next colony to theſe, I mean New-York, the caſe is very different; for there many enormous grants were made by the Crown to individuals, of 20 miles ſquare; theſe are not one fourth part ſettled at this time, and ſuch people who are ſeated on thoſe lands are all tenants at will. NEWPORT, June [illegible].

By the intenſe Heat of Friday, 5th Inſt. in this Town, the ☿ in the Thermometer roſe to 86 by Ten o'Clock A. M. Before One, P. M. it was at 90; and at half after Three, it had aſcended to 93½, the Wind at S. W.: in Ten Minutes it fell to 84, the Wind [illegible] to E. and in the Thunder Shower at [illegible] Five, it Fell to 76½. The higheſt Altitude in the Summer of 1766 was 93½, July 11, on which Day it was 91 at Cambridge, and 89 at Philadelphia.

But on Thurſday, 4th Inſtant, June, the Heat was ſtill more intenſe at Bridgwater where a Fahrenheit's Thermometer, being ſuſpended above an Hour under an Apple Tree, and in the current of a [illegible] Breeze the ☿ aſcended to 100½. And from Nine in the Morning to Sunſet, was conſtantly above 80; and from about Eleven till after Four, P. M. was above 90 (It is ſaid that the higheſt Altitude on the memorable hot Lord's Day, 18th June, 1749, at Boſton and Philadelphia, was 100.) On 5th Inſt. at Taunton Mr. Payn's Thermometer, near an open Window, at two o'Clock, P. M. ſtood at Four Degrees below Blood-Heat, or at 92,—and at the ſame time another Thermometer, ſuſpended under an Apple-Tree, in a different Part of the Town, ſtood at 93.

At Cambridge, on the 4th Inſtant, the ☿ reached 92. On the 5th, it ſtood at 96 in Portſmouth, on this Iſland.

The General Aſſembly of This Colony met at the Court-Houſe, in this Town on Tueſday laſt. On Thurſday they entered upon the conſideration of the Petition (prefered at a former ſeſſion of the Aſſembly) of the Gentlemen who ſuffered by the Riots, in this Town, in the Month of Auguſt, 1765; and after debating upon the Affair, the Queſtion was put whether Compenſation ſhould be allowed or not; which paſſed in the affirmative. It was afterwards voted by the Lower-Houſe, that the Petit[illegible]

Yeſterday, between 11 and 12 o'Clock A. M. the Town was alarmed by Fire, which broke out in a Houſe in [illegible]

BOSTON, June 15.

Laſt Wedneſday came to town from New-York, His Excellency John Wentworth, Eſq; governor of New-Hampſhire, and the next day proceeded to his government.

Falmouth, Caſco-Bay, June 5, 1767.

Yeſterday afternoon we had here a very violent thunder ſtorm, attended with rain. The fore part of the day was extreme hot with a light breeze of wind from the N. W. which continued until two o'clock, when it ſhifted to the S. W. and blew quick.—At half after 5 a cloud came up from the North, (which had been riſing great part of the day) attended with a violent guſt of wind at N. W. and very ſevere thunder and lightning, which continued an hour.—A houſe near the water (in the garret of which was a ſingle large Iron ſtove) was ſtruck and much torn—It is obſervable that the lightning entered the garret window where the ſtove ſtood and tore that to pieces; thence fell in a perpendicular direction, ripping the clapboarding and plaiſtering as it fell, and entered a lower room in which a number of perſons were, two of which were ſitting together under the place it firſt entered, and one of them inſtantly kill'd, the other not hurt. A man at the outſide door was killed at the ſame time. In the Corner of the next room was a gun charged—the lightning entered the top of the room over it & burnt the joiſts and ſome Engliſh goods, and [illegible] in its way to the gun, upon which it continued to the end of the guard iron, when it ſplit the ſtock and went into the ground. It is ſaid a Blackſmith at work on the oppoſite ſide of the ſtreet was ſo ſenſibly affected by the Shock as to be turn'd round, and the hand

STO

[illegible] his Exce[illegible] a piece of iron ſo benumb'd [illegible] recover for ſome hours.—Some phyſician being near attempted to bleed both the perſons killed, immediately after the ſtroke, but the few drops that were drawn were obſerved to be thick and black altho' there was not the leaſt hurt viſible on either of the bodies.——

This inſtance may afford matter for the curious to conjecture whether the attraction of the iron ſtove in the garret might not be the natural cauſe of the lightning's falling on the houſe; as undoubtedly the effect that the Blackſmith felt at a very little diſtance proceeded from the iron in his hand which ſeems to prove beyond all reaſonable doubt the force of attraction in metals, and the expediency of placing electric points on houſes to preſerve them from the fatal effects of lightning.

P. S. The two perſons killed by the lightning were Joſeph Young, of this place and Cyrus Chew, of Windham.

AS the Subject of Stafford-Spring, begins to come upon the Carpet again, and the Seaſon for People's reſorting thither is commenc'd; after much reſolving, and re-reſolving, I have determined to caſt in my Mite.

As long as the Nature, and Proportion of the diſtinguiſhing Ingredients of the Water are unknown, Phyſicians at a Diſtance, never can be qualified to direct, and adviſe their Patients, whether it is beſt to repair to them.—Few Phyſicians in this Colony, I ſuppoſe, have ever been very curious in Experiments, as to a chymical Analyſis of the Water; nor indeed is their ſuch Advantages from an Apparatus for Experiments as is to be wiſhed:—However, Experiments well aſcertain'd (no Matter who they are made by, whether Prieſt, Prophet or Phyſician) may be of Service in the Caſe. Some Perſons ſuperſtitiouſly look upon the Spring a Betheſda, that will cure all that repair unto it: and Others, erring as far upon the other Hand, treat all Accounts of its medical Virtues as fabulous: but the philoſophical Mind, will judge of its real Benefit, in a medical View, from the Quantity and Quality of the minerals it is impregnated with, to aſcertain which, what I here communicate may in ſome Meaſure conduce.——

I was laſt Summer, ſome conſiderable Time at Stafford, in Company with the ingenious Doct. Warren, of Boſton, where ſome Experiments were made, from which it plainly appears that the Water, tho' perfectly clear and tranſparent, is ſtrongly impregnated with ſome chalybeat or ferruginous Matter, which is in an unaccountable Degree volatile, and will evaporate thro' the tighteſt Cork, in a little Time;—true, after a little ſtanding in a Veſſel, there is a yellow bituminous Sediment, which may be thoſe chalybeat Particles, that are ſpecifically heavier than the Water; ſo that by what evaporates (which is by far, the greateſt Part) and this more groſs Sediment the Water is ſoon diſpoſſeſs'd of all its Iron. It appears likewiſe poſſeſs'd of ſome alkaline, and nitrous Salts, and a conſiderable Proportion of Sulphur.—The Quantity of the volatile chalybeat Matter, may be more eaſily aſcertained than the other Ingredients; to evince this, I will only barely relate a few Facts, that thoſe whoſe Profeſſion and Abilities render it proper, may make farther Improvements.—

I. To ſhew that there is ſomething chalybeat in it, the following Particulars may ſerve—

1. Put a few Oak-Leaves into a Bowl of this Water, as it is taken out of the Spring, and as ſoon as the Leaves are well ſoak'd, the Water will appear like Ink.

2. Let a Piece of clean fine Holland or Cambrick be ſprinkled with the Water, and all the Suds and ſcrubbing poſſible will not be able to remove the black or brown Spots.

3. It produces, when immediately taken from the Spring, a bright purple Tincture from powder'd Galls.

4. The Water, when taken immediately from the Spring, appears to have ſix Grains in five Drams more Weight than common Water—for a Phial, nicely ballanced, fill'd with the Water, weighed five Drams, two Scruples, and twelve Grains; the ſame Phial, fill'd with common Water, weighed five Drams, two Scruples, and ſix Grains; whence it appeared, that in five Drams, two Scruples, and twelve Grains of Spring Water, there was ſix Grains of ſome Matter ſpecifically heavier than common Water.——

Now, my Gentlemen, that after conſidering the peculiar Gravity of the Water, reflects upon the natural Operation of aſtringent and ſtyptic Subſtances, upon vitriolic and chalybeat Liquids, will, from theſe Hints (out of the many that might be produced) determine the Water to be impregnated with Iron.

II. As to the Quantity and Volitility of the Iron, the following Hints may ſerve—

1. Oak Leaves, put into the Water two or three Hours after it is taken out of the Spring, will not give it the black or ink-like Colour.

2. Powder'd Galls, put in a few Hours after 'tis taken out of the Spring, produces but a very faint Colour, and, in two Days have no ſuch Colour at all, the tighteſt Corks notwithſtanding.

3. As it loſes it Power of producing this Colour, in near the ſame Proportion it loſes its Weight—to evince this, the following Experiment was tried—a Phial holding 2 Ounces of the Spring-Water was fill'd & weigh'd; it was left uncork'd for a While, and upon weighing, found two Grains and a Half was loſt; upon the Galls being added, a very faint Purple was produced;—the ſame Quantity was left uncork'd till it had loſt ſeven Grains, and no purple Tincture could be produced at all.—The Proportion then, of this volatile, chalybeat Matter, ſeems to be three Grains to two Ounces.

III. As to the Salts and Sulphur.

1. Upon dropping a few Drops of Aqua Fortis into a Handful of the Mud gathered any where at the Bottom of the Spring, there is a ſulphureous Smoke and Smell that is ſeen and ſmelt a conſiderable Ways round.

2. Upon evaporating five Gallons of the Water over a gentle Fire, there remained in the Bottom of the Veſſel, an Ounce and Half of yellow Powder, of a ſalt, nitrous Taſte.——Whether this Powder was not highly alkaline, the Learned may judge, when I aſſure them, that a vegetable Acid pour'd upon a little of it, produc'd a great Effervecenſe, and (if I miſtake not) Doct. Tudor and Doct. Jepſon, happen'd to be preſent, and both ſaw it. And that the Iron was all evaporated ſeems likely, ſince no Particles of the Powder could be attracted by the Load-ſtone.

3. Some of the above mentioned Powder put upon a heated Iron, gave forth a ſtrong, ſulphureous Smell.——

As the Communication of theſe Hints, are well meant, I hope they will be well received, from One who looks upon, himſelf a Friend to Mankind.

NATH. HOOKER.

Charleſtown, South-Carolina, May 15.

On Saturday laſt rice roſe from 50s. to 55s. the 100lb. at which price ſeveral large quantities have been ſold.

The ſame day arrived here, the Ship King of Pruſſia, Leonard Hodgſon, maſter, from Gibraltar, who tells us that about 5 days before he ſailed, advices having been received that the Spaniſh galleons were arrived at Cadiz, the Æolus, and another Britiſh frigate, immediately ſail'd from Gibraltar for the ſaid port, in order, it was ſaid, to receive, or demand, the Manilla ranſom, which the court of Spain had put off paying till the arrival of her treaſure from the new world.—Capt. Hodgſon ſays, that about a fortnight before he ſailed an Engliſh ſhip, which had been up the Levant with tobacco, was ordered to proceed for, and put on ſhore the ſaid cargo at Gibraltar, but when ſhe arrived there, General Irwin, unwilling to give any umbrage to the Spaniards, did not permit the tobacco to be landed, and the ſhip put out to Sea again, but was ſoon followed by two xebecks ſent out by the Spaniſh general; the captain of the ſhip ſeeing an Engliſh frigate got under his protection, on which the xebecks then along-ſide of him, tho't proper to ſheer off.—Great quantities of grain were arrived in all the ports of the Mediterranean, which had reduced the prices to almoſt nothing, and it was tho't immenſe ſums would be loſt by the adventurers of that branch.

A letter from London, of February 17th, ſays, "His Majeſty, whoſe attention to learning the Sciences, ever ſince the commencement of his auſpicious reign, has been conſpicuous to the whole world, is now making up the moſt valuable library in Europe, or perhaps in the world; having agents in all parts to collect books for this truly royal purpoſe, and ſome of the moſt learned men in Great Britain are now employed in putting them in the proper order."

PHILADELPHIA, June 15.

On Thurſday laſt Philip Ucker, a carter of this city, having been hard at work, drank two draughts of cold water, while he was very warm, which had ſo ſudden and fatal an effect upon him, that he died in leſs than two hours.

WHEREAS we the Subſcribers being appointed by the Honorable Court of Probate for the Diſtrict of Hartford, Commiſſioners, to receive and examine the Claims of the ſeveral Creditors to the Eſtate of Capt. Crafts Wright, late of Weathersfield, deceas'd, repreſented Inſolvent, do hereby give public Notice, that we will attend on ſaid Buſineſs, on the firſt and laſt Tueſdays of July, Auguſt, September, October and November next, at the late Dwelling-Houſe of the ſaid Deceas'd, from One o'Clock in the Afternoon, until Seven, on each of ſaid Days.

By Captain Newtown from New-Providence, we have an Account, that of the 3 French Seamen, who had been lately carried in as Priſoners there, for murdering the Captain of a French Sloop, bound from the Miſſiſippi for Cape Francois, ſome time in March laſt, one of them turn'd King's Evidence; upon which the other two had been condemned to die; and accordingly one was executed the 20th of May laſt, and afterwards hung in Chains; and that the other was to undergo the ſame Puniſhment on the Friday following. The Sloop had alſo been taken up and brought in without having been caſt away as was reported. We hear alſo that the fiſhing for Treaſure on the Spaniſh Wreck mentioned to have been caſt away ſome Time ago on the Bahama Banks, had not been ſo ſucceſsful as has been reported, but that the Wreckers were ſtill exerting their Powers in that Affair; and that the utmoſt they had recovered would ſcarce amount to 30,000 Pieces of Eight.

By Captain Jauncey, who arrived here Tueſday laſt in 26 Days from Jamaica, we have Advice, that two London Porters had been apprehended at that Iſland a few Days before he ſailed, in Purſuance of an Expreſs ſent after them from England, and put on board of an Engliſh Man of War bound home: It appears by the London Prints, that the beginning of March laſt, theſe two Porters having been intruſted to carry a conſiderable Sum of Money from the Bank, had made off with the ſame, & got on board of a Weſt-India Ship at Spithead, bound to Jamaica: The Ship had ſail'd near a Fortnight before the Knowledge of their Eſcape; and on the 18th a Cutter ſail'd from Portſmouth, with the Expreſs, in hopes to overtake them at Madeira; but miſſing them there, they followed quite down to Jamaica. Thus Rogues may eſcape for a while, but they generally get overtaken at laſt.

June 25. It is ſaid ſtrict Orders are ſent to the Weſt-Indies, to obſerve and detect the New-England, New-York and Philadelphia Captains of Veſſels, in ſelling Hats of their reſpective Provinces, which is prohibited, under a ſevere Penalty, on the Captain and all concerned in it, Complaint having been made at Home of great Quantities being ſent from thoſe Colonies, of the fine Beaver Kind, to the great Prejudice of the Beaver Hat Trade at Home.

Laſt Monday arrived at Boſton, Captain Griffiths, in 7 Weeks from Briſtol: By whom there is the following Advices, viz.

MADRID, (in Spain) April 3.

THE whole City is in an Uproar ſince Wedneſday laſt, when the Jeſuits were abruptly ſeized, and ſent off to different Ports of the Kingdom to be embark'd to Italy. All their Treaſures, all their Eſtates are declared confiſcated to the Crown. The Procurators, Subſtitutes of theſe Fathers, are ſtill ſtrictly guarded, and they will be compelled to give in a Detail of all the Poſſeſſions of the Society. Yeſterday the King's Decree for the Baniſhment of the Jeſuits was made public with the uſual Formalities; and on the other Hand the Pope's Nuncio, diſpatched a Courier to Rome, with this ſtriking News.

LONDON, April 18.

We are told, that a certain Nobleman has declared, that he will no further intereſt himſelf in Behalf of the Americans, as they have deceived him by their late Conduct, for whoſe good Behavior he had given his Honour; and that he referred them to the Laws of this Country, if they wanted Redreſs.

The Demand this Year from N. America, for Birmingham and Sheffield Wares fall many Thouſand Pounds ſhort of thoſe for ſome Years preceding.

By private Letters from Madrid we are informed that the Order baniſhing the Jeſuits from that Kingdom was circulated in ſuch a Manner that it arrived at the different Cities the ſame day; and that the only Perſon who ſpoke in their Favor, at the Council that was held upon this Subject, was the Miniſter of the Marines.

Yeſterday two large Ships were taken up in the River, on Government Contract, to carry over Artillery, Troops, and Stores for his Majeſty's Settlements on the African Coaſt.

Private Letters from Madrid inform that an Advice Boat had been ſent to Cadiz, for the Viceroys of Mexico, Peru & Chili, and the other Spaniſh Governors in South America, and the Weſt Indies, ſaid to be on Affairs of Importance relating to the Jeſuits.

They write from Cadiz, that an order has been received there for the equipment of a ſmall ſquadron, ſaid to be intended for an expedition to South America, to deſtroy a certain ſeminary which the Jeſuits of Paraguay had poſſeſſed themſelves of between Cape St. Antonio and the River Plate.

April 28. Yeſterday morning a private Maſs-houſe was ſuppreſſed in Black Lion Court, where a number of poor Iriſhmen had aſſembled for their devotion. Two Prieſts fled, and their hearers were diſperſed without any tumult: 'tis ſaid in St. Giles's pariſh only, there are upwards of 20,000 Papiſts.

Trade is brought to ſo low an ebb, at Liſbon, that the Cuſtom-houſe duties for the month of February did not exceed 400 moidores.

April 11. On Sunday laſt was read in St. Sepulchre's church, the following extraordinary note, viz.—"The prayers of this congregation are deſired for ſeveral perſons in real want of the neceſſaries of life, and groaning under the heavy weight of Oppreſſion."

Glouceſter, March 23. A demure old Farmer came and obſerved to the printer here on Saturday, that he was afraid that bakers and mealmen never read their bible; but as he knew they always read the news-paper, he deſired a place might be given to the following texts of ſcripture;——"Juſt balances, juſt weights, [illegible] and a juſt hin ſhall ye have." Lev. xix. [illegible]——"Divers weights, and divers meaſures, both of them are alike abomination to the Lord." Prov. xx. 10.

A long liſt appeared in one of the Daily Papers yeſterday of the arrangement which it is ſaid is to take place after the holidays; when Earl Temple and the Right Hon. George Grenville are ſet down as Secretaries of State; and moſt of the other departments to be filled in the ſame manner as before the late change in the adminiſtration: but another Morning Paper of this day aſſerts, that is not the leaſt foundation in truth for any part of the liſt of the day.

We are credibly informed, the vigilance of Admiral Palliſer, during his ſtation laſt year at Newfoundland, has utterly diſconcerted the views of the French in their attempts to carry on any future clandeſtine trade with the Engliſh; ſeveral of their fiſhermen, who carried out little or no proviſion for the voyage in hopes of being ſupplied in exchange for brandies and European goods, having been obliged to quit the coaſt before the ſeaſon was half expired.

April 28. We hear a great number of foreign Jeſuits, who are poſſeſſed of immenſe wealth have a deſign to lay aſide their eccleſiaſtical function and character entirely, in order to come and ſettle in Great-Britain as merchants, where they intend to get themſelves naturalized; for which privilege, it is ſaid, they are willing to pay a large ſum to the Government, which they intend to petition for the purpoſe.

April 30. Yeſterday there was a very numerous Levee at St. James's, and afterwards a Council, at which the Lord Chancellor aſſiſted.

The Right Hon. George Grenville, was at the Levee, and it is ſaid ſome Changes in the Miniſtry will take Place in a few Days.

The Houſe of Commons were very full Yeſterday, and ſat late.

HARTFORD, June 29.

Laſt Wedneſday 7-night, at the raiſing the Frame for a Meeting-Houſe at Bolton, one John Paine, fell from the upper Part of it, and bruis'd himſelf very much, and broke ſeveral of his Bones, but is, notwithſtanding, in a very fair Way of Recovery. And,

On the Evening of the ſame Day, one Mrs. Hoſkins, who had been to the Raiſing, in attempting to jump on a Horſe, behind her Huſband, fell backwards over the Horſe, and unfortunately broke her Neck, and expired in a few Hours.

Turkey-Hills (in Simſbury) June 18.

Yeſterday was held in this Place, the annual Convention of the Church Clergy, in Connecticut, before whom a Sermon was preached by the Rev'd Mr. Newton, of Ripton, in Stratford——Prayers were read by the Rev'd Mr. Jarvis of Middletown.

Extract of Dr. Franklin's Letters on Electricity.

"AS electrical clouds paſs over the country, high hills and high Trees, lofty towers, ſpires, maſts of ſhips, chimneys, &c. as ſo many prominences draw the electrical fire, and the whole cloud diſcharges there; it is dangerous to take ſhelter under a tree during a thunder-guſt; it has been fatal to both man and beaſts. It is ſafer to be in the open field. When the Cloathes are wet, if a flaſh, in its way to the ground, ſhould ſtrike your head, it would run in the water over the ſurface of your body, whereas if your cloathes are dry, it would go through your body. Hence a wet rat cannot be killed by the exploding electrical bottle, when a dry rat may."

The AUTHOR's PRAYER to the DEITY.

WHILST here I live,
To me O! give
An Heart from Rancor free;
A Soul replete
With all that's great
Virtue and Liberty.
Grant me a Mind
Pure and refin'd,
Impervious to Vice:
From all that's vain
May I refrain,
And Goodneſs be my choice.
Teach me the way,
Both Night and Day,
None but my God to fear;
To eaſe Diſtreſs,
All Wrongs redreſs,
Wipe off the Orphan's tear.
When Death advance
His pointed lance
Againſt my peaceful breaſt,
May Angels fair
My Spirit bear
To her eternal Reſt.

In the county of Surry, a certain bear is exhibited, that performs many extraordinary feats, among which, one is the diſtinguiſhing all cuckolds and cuckold-makers from other men. An eminent philoſopher conceives that this is done by the Olfactory nerves; which has induced him to undertake the improvement of the ſmelling faculty; and he hopes to bring it to that perfection as to diſtinguiſh a married woman, from a maid, and the wanton from the chaſte. It is ſaid he can ſmell a rat already.

NEW-YORK, July 6.

The Pennſylvania Chronicle of Monday laſt, contains very complaiſant and reſpectful Addreſſes, from the Council and Houſe of Repreſentatives of New-Jerſey to the Governor, wherein they expreſs great Satiſfaction and Gratitude that their Conduct has met with his Majeſty's Approbation, and that the Addreſſes have been favourably received; for his Care in tranſmitting which, and for his Speech, they thank the Governor.—They approve his Conduct, and have made Proviſion by Law according to his Recommendations, particularly—For diſcharging the Arrearages due to Barrack-Maſters, and for ſupplying the King's Troops quartered in that Colony with Neceſſaries in a Manner that would not be liable to the Inconveniencies mention'd by his Excellency; and for rewarding the Perſons who were active in apprehending the Murderers of the Indians, &c.

An Act appointing Commiſſioners, for ſupplying the ſeveral Barracks erected in the Colony of New-Jerſey, with Furniture and other Neceſſaries, for accommodating the King's Troops in, or marching thro' the ſame, for ſupplying the Deficiencies, and defraying other incidental Charges.

On the 14th of April laſt was publiſhed in London, in One Volume Octavo, Price 3s. 6d. ſewed, (And illuſtrated with three Copper-plates repreſenting, 1. The Commodore diſtributing Preſents to the gigantic Patagonians: 2. A Sailor giving a Patagonian Woman ſome Biſcuit for her Child; And, 3 A Grove in one of the newly diſcovered Iſlands, which is ſuppoſed to be a Place of Worſhip)

A Voyage round the World, in his Majeſty's Ship the Dolphin, commanded by the Honourable Commodore BYRON. In which is contained a faithful Account of the ſeveral places, People, Plants, Animals, &c. ſeen on he Voyage; and, among other Particulars, a minute and exact Deſcription of the Streights of Magellan, and the gigantic People called Patagonians; together with an accurate Account of ſeven Iſlands lately diſcovered in the South Seas.

By an OFFICER on Board the ſaid ſhip.

Printed and ſold by J. Newbery, in St. Paul's Church-Yard; and F. Newbery, in Paternoſter Row.

 This Voyage among other curious and uſeful Particulars fully confirms and eſtabliſhes the Truth of there being a Nation of People of monſtrous Bulk, and that they are in general from 9 to 10 Feet high. What Uſe Divines may make of this we know not, but it certainly proves what is recorded in Scripture, and even in Heathen Authors, namely, that there was (and ſtill is) a race of Giants.

Extract of a VOYAGE round the WORLD, in his Majeſty's Ship Dolphin; commanded by the Hon. Commodore BYRON.

THE Author of this very curious and intereſting Voyage modeſtly apologizes, in his Preface for the Want of thoſe Elegancies and Decorations of Style which are ſo eagerly ſought after, he being bred to a Profeſſion which requires other Kinds of Arguments and Implements than thoſe uſed in Print; but, which is more valuable, he adds, "the reader in this Work has a right to expect Truth, and he will not be diſappointed."

The Author has in his Account of his [illegible] Voyage, which was performed by the Dolphin, accompanied by the Tamar, in about two Years, given a particular Account of every Place they touched at or ſaw, and of its Inhabitants, their Cuſtoms, Manners, Produce, Curioſities, &c. &c. &c.——

——but as the public Attention has been a good deal engaged with reſpect to the Patagonians, and ſome Doubts have ariſen as to the Truth of the late Rumours concerning them we here inſert the following Particulars relating to them, and refer the Reader for more ample Gratification to the Book itſelf.

"On the 22d of December 1764, at 6 o'Clock in the Morning, they ſaw the extremes of Terra del Fuego, extending from the South-Eaſt by South, to the South Weſt by South, at four or five Leagues Diſtance.————At Eight they diſcovered a good deal of Smoke iſſuing from different Quarters, and perceived a Number of People on Horſeback.

"We anchor'd (ſays our Author) at 14 Fathom [illegible] Beach-ſhore, and ſaw Cape Virgin [illegible] over the low Neck of Land to the Eaſt North Eaſt, and Point Poſſeſſion to the Weſt by South. We were then about a mile from Land, and no ſooner came to an Anchor than the People on ſhore hallowed to us, and moved their hands; on which we immediately hoiſted our Boats, which we manned and [illegible].

"When we rowed within 20 yards of the Shore we lay on our Oars, and obſerved that great Numbers of them ſurrounded the Beach, and likewiſe that by their Countenance ſeemed equally deſirous of having us land. After the moſt amicable Signs which we were capable of underſtanding or they of giving, Signal was made to them to retire backwards.——

"As ſoon as the Indians had retreated from the Beach, the Commodore leaped on Shore, followed by his Officers and Men, whom he drew up in a Poſture of Defence. Immediately on our landing they came about us, to the Number of 200 or more, looking at us with evident Marks of Surprize, and ſmiling, as it ſhould ſeem, at the great Diſproportion of our Stature.

"After many amicable Signs, which appeared equally agreeable to both Parties, our Commodore, who had the Precaution to take with him on Shore a great Number of Trinkets, ſuch as Earings of Beads, Ribbons, and the like, diſtributing them with great Freedom, giving to each of them ſome. He made the Indians ſit down on the Ground, that he might put the Strings of Beads, &c. round their Necks; and ſuch was their extraordinary Size, that in this Situation they were almoſt as high as the Commodore when ſtanding.

"They were now ſo delighted with the different Trinkets, which they had an Opportunity of viewing, as they hung round their Necks, that the Commodore could ſcarcely refrain them careſſing him, particularly the Women, whoſe large and maſculine Features correſponded with the enormous Size of their Bodies. Their middle Stature ſeemed to be about eight Feet, their extreme nine and upwards.

"Their Cloathing conſiſted of the Skins of Guanacoes, or Peruvian Sheep, which reached from their Shoulders down to their Knees, and their Hair was long and black, hanging down behind. The Faces of the Women were painted moſt extravagantly, and their Stature equally ſurprizing with that of the Men. We ſaw ſome of their Infants in their Mothers Arms, whoſe Features, conſidering their Age, bore the ſame Proportion.

"Theſe People frequently looked towards the Sun with an Air of Adoration, and made Motions with their Fingers, in order to make us ſenſible of any particular Circumſtance they wanted us to underſtand. They appeared to be of an amiable and friendly Diſpoſition, and ſeemed to live in great Unanimity among themſelves. After we had been with them a ſhort Time, they made Signs for us to go with them to the Smoke, which we ſaw at a Diſtance, and at the ſame Time pointed to their Mouths, as if they intended to give us ſome Refreſhment; but their Number being at preſent greatly ſuperior to ours, and it being not improbable that ſtill greater Multitudes might come upon us unawares from the inland Country, our Commodore, who was equally remarkable for his Prudence and his Bravery, thought it not adviſeable to venture any farther from the water-ſide.

"By the Obſervations we made from the Maſthead, and from the Smoke we ſaw from different Quarters, theſe Patagonians ſeemed to have no Huts, but to be entirely [illegible], without [illegible] a Tree of a moderate Growth [illegible]. Indeed the Soil is in general [illegible] found neither Water nor Trees, but only a few Shrubs.

"Thoſe who ſurrounded us on Shore, were, before our landing, on Horſeback; but on ſeeing us make up to them they diſmounted, and left their Horſes at ſome Diſtance. Theſe Horſes ſeemed to be about 16 Hands high, and very ſwift; but bore no Proportion to the Size of their Riders, and ſeemed to be but in a poor Condition.

"At length, after making Signs we would depart, with the moſt plauſible promiſes by our Geſtures of returning to them again from the Ship, we left theſe Patagonian Indians, who were ſo diſtreſſed and afflicted at our leaving them, that we heard their Cries for a conſiderable Time after."

LONDON, May 1.—7.

It is now confidently aſſerted, that a certain production; which lately appeared in the public prints, written by a celebrated exile, would never have been publiſhed, had not a certain great perſon's behaviour to his noble brother provoked the latter to deliver him up to the mercy of the ſaid exile's moſt keen and formidable pen.

Commodore Palliſer, on his arrival at Newfoundland, received orders to ſtation a frigate of War at each of the iſlands of St. Peter's and Miquelon, for preventing the Engliſh from carrying on any illegal traffic with the French.

The Bruſſels Gazette, received on Wedneſday hath the following paragraph under London, April 24. "We are not without fear leſt the meaſures taken for the eſtabliſhing of a tax in America, ſhould give riſe to new troubles in moſt of our colonies. Precaution however will be taken to leave the repartition and collection of it to the aſſemblies of the different provinces, to whom the governors are to make the propoſition relative thereto, on the part of the K—, on condition that they charge themſelves with remitting the produce of the tax to the Exchequer here, to be diſpoſed of by Parliament. The ſpirit of revolt and independency, which reign in that country, give us reaſon to depend on any good diſpoſitions on their parts.

The Right Hon. Charles Townſhend, Eſq; Chancellor of the Exchequer, has received ſo much hurt from a fall, as to prevent his attending the ſervice of Parliament; but he is now much better.

May 9. Lord Chatham is retired to North End at Hampſtead, where he is really very ill with the gout in his head.

No fleet will ſail towards the Tagus till the arrival of a categorical anſwer to ſome very important diſpatches lately ſent over to Liſbon.

May 12. Yeſterday there was a full Houſe of Commons, and it was expected they would ſit late; ſome accounts from America, which were laid before them, for their Inſpection, were the Object of the Debates.

Laſt week ſome diſpatches ſaid to be of Importance were received at the Secretary of State's office, from his Excellency Francis Bernard, Eſq; Governor of New-England, which have already been laid before a cabinet council at St. James's.

It has been remarked at the Weſt End of the Town as a Matter well worth noticing that almoſt for a Month paſt there have not been leſs than 400 Members every Day in a certain Aſſembly.

By Capt. Darell from St. Vincent's, we learn, that the Engliſh Settlements on that Iſland, proceed with a good deal of Life and Vigour, and that it [illegible] this laſt Seaſon, and it is expected above ten times as much will be produced next Year;—That the Commiſſioners for diſpoſing of the Crown Lands in the new ceded Iſlands having finiſhed that Buſineſs at Dominica, had come down to St. Vincent's a ſhort Time before Capt. Darrel left it, and were upon diſpoſing of the remainder of the Land, that was then unſold before.——Lands near the Chief Town had been laſt Year ſold at above Fifty Pounds Sterling an Acre; the beſt of thoſe in the remote Parts of the Iſland now ſold at about Twenty-five pounds an Acre; and the rocky and mountanious Parts with nothing but Woods and ſtones on them, ſold from about £. 3. to £. 5. per Acre, according to the ſituation thereof: and great Numbers of new Plantations were every day improving with all the Diligence poſſible.—A civil Government has heretofore been in the other Engliſh Iſlands and every Meaſure taken to render the Inhabitants as ſecure and free as any other of his Majeſty's Subjects.

On the 9th of April laſt, it was mention'd in the New-York Journal, that Stephen Porter, ſaid to be the principal Perpetrator of the Murder of Capt. Weſtcot and his Mate, at Sea, about July laſt, had about nine Months before that, arrived here from the Granades, with Capt. Roger Richards, to whom it is ſaid he pretended he had been caſt away in a Veſſel of which he was Commander, and then appear'd fluſh of Money and well dreſſed. Since that Time we have not heard of him, till Saturday laſt, when tho' in a common Sailors Dreſs he had been ſeen on board a Veſſel juſt arrived, by a Woman who knew him, had heard of the Crime laid to his Charge, and informed Capt. Richards, who went on board the Veſſel, took him and carried him before an Alderman, who committed him to Goal, where he now remains. By the Depoſition of William Henry, a Boy of about 14, taken before Governor De Windt in Euſtatia, and publiſh'd in this Journal, on the 2d of April laſt, it appears, that after the above Murder, in which Porter was aſſiſted by Richard Hencock and George Wheypon, they ſail'd to the Head of St. Jago, where the Sloop was wreck'd on the Rocks, and [illegible] drown'd that Porter, paſſing for the Maſter and Hencock for his Mate (by the Name of George Whitney) they ſold the Reſt of the Slaves to the Portugueſe [illegible] for 30 Dollars each, and were kindly entertained by the Governor, who procured them a Paſſage to St. Euſtatia.

Richard Hencock was born in the Weſt of England, is a ſhort [illegible], of a yellow Complection, about [illegible] Years of Age, and wore a light colour'd Wig. George Wheypon, born in Virginia, a very tall Man, about 24 Years of Age and wears his own Hair. (See Gazette, No. [illegible].)

Monday laſt arrived here the Ship Frances, Capt Inglis, in 6 Weeks from Cadiz;——Capt. Inglis confirms the Account given in the Papers of the Expulſion of the Jeſuits from Spain; and that a great Number of them were embarking at Cadiz for Civita Vechia, in the Pope's Dominions. He heard no Talk of the Manilla Ranſom at Cadiz, but ſays the [illegible] Frigate ſailed from thence for England; a few Days before he left it, with a great Quantity of Caſh on board, on Account of the Merchants; and the Aquilon was to ſail in a few Days after him, with ſome of the ſame Commodity on board, for Italy.

By the Poſt we hear, that one William Jeſſis was ſtruck dead by a Flaſh of Lightning at Trenton, on Tueſday Evening laſt.

Capt. Baldwin from [illegible], but laſt from Connecticut, [illegible] about 35 Days ago; and [illegible] general Drought has prevailed there this laſt Seaſon, that few of the Planters will have more than half Crops and many Pieces of Cane not worth cutting at all.

WHEREAS we the Subſcribers being appointed by the Honourable Court of Probate for the Diſtrict of Hartford, Commiſſioners, to receive and examine the Claims of the ſeveral Creditors to the Eſtate of Capt. Crafts Wright, late of Wethersfield, deceas'd, repreſented inſolvent, do hereby give public Notice, that we will attend on ſaid Buſineſs, on the firſt and laſt Tueſdays of July, Auguſt, September, October and November next, at the late Dwelling-Houſe of the ſaid Deceas'd, from One o'Clock in the Afternoon, until Seven, on each of ſaid Days.

AN hour after the child is born, give it a little oil of ſweet almond, a little juice of the onion, with a little ſugar candy; after that, it need not have any thing for a whole day and night. The next day, at 5 o'clock in the morning, let it have ſome ſpoon meat of fine wheat flour; and ſome of the following water. At nine or ten o'clock let it drink as much of the water as it likes; about one, give it ſome more of the boiled flour, and between that and bed time let it have ſome of the water two or three times, as it likes to drink; giving it ſome of the boiled flour and the water at nine o'clock on the morrow. Purſue the ſame method every day.

The water is prepared in this manner: half a pint of ſpring water, with as many aniſeeds as can be held between the finger and thumb; this ſhould be boiled as long as will boil an egg: afterwards put a little ſweet biſcuit into it, and let it ſtand to cool. This water muſt be made freſh every day, and when the child wants it, let it be made as warm as milk before you give it to him.

Infants fed in this manner, during ſeven or eight months, are commonly more healthful than thoſe that are nurſed by a ſtrange breaſt: nurſes frequently having concealed diſorders, and being ſubject to be paſſionate. This method may be ſucceſsfully applied in hoſpitals for foundlings.

Advertiſement.

LONDON, May 16.

A foreign Miniſter we hear, will depart from this metropolis in a week.

We hear Orders are ſent to Ireland, for ſix Regiments of Foot to be in readineſs to embark at a ſhort notice.

We are now credibly aſſured that Epiſcopacy will never take place among our ſubjects in America.

We learn from Boſton in New-England, that the preſent diſpute between the Governor and Aſſembly chiefly relates to the quartering of Soldiers, the latter having flatly refuſed to provide for the maintenance of the troops, purſuant to orders ſent from England.

We hear ſtrict orders are ſent over to his Majeſty's American Governors to prohibit the holding any future Congreſs of the different Colonies, as was lately done in the caſe of the Stamp-act.

A negotiation for a change of miniſters is certainly on foot, and has been for ſeveral days paſt.

Lord E——t, it is ſaid, will be made Secretary of State for the ſouthern Department, with the name and power of miniſter [illegible].

Others again ſay that there are no leſs than three negotiations on foot, for a new ſet of Miniſters, and that the new ſet, it is thought, will be a tory miniſtry.

Thurſday ſome diſpatches of conſequence were ſent off, from Secretary Conway's Office, for his Excellency Gov. Barnard of New-England.

We hear a Committee of American Merchants will in a few days attend the Miniſtry on affairs of great Importance.

No Acts of the American Aſſemblies will, for the future be allowed to be valid unleſs they ſhall wholly comply with the late act for quartering Soldiers in America.

We alſo hear that the American Aſſemblies will be obliged to conform to all acts of the Britiſh Legiſlature reſpecting both their internal as well as external polity and government.

The odds lately againſt the Americans were 82.

According to recent letters from Rome, the Jeſuits were on the point of loſing the protection of his Holineſs the Pope, influenced thereto, it is ſaid, by the diſcovery of certain intrigues of the ſociety highly derogatory both to the honor and intereſts of the court of Rome.

The diſcovery of a large quantity of warlike Stores, which had been a long time ſecretly accumulating, in a College of the Jeſuits, for the Uſe of their Brethren in Paraguay, (where they were to be privately tranſported) facilitated not a little to the diſgrace of thoſe fathers.

Cadiz, April 21. Several tranſports are hired to carry a number of Jeſuits from hence, to Civita Vecchia: They are to ſail very ſoon under Convoy of the Spaniſh Ship of War Princeſs.

PHILADELPHIA, July 6.

Laſt Tueſday night about eleven o'clock, a Houſe in Race-ſtreet adjoining the Moravian Meeting, was greatly damaged by lightning; it firſt ſtruck the chimney, the top of which it burſt; then ſhattered the Roof, and deſcending by the wall, tore the ceilings and wainſcotting, in every Story to the ground floor, in a moſt ſurprizing manner; ripped up the floors, & broke the window all to pieces. The goodneſs of providence was remarkably ſhewn, in the Preſervation of the family, who were in bed in the rooms, cloſe by where the lightning paſſed, but did not receive the leaſt hurt.

BOSTON, July 9.

Capt. St. Barbe from Falmouth, met with a Veſſel from South-Carolina, bound to Cowes, who had taken up Capt. Gerriſh and his Crew, belonging to Salem, whoſe Veſſel had founder'd on her Paſſage from the Bay of Hondoras; Capt. Gerriſh and his People were put on board Capt. St. Barbe, who arrived laſt Tueſday.

Capt. Bell from the Weſt-Indies, arrived at Charleſtown on Tueſday laſt informs, that on his Paſſage he took up and brought in with him, Capt. Cheeſborough of New-London, and his Crew, whoſe Veſſel had ſprung a Leak, and was almoſt full of Water: It is tho't ſhe in a ſhort Time after ſunk.

On Thurſday Night a Fellow was detected on board a Veſſel in the Harbour, and the next Day was committed to Goal; by the STAMP in his Forehead he is tho't to be an old Offender.

NEW-YORK, July 6.

On Tueſday laſt, in the riſing Guſt we had here, the Houſe of Mr. Abraham Dow at Albany, was ſtruck by the Lightning, firſt ſhattering to Pieces the Kitchen Chimney, rendering a Feather Bed uſeleſs, (which is tho't to be ſomewhat extraordinary,) thence proceeded to the Cellar, where it rip'd off all the wooden Hoops from a Pipe of Wine, leaving the Iron Ones, which as it lay on the Ground it is tho't conducted it into the Earth. Some Perſons were ſtunned, but recovered.

July 9. Tueſday laſt Arrived here, in 7 Weeks from the Cove of Cork, the Hunter, Scarborough, Amity's Production, Eagle and Lloyd Tranſports with the 16th and 26 Regiments of Foot, on board, under the Command of Lieut. Col. Moncrieffe. Three other Tranſports, viz. the Amity's Admonition, Amity's Benediction, and the Liberty, with the 18th Regiment, are gone into Philadelphia. The Amity's Production, loſt the Fleet on Friday evening laſt, and got in here the Evening before the Reſt. 'Tis ſaid, three of thoſe ſhips here, with one Regiment, are going to Perth-Amboy, to be qurartered in different parts of the Jerſeys.

We are informed by ſome Gentlemen in this Fleet that on the Paſſage, they ſaw many Veſſels, but ſpoke only one, viz. in Lat. 27, 40, Lon. 46, and a half, a French Indiaman, homeward bound having on board a Governor and his Family, ſeveral Officers, and Troops, (but learned no News from her) ſhe had been in Company with an Engliſh homeward bound Indiaman, from whom they parted the Day before.

We hear the 28th, and ſome other Regiments, are immediately going Home.

We cannot find that any later Papers came by theſe ſhips, than thoſe we have received, nor any remarkable news.—Lord Chatham had greatly recover'd his health—there was no likelihood of his reſigning his office, or of the Grenvillian party coming into the miniſtry.——Great commotions about the affairs of the Eaſt-India-Company.

A ſmall Caſk of excellent, genuine Tent-Wine, ſo highly eſteemed for Perſons in a weakly, conſumptive State of Health, to be ſold in Hartford.——Enquire of the Printer. 32

The FROG and the RAT. A FABLE.

By a YOUNG LADY.

ONCE on a time a fooliſh frog,
Vain, proud, and ſtupid as a log,
(For 'tis an axiom of the ſchools,
Who argue proud, turn out quite fools)
Tir'd of the marſh, her native home,
Imprudently abroad would roam;
And fix her habitation where
She'd breathe at leaſt a purer air.
She was reſolv'd to change, that's pas;
Could ſhe be worſe than where ſhe was!
Away the ſilly Creature leaps.
A rat, who ſaw her wand'ring ſteps,
Cry'd out, Where in this hurry, pray?
You certainly are going aſtray.
Ne'er fear; I'll quit the filthy bog,
Where I ſo long have croak'd incog;
People of talents ſure ſhou'd thrive
And not be buried thus alive.
But pray, for I'm extremely dry,
Know you of any water nigh;
None, ſaid the rat, you'll reach to day,
As you ſo ſlowly make your way.
Believe a friend, and take my word,
This jaunt of yours is quite abſurd;
Go to your froggery again,
In your own element remain.
No; on the journey ſhe was bent,
Her thirſt increaſing as ſhe went,
For want of drink ſhe ſcarce can hop,
And yet diſpairing of a drop,
Too late ſhe moans her folly paſt;
She faints, ſhe ſinks, ſhe breaths her laſt.
Frogs! in your marſhes be content;
Dry land for you was never meant,
Some breathe in dry, ſome in moiſt air,
But all ſhould live within their ſphere.

THE CONNECTICUT COURANT.

Printed by THOMAS GREEN, in HARTFORD.

CONNECTICUT.

To the PUBLIC.

WHEN Men of unblemiſhed Reputation, are turn'd out of Poſts of Truſt and Profit, in which they have conducted themſelves without Exception or Accuſation; for no other Cauſe but to make Room for Others who are the Tools of thoſe in Power, then, at that Inſtant, in whatever Community it happens, one main Support of Liberty is undermined, and the Avenues to Faction, Bribery, and Corruption, with all their attendant Train of Horrors are ſet wide open.

Wherever Men are thus diſplac'd, without the leaſt Charge of Male-adminiſtration, in the Poſts they ſuſtained, and Flatterers, Sycophants, and even a Fool, if of the right Stamp, introduced, there let that Government be ſimple or mix'd monarchical or popular, we may venture to affirm it to be tyrannical, and of the worſt K[illegible]

[illegible] Poſts of Honor, and Gain, to Sale, is much more [illegible] [illegible] Places of Honor and Profit, both for the Good of the Public, and themſelves, who would ſooner ſuffer Death, than flatter, lye, and ſwear themſelves into Advancement: Beſides, this is in ſome Senſe open, fair Dealing, and all, both the Good, as well as the Bad, ſtand an even Chance, but in the other Caſe, none but the Baſe and Servile, will, or can be admitted.——This ſecret Corruption is not a Peſtilence walking at Noon-Day, but more fatal, an Arrow that flyeth in the Dark.——A Ruler, by ſuch Conduct, confeſſes himſelf unworthy of his Station, by thus ſtrengthening, or attempting to ſtrengthen himſelf: For as Nothing but ſuperior Merit, entitles one Man to be preferred to Another, he who is conſcious of innate Worth, will never be guilty of ſuch a Practice, ſince by advancing the unworthy, he moſt eſſentially degrades himſelf.

When a Miniſter of State, a Governor or other public Officer diſplaces and ſteps in the Room of his Rival, this Meanneſs of Spirit, this Corruption of Principle, is often moſt lamentably viſible, in the Diſgrace and Diſmiſſion of the former's Favorites, and the Honors and Promotions conferr'd on their own; like ſome tyrannical or uſurping Princes, who, driving others from their Thrones, judge themſelves unſafe, until they have butchered all of the former Race or Alliance, and put their own in their Places.

It is undoubtedly in all the civil Governments that do or have exiſted in the World, much as in the human Conſtitution; at their Firſt they are good and ſound, free, and well calculated:—But as in the Latter, even the beſt, there are certain Seeds of Diſeaſes which are co-exiſtent with the Body, and will one Day prove its Deſtruction; ſo in all the former, however wiſely formed, and ſtrongly founded, there will be, and ever has been, ſome Deficiency, which, with the Aſſiſtance of the Depravity and Vices of the People, and their Magiſtrates, ſooner or later, ſap and deſtroy the Syſtem.

We think, and that, undoubtedly, with Reaſon, that the Government we live under, is every Way the beſt contriv'd, and calculated of any that has ever exiſted; yet to our Grief, Experience ſhews, that we are not wholly free of the above Practice; and we find it difficult to exculpate Some, whoſe Honeſty has been made the chief Part of their Character, in recommending them to their Conſtituents, from a very great Part of this Charge. But it is highly the Intereſt and Duty of every Man, who will and dare be Free, who has the Courage to ſee, think, and judge for Himſelf; to be much on his Guard againſt every Proceeding of this Kind, and the Authors of them, with [illegible] Boldneſs, exerciſe the Birth-right of an Engliſhman, in expoſing them to the World, and with inflexible Reſolution, oppoſe, detect, and deſpiſe the Actor, though ever ſo externally dignifie[illegible] [illegible] juſtice the Subjects [illegible] Conſequence of ſuch Appointments, [illegible] than an adequate Puniſhment upon them, for giving up the deareſt Bleſſing indulg'd by Heaven—their Liberty.——But in a Government, free in its Principles, like Ours, for Us, the Subjects, tamely and indifferently to be but Spectators of ſuch pernicious and deſtructive Practices, is to conduct ſo as to deſerve a Name as hard as can be given, and to merit the Puniſhment of Heaven in the total Extinction of all Liberty.

To the Printer of the Pennſylvania Chronicle.

Both heaven and hell have their foundation within us. Heaven primarily lies in a refined temper, in an internal reconciliation to the nature of GOD, and to the rule of righteouſneſs. The guilt of conſcience, and enmity to righteouſneſs is the inward ſtate of hell.

DR. WHITCHCOTE's Moral and Religious Aphoriſms.

IT has given me great concern to obſerve the baneful influence which bad and worthleſs examples are likely to have upon ſome young men of my acquaintance, who are in poſſeſſion, and have the proſpect of affluent fortunes; and are alſo bleſt with good capacities, improved by all the advantages of education, which their anxious friends could obtain for them—How much they are in danger of diſappointing the hopes which their friends had formed of their becoming reputable and uſeful members of the community! The unbounded libertiniſm into which ſome unhappy fellow beings, have already plunged, and the difficulty, if not impoſſibility of their being ever recovered to a ſtate of cool reflection, would make any attempts towards [illegible]ing them, look romantic. One may, however, make uſe of the [illegible] their vicious and extravagant courſes, have ſometimes quickly produced, both upon the mental faculties, and the bodily [illegible] vice.—To ſee a Man in the prime of life whom we knew, a few years ago to be poſſeſſed of valuable and agreeable talents, and to have a ſtrong and vigorous ſtate of health, now, by his various frolics and exceſſes, emaciated to ſuch a degree as to be ſcarcely able to move about, and his mind ſo debauched as to be unable to ſupport a part of any rational converſation, or indeed in any at all without ſuch [illegible] and horrid imprecations, or ſuch [illegible] of the violation of human and divine laws as ſhocks common ſenſe, and diſturbs all the delicate feelings of a mind in love with goodneſs! To view ſuch a [illegible] thus worn out with wanton midnight revelling, and, perhaps, after ſquandering a plentiful eſtate, reduced to depend on others for ſubſiſtence! One would think him a conſtant leſſon of inſtruction, and caution to [illegible] and reflect [illegible] with ſome order & [illegible] & ſovent [illegible] path [illegible] region of pleaſure & imaginary good, until, by degrees, all reſtraint is loſt and they become immerſed and habituated in ſenſual luſts, and practices which lead to total perdition. How many bright and promiſing youths have there been, that if they had been told the conſequences, when they firſt deviated from that regularity of conduct which a virtuous education had helped to form; and to what an enormous height of folly and madneſs they ſhould arrived at, would have been extremely ſhocked, & ready to cry out with Hazael, "Am I a dog, that I ſhould do this great thing?" Yet, by frequenting ſuch company, as to reconcile themſelves to their wicked practices, have contrived to dreſs up or repreſent virtue and religion in ridiculous garbs and appearances, and then laughed at their own hideous figures; theſe unwary youths have gradually joined in ſuch infernal mirth, and have added their roar of applauſe, untill the voice of conſcience has been ſilenced, and they have become as bad, if not worſe than their wretched aſſociates! And, oh! who can concieve, much leſs deſcribe, the agony of Heart, the rendering of ſoul, which attends the tho'tful parents of ſuch a profligate ſon! To ſee their child, intended by the Great Creator a candidate for a glorious immortality in a future ſtate, and whom they have conſcientiouſly endeavoured to forward & aſſiſt in obtaining the neceſſary qualifications for that enduring bliſs, by teaching him to delight in the practice of every thing uſeful and beneficial to mankind here! (for ſome ſuch parents there have been)——To ſee theſe noble purpoſes wholly fruſtrated, and inſtead thereof the moſt diſtreſſed proſpect that can be formed, in the caſes of thoſe that of all mankind are the deareſt to them? To ſee a life of continual miſchief and ſcandal in hourly danger of being ſuddenly cloſed, probably without a pauſe for reflection and repentance? And above all, the apprehenſions of what muſt follow! the puniſhment due to, and allotted by infinite juſtice for the abuſe, and proſtitution to the vileſt purpoſes, of abilities, opportunities, and ſuch a multitude of other mercies as cannot be numbered.

I hope what I have hitherto ſaid has not been foreign to my principal deſign, which is to put my young readers upon their guard, and in the moſt affectionate manner to adviſe them that on their entrance into active life, they more cautiouſly and reſolutely ſhun the contagion of wicked examples, than they would the plague or the moſt venemous of all poiſons: And indeed there is no ſubject that ought to engage the attention of thoſe that are connected with the riſing youth, ſo weightily as that of taking all proper opportunities of impreſſing upon their minds the abſolute neceſſity of a continual care in this reſpect; for of all the engines of the deſtroyer, there is none more fruitful in havock and ruin, than bad company: Nor let this term be miſapprehended. It is by no means to be confined to people of the loweſt claſs, or ſuch unhappy creatures as are commonly the objects of puniſhment, by the execution of juſt and neceſſary laws for preſervation of good order and government. A man of the brighteſt underſtanding, great learning & other fine accompliſhments, if his heart is bad; if he takes delight in putting a fool's coat on theſe ſacred foundations and barriers of private and public happineſs [illegible] religion [illegible] and ſneering [illegible] their public ſpirit, and for giving any every demonſtration that goodneſs and benevolence can be ſhewn by; ſuch a man the moſt dangerous of all evil companies; becauſe his ſuperior abilities open a way for his poiſon to be more greedily received, to enter deeper, and to be more difficult of cure. Witlings and underſtrappers will ply and repeat their artful machinations to deceive, and ſink further and further into wickedneſs and miſery, and thereby do as much miſchief as they can thoſe who unguardedly liſten to their frothy and vile diſcourſe: but the man of ſenſe and ingenuity, who thus engages in the deteſtable cauſe of ſedution, is an able engineer, a ſort of maſter workmen; his fatal ſucceſs is often very great, and without doubt his reward will be dreadfully proportioned to his deſerts! Such a man, if we are obliged to do any buſineſs with him ſhould be approached with the ſame kind of fear, that the ſight of a rattleſnake or a panther would occaſion, and this would keep us from the danger of his tongue and teeth.

Philad. 1767. [Nº. 10.]

On Monday laſt arrived here from London, the Brigantine Bleſſing Succeſs, Capt. Morriſon, having on board 55 of his Majeſty's ſeven Years Paſſengers, ſent here for their INGENUITY.——As they have the Small-Pox on board, they are gone up to Baltimore, where ſhe will perform quarentine, agreable to a late Act of Aſſembly.

CHARLES-TOWN, S. Carolina, June 19.

On Tueſday laſt came on in his Majeſty's high Court of Vice-Admiralty, before the Honorable Egerton Leigh, Eſq; ſole Judge of the ſame, a cauſe of great weight and expectation, wherein James Hawker, Eſq; commander of his Majeſty's ſhip Sardoine, was proſecutor qui tam, &c. againſt the ſchooner Active, and her cargo, whereof James Gordon, of Winyaw, merchant, was the Claimant. The ſeizure of this coaſting ſchooner was made on Pretence that ſhe had no regiſter, and bond not having been given, nor cockets and ſufferences taken out at the Cuſtom-Houſe, agreable to the directions of the Act of 7th and 8th Will. III. and of the Acts of the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th of his preſent Majeſty's reign, when the Judge, after many learned arguments from the Proctors and Advocates on both ſides, and taking due time to deliberate thereon, was pleaſed to deliver his opinion, "That nothing in the ſeveral Acts above mentioned, can be conſtrued to lay any unneceſſary reſtraints upon the trade and correſpondence of his Majeſty's American ſubjects, when any goods or commodities are carried merely for the uſe or ſuſtenance of the ſaid Colonies, or, in other words, when ſuch goods are carried only from one port or place to another port or place in the ſame Colony." And, for as much as it did appear, that the veſſel in queſtion had been conſtantly employed in this province, without putting out to ſea, further than her burthen, or the coaſt made neceſſary, for the ſafety of her navigation to and from this port, and there was not the leaſt ſhadow of pretence that the ſaid veſſel had been at any time employed in an illicit trade, or that any fraud had been committed or intended, whereby his Majeſty's revenue could be diminiſhed or affected, or the fair trader undermined or prejudiced, contrary to any of the wiſe proviſions of any revenue laws, or the laws of the cuſtoms; His H[illegible] [illegible] reſtore [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] to the claimant, and decreed the claimant to pay all coſts, except ſuch as accrued to the proſecutor on his part of the proceedings, the Judge being of opinion, that, all circumſtances conſidered, there was a probable cauſe of ſeizure, and the moſt material part of the expence attending the proſecution, was occaſioned by the claimant himſelf.

At every ſitting of the court during the continuance of this cauſe, which was long and highly conteſted, the Court-Houſe was conſtantly crowded; the Judge's final ſentence and decree were received with uncommon and general ſatisfaction; it being from thence apparent, that no veſſels whatever, when employed in carrying goods from one part of the province to another, are obliged to take out ſufferances, cockets, or clearances at the Cuſtom-Houſe, nor have any veſſels ſolely employed in that trade or that never go to another colony, any occaſion for a regiſter, they being particularly excepted in the 7th and 8th of Will. III.

The ſame afternoon we had ſome violent thunder, which killed a negro, ſtruck ſome houſes, and did other damage. About two o'clock in the morning of the ſame day, the ſloop Duke of Lancaſter, Capt. David Lamb, from St. Chriſtophers for this port, then off George-town bar, was ſtruck with lightning, which ſhivered the top-maſt, and killed the Captain's ſon, a promiſing youth in his eighteenth year. Two of the ſailors were likewiſe ſtruck, and lay ſenſeleſs for 12 hours, at the expiration of which period, to the admiration of every body, they recovered and have continued well ever ſince.

Extract of a Letter from Demarara, May 18.

"The 24th of April, at 5 in the Morning we were alarmed with another very dreadful Earthquake, which continued full ten Minutes; the Motion ſeemed to be from Eaſt to Weſt, very quick and vibrating, the Weather very heavy Rain, and calm; my Family, and I, on the firſt ſhock, ran from our Bed to the Fields, where we remained for ſome Time, awfully frightned, and very wet. This is a moſt terrible Country; we have had, more or leſs Earthquakes every Week ſince the 18th of October laſt.

The largeneſs of the Stone, and dexterity with which it was extracted, was ſufficient indications of his judgment in manuel operations, and met with the cordial approbation of all the gentlemen preſent. The ſimptoms are as favourable towards a recovery, as can be expected from the ſeverity of ſuch a dangerous opperation.

July 16. Laſt Night arrived here the Brig Providence, Capt. Clark, from Southampton, with a Number of Troops on board.

NEW-PORT, July 13.

We hear from Warwick, in this Colony, that on the 14th inſtant the Dwelling-Houſe of Mr. Thomas Stafford, in that town, was entirely conſumed by Fire, with almoſt every thing in it. It was a very Good houſe, and the furniture valuable. This accident happened, as we are told, when Mr. Stafford and the Men of the Houſe were abroad, and only ſome Women and children were at home; and was occaſioned by a large Fire made for trying out ſome Tallow or Fat, which catched in the Chimney, and from thence was communicated to the Houſe.

HARTFORD, July 20.

On the eleventh Inſtant, died at Middletown, in the 53d Year of his Age, Capt. JOSEPH GLEASON; formerly a noted Sea Commander, from that Place. His Funeral was attended the next Day, by a great Concourſe of People.

On the riſing of a Thunder Storm, early laſt Friday Morning, one Samuel Darby, of Canterbury, left his Houſe, while his Family were in Bed, and went to his Brother's who liv'd in the Neighbourhood, and ſat down in the Fire-Place, where he had not been more than a Minute, when the Lightning ſtruck the Chimney, and kill'd him in an Inſtant. His Brother and Siſter, who were in Bed, in the ſame Room, were wounded by the falling of ſome of the Stones from the Chimney, but not dangerous. Mr. Darby was about 40 Years old; his leaving home ſo early cannot be accounted for, as he never before appeared to be terrified with Thunder, and the Thunder was not hard when he left his Houſe.

Extract of a Letter from Paris dated April 27.

" The pragmatic ſanction of the King of Spain againſt the Jeſuits in his States, is publicly ſold here by the hawkers in French and Spaniſh.

" In 1598 theſe Fathers were baniſhed from France, for being concerned in the aſſaſſination of King Henry the Fourth.—They were driven from England by Queen Elizabeth, in 1602; from the republic of Venice 1605; from Poland 1607; from Bohemia, Sileſia, Moravia, and Hungary 1710; where however they were again re-eſtabliſhed. They were expelled from Portugal and France, & now juſt baniſhed for ever from the monarchy of Spain."

Letters from Paris, dated April 17, ſay, " Advices received here from Madrid, thus account for the Expulſion of the Jeſuits from that kingdom:——A French Gentleman, a Captain in a Spaniſh regiment at Paraguay, met with, by accident, in a houſe of Jeſuits two manuſcripts, containing inſtructions from the General of the Society, and alſo ſome atrocious expreſſions againſt the government, &c. he ſeized them, and would not deliver them up, pretending he had them not. They cauſed him to be arreſted; but his family in France hearing of his impriſonment, ſolicited at Madrid, his deliverance; which having obtained, the Officer immediately communicated the above mentioned Papers to the Count d'Aranda, which effectuated the diſgrace of the Spaniſh governor in America, and occaſioned the government [illegible] that ſociety from all the [illegible] under the dominion of Spain."

Public prayers are putting up at Geno, for the deliverance of the fortreſs, in the iſle of Capraea, from the Corſicans.

The Prince Primate of Poland has likewiſe iſſued orders, for putting up prayers in all the churches, for the deliverance of that kingdom from the dangers that threaten it.

A certain nobleman, eminent for his generoſity, on being lately informed, that his ſteward had not punctually paid his ſervants wages, immediately called for his accounts paid him his wages, and diſcharged him his ſervice.

On Saturday laſt died, in the Royal Hoſpital, at Chelſea, Robert Cumming, being upwards of 116 years of age. He was a dragoon in the Reign of King William, and remained in the ſervice till within a few years of one hundred.

Extract of an authentic Letter which an officer of diſtinction has received from Geneva, dated April 20.

" I can with truth aſſure you, that we have here at preſent more order among us, more tranquility, and more amuſement than we ever yet had, notwithſtanding our preſent critical ſituation. Trade decays, but the repreſentatives bear this calamity with fortitude, they maintain the poor of their party; the council, and their adherents, have ſhewn an uncommon zeal on this occaſion: however, the heats on both ſides are exceſſive, and not likely to cool. It is believed the mediators will not give any deciſive judgment, & that France will not withdraw her troops for ſome time. The greateſt part of the Emigrants return to their lands; thoſe who entertained no fear of the French, laugh at them. Voltaire is writing a humorous poem on the war of Geneva.

We hear a religious order, of whom there are at preſent many in this kingdom have had two meetings, one in the North of England, the other near this metropolis, ſince it was publicly known the jeſuits were expelled the kingdom of Spain.

The departure of the two companies of the Royal regiment of Artillery for America, is poſtponed till after the review of the three regiments of foot guards, which is fixed for the 19th of next Month. All the companies of the latter are to be formed into a battalion to-morow, and exerciſed in St. James's Park, previous to their being reviewed by his Majeſty.

On Wedneſday laſt an inquiſition was taken at Newbury, before Mr. Monday, his Majeſty's coroner, on the body of a child about two years old, who fell into the river Kennet, and was drowned. Jury's Verdict, accidental Death. The body was diſcovered by a very ſingular experiment, which was as follows: After diligent ſearch had been made in the river for the child to no purpoſe, a two penny loaf with a quantity of quick-ſilver put into it, was ſet floating from the place where it was ſuppoſed it had fallen in, which ſteered its Courſe down the river upwards of half a mile, before a great number of ſpectators, when the body happening to lay on the contrary ſide of the river, the loaf ſuddenly tack'd about, and ſwam acroſs the river, and gradually ſunk near the child, when both the child and the loaf were immediately brought up, with Grablers ready for that purpoſe.

Paris, May 1. The ſpiritual Concert at the Thuilleries, was interrupted by a tragical event: An Engliſhman who was in company with ſome ladies in [illegible] of the boxes [illegible] there [illegible] officer, [illegible] that the officer repreſented to him, that it was impoſſible to hear the concert, and receiving an inſulting anſwer, made a ſign to him to walk out. As the officer was going out of the box, the Engliſhman gave him a box on the ear, in ſight of the company; upon which the officer ran him through the body, and made off. The Engliſhman was immediately put under proper care, but it is aſſured that his wound is not dangerous. He is ſaid to be a rich merchant in London. The regard paid here to foreigners, may perhaps occaſion this affair to be ſuppreſſed.

By Capt. Simmons from Liſbon we learn, that a Brig bound from N. Carolina, to Briſtol, had put in there in Diſtreſs, having loſt her main maſt, foretop-maſt, and boltſprit, in a Gale of Wind.—During the Gale the Mate and two ſeamen were waſhed overboard and drowned.

NEW-YORK, July 23.

Extract from the Votes of the House of Commons of Great-Britain, [illegible] of May, 1767.

Reſolved,

THAT it appears to this Committee, that the Houſe of Repreſentatives of his Majeſty's Province of New-York, have, in direct Diſobedience of the Legiſlature of Great-Britain, refuſed to make Proviſion for ſupplying with Neceſſaries his Majeſty's Troops in ſuch Manner as is required by an Act of Parliament made in the 5th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, entitled, " An Act to amend, and render more effectual, in his Majeſty's Dominions in America, an Act paſſed in this preſent Seſſion of Parliament, entitled, An Act for preventing Mutiny and Deſertion, and for the better Payment of the Army and their Quarters".

Reſolved, That it appears to this Committee, that an Act of Aſſembly hath been paſſed in the ſaid Province; for furniſhing the Barracks of the Cities of New-York and Albany, with Firewood and Candles, and the other neceſſaries therein mentioned, for his Majeſty's Forces, inconſiſtent with the Proviſions, and in Oppoſition to the Directions of the ſaid Act of Parliament.

Reſolved, That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That until Proviſion ſhall have been made, by the ſaid Aſſembly, for furniſhing the King's Troops with all the Neceſſaries required by [illegible] of [illegible] Aſſembly be reſpectively reſtrained and prohibited, from paſſing or aſſenting to any Act of Aſſembly, for any other Purpoſe whatſoever.

The firſt Reſolution of the Committee being read a ſecond Time;

The Houſe was moved, that an Act made in the 5th Year of his preſent Majeſty's Reign, intitled, " An Act to amend and render more effectual, in his Majeſty's Dominions in America, an Act paſſed in this preſent Seſſion of Parliament, intitled, An Act for puniſhing Mutiny and Deſertion, and for the better Payment of the Army and their Quarters," might be read.

And the ſame being read accordingly;

A Motion was made, and the Queſtion being put, that the ſaid Reſolution be recommitted; It paſſed in the Negative.

A Motion was made, and the Queſtion being put, that, for the better ſecuring the Dependency of his Majeſty's Dominions in America, upon the Crown and Parliament of Great-Britain, all Perſons within his Majeſty's ſaid Dominions, who ſhall be elected or appointed Governor, Member of the Council, General Aſſembly, Houſe of Repreſentatives, or General Court, of any Province, within the ſame; and alſo all other Perſons within the ſame; who, by any Charter, Act of Parliament, or Provincial Law, are required to take the Oath of Allegiance and Abjuration, be required to ſubſcribe a Declaration " That the Colo-
" nies and Plantations in America, are,

" and Authority to make Laws and Sta-
" tutes of ſufficient Force and Validity, to
" bind the Colonies, and People of Ame" rica, Subjects of the Crown, of Great-
" Britain, in all Caſes whatſoever."

It paſſed in the Negative.

Reſolved, Nemine Contradicente,

That an humble Addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, that he will be pleaſed to confer ſome Marks of his Royal Favor on thoſe Governors and Officers in the ſeveral Colonies, who diſtinguiſhed themſelves by their Zeal and Fidelity in ſupporting the Dignity of the Crown, the juſt Rights of Parliament, and the ſupreme Authority of Great-Britain over the Colonies, during the late Diſturbance in America.

Capt. Sinclair left Portland Road the 4th of June, in company with Capt. Jefferies, for Philadelphia, and has brought over 39 Paſſengers, among whom are Mr. Richard Sharp of this City. Merchant; Richard Stockton, Eſq; of the Province of New-Jerſey; and the Revd. Mr. Jonathan Odel, appointed to the Miſſion of Burlington; as alſo Jenkin Williams, Eſq; Attorney at Law.

Capt. Sinclair informs us, that the Mail for New-York, was diſpatched from London, for Falmouth the 23 May.

Tueſday laſt arrived here [illegible] Cotton, from Iſſaquibo, [illegible] St. Euſtatia. [illegible] Way to Coracoa, and had brought in with him Dr. Vanzolingen, late Owner, and Capt. Livingſton, Maſter of a Sloop, from this Port, bound for the Weſt-Indies, together with all his Men, whom Capt. Harriot took off of the Wreck at Sea, ſix Days after he ſailed from this Port.—By Letters from them, we have the following melancholly Account of their Diſaſter: That on the 16th of June, four Days after they left the Land, the Sloop ſprung a Leak, and, notwithſtanding all their Endeavours, ſhe ſoon filled: They had but a few Feet of the Quarter-Deck above Water; but the Veſſel happily did not ſink under them: The next Day ſeveral Planks of the Main-Deck blew up, and a pretty high Sea running, they were expoſed to the utmoſt Diſtreſs; they could not make any Sail at all, but were left to the Mercy of the Waves: After continuing in this deplorable Condition above four Days, Capt. Harriot happily appeared, and took them up: They ſaved nothing but the wet Cloaths on their Back, and as the Veſſel began to fall to Pieces juſt as they were diſcovered, it is thought, had not the kind Providence of God ſo ſeaſonably interpoſed, that in a few Hours more they would all have periſhed.

Capt. Cotton ſays the Earthquake was at Damarara and Iſſaquibo on the 20th of April laſt, while he was there; and that his Veſſel was much agitated & ſhook by it.

Yeſterday his Majeſty's Sloop Gaſpee, arrived here in a ſhort Paſſage from Halifax: She is ſaid to come expreſs from Commodore Hood, with packets for their Excellencies our Governor and General Gage; and common Fame ſays, the Contents thereof are a ſuppreſſion of our Charter, and a ſuſpenſion of the Legiſlative Power here, until we have complied with the Billetting-Act; but we apprehend this is too extraordinary a Stretch to be quite true. We hear ſeveral other Expreſſes were ſent off at the ſame Time, to the different Governments to the Weſtward of Halifax.

PHILADELPHIA, July 20.

Capt. Sawyer, from Martico, adviſes that a Brig, Capt. Montgomery, from this Place arrived off that Iſland, but was not permitted to trade, and went away for Dominica.—He further adviſes, that the Ports were to be open for Bread till the 1ſt of September, but that there was ſo much there already, it would ſcarce fetch any thing.

HARTFORD, July 27.

Laſt Saturday Evening, a little Boy, about Four Years old, Son of Mr. Robert Sloan, of this Town, being miſs'd by the Family, a Number of Neighbours, made diligent Search for him, the greater Part of the Night, but without Succeſs. In the Morning, great Numbers aſſembled, and traverſed the Fields and Woods, for Miles round the Town, while Others ſearched the River, but could find nothing of the Child; and 'tis now generally concluded that he is drowned, as he was ſeen near the River juſt before Night.

THE CONNECTICUT COURANT.

LONDON, April 30.

A few printed Copies of the following Letter having been privately tranſmitted from Paris, to ſome of the Writer's particular Friends in London, and the ſame being now the general Topic of Converſation, we thought we could not gratify our political Readers more eſſentially than by devoting a Part of our Paper to their Speculation, on ſo ſingular an Occaſion. The Letter arrived on Thurſday laſt.

A Letter from Mr. WILKES to his Grace the Duke of G***.

Paris, Dec. 12, 1766.

My LORD,

I AM not yet recovered from the aſtoniſhment into which I was thrown by your Grace's verbal meſſage, in anſwer to my Letter of the firſt of November. In a converſation I had with Colonel F—— at the Hotel d'Eſpagne, he did me the honor of aſſuring me, that I ſhould find his Brother my real and ſincere friend, extremely deſirous to concur in doing me juſtice; that he was to tell me this from your Grace, but that many intereſting particulars relative to me, could not be communicated by letter nor by the poſt. I fondly believed theſe obliging aſſurances, becauſe on a variety of occaſions, your Grace has teſtified a full [illegible] my conduct, had thanked me in the moſt flattering Terms, as the perſon moſt uſeful to the common cauſe in which we were embarked, and had ſhewn an uncommon zeal to ſerve a man who had ſuffered ſo much in the cauſe of liberty.

I returned to England with the gayeſt and moſt lively hopes. As ſoon as I arrived at London, I deſired my excellent friend Mr. Fitzherbert, to wait on your Grace, with every profeſſion of regard on my part, and the reſolution I had taken of entirely ſubmitting the mode of the application I ſhould make to the throne for my pardon. I cannot expreſs the anxiety which your Grace's anſwer gave me, 'Mr. Wilkes muſt write to Lord C——.' I then begged Mr. Fitzherbert to ſtate the reaſons which made it impoſſible for me to follow that advice from every principle of honor both public and private. I ſhewed too the impropriety of ſupplicating a fellow ſubject for mercy, the Prerogative good kings are the moſt jealous of, by far the brighteſt jewel in their crown, and the attribute by which they may the neareſt approach to the divinity.'

I afterwards wrote the letter to your Grace which I have ſeen in all the public prints. I never received any other but a verbal meſſage, 'Wilkes muſt write to Lord ——: I do nothing without Lord ——.' When I found that my pardon was to be bought with the ſacrifice of my honor, I had the virtue not to heſitate, I ſpurned at the propoſal, and left my dear native London, with a heart full of grief that my faireſt hopes were blaſted of humiliation, that I had given an eaſy faith to the promiſes of a Miniſter and Courtier, and of aſtoniſhment that a Nobleman of parts and diſcernment could continue in an infatuation from which the conduct of Lord —— had recovered every other man in the nation. He was indeed long the favorite character of our countrymen. Every tongue was wanton in his praiſe. The whole people laviſhed on him their choiceſt favors, and endeavored, by the nobleſt means, by an unbounded generoſity and confidence, to have kept him virtuous. With what anguiſh were we at laſt undeceived! How much it coſt us to give up a man who had ſo long entirely kept poſſeſſion of our hearts! How cruel was the ſtruggle! But alas! how is he changed! how fallen! from what a height fallen! his glorious ſun is ſet, I believe never to riſe again.

We long hoped, my Lord, that public virtue was the Guide of his actions, and the love of our country his ruling paſſion, but he has fully ſhewn om[illegible] virtuſque in lingua ſita eſt. Our hearts glowed with gratitude for the important ſervices he had done againſt the common enemy, and the voice of the nation hailed him our deliverer; but private ambition was all the while ſkulking behind the ſhield of the Patriot, and at length in an evil hour, made him quit the ſcene of all his glory, the only place in which he could be truly uſeful, for a retreat where he knew it was impoſſible the confidence of the people could [illegible] eaſe, bear his BLUSHING [illegible] thick upon him.

I might now, my Lord, expoſtulate with your Grace on a verbal meſſage, and of ſuch a nature, in anſwer to a letter couched in the moſt decent & reſpectful terms, coming too from a late member of the legiſlature. I might regret, that the largeſt proffers of friendſhip and real ſervice, could mean no more than two or three words of cold advice, that I ſhould apply to another. I might be tempted to think it a duty of office in the firſt L—— of the —— to have ſubmitted to his Majeſty a petition relative to the exerciſe of the nobleſt act of regal power, which any conſtitution can give any Sovereign. Surely, my Lord, my application to the firſt C—— of the ——, who is always conſidered as the firſt miniſter in England was the very proper application. As I had made no diſcovery of any new wonderful pill or drop, nor pretended to the ſecret of curing the gout or tooth-ach, I never thought of ſoliciting Lord —— for a privy ſeal. His Lordſhip's office was neither important nor reſponſible. I will not however enlarge on this, but I ſhall deſire your Grace's permiſſion fully to ſtate what has happened to me as a private Gentleman relative to Lord ——, becauſe I would not leave a doubt concerning the propriety of my conduct, in a mind naturally ſo candid, and ſo capable of judging truly, as that of the Duke of ——.

I believe that the flinty heart of Lord ——, has known the ſweets of private friendſhip, and the fine feelings of humanity as little as even Lord ——. They are both formed to be admired, not beloved. A proud, inſolent, overbearing, ambitious man is always full of the ideas of his own importance, and vainly imagines himſelf ſuperior to the equality neceſſary among real friends, in all the moments of true enjoyment. Friendſhip is too pure a pleaſure for a mind cankered with ambition, or the luſt of power and grandure. Lord —— declared in parliament the ſtrongeſt attachment to Ld. Temple, one of the greateſt characters our country could ever boaſt, and ſaid, [illegible] noble brother. He has received obligations of the firſt magnitude from that noble Brother, yet what traces of gratitude or of friendſhip was ever found in any part of his conduct? and has he not now declared the moſt open variance, and even hoſtility? I have had as warm and expreſs declarations of regard as could be made by this marble-hearted friend, and Mr. P—— had no doubt his views in even feeding me with flattery from time to time; on occaſions too, where candor and indulgence were all I could claim. He may remember the compliments he paid me on two certain poems in the year 1754. If I were to take the declarations made by himſelf and the late Mr. Potter a la Lettre, they were more charmed with thoſe verſes after the ninety ninth reading than after the firſt; ſo that from this circumſtance, as well as a few of his ſpeeches in parliament, it ſeems to be likewiſe true of the firſt Orator, or rather the firſt commedian of our [illegible] jocor ſed non contigiſſe.

I will now ſubmit it to your Grace, if there was not ſomething peculiarly baſe and perfidious in Mr. P——'s calling me a Blaſphemer of my God, for thoſe very verſes, at a time when I was abſent and dangerouſly ill from an affair of honour. The charge too he knew was falſe, for the whole ridicule of thoſe two pieces were confined to certain Myſteries, which formerly the unplaced and unpenſioned Mr. P— did not think himſelf obliged even to affect to believe.

He added another charge equally unjuſt that I was the libeller of my King, though he was ſenſible that I never wrote a ſingle line diſreſpectful to the ſacred perſon of my Sovereign, but had only attacked the deſpotiſm of his miniſters, with the ſpirit becoming a good ſubject, and zealous friend of his country. The reaſon of this perfidy was plain; he was then beginning to pay homage to the Scottiſh idol, and I was the moſt acceptable ſacrifice he could offer at the ſhrine of B——. Hiſtory ſcarcely gives ſo remarkable a change. He was a few years ago the mad, ſeditious tribune of the people, inſulting his Sovereign even in his capital city: now he is the abject crouching deputy of the proud Scot, whom he declared in parliament wanted Wiſdom, & held Principles incompatible with Freedom; a moſt rediculous character ſurely for a ſtateſman, and the ſubject of a free kingdom, but the very compoſition for a favorite. Was it poſſible for me after this, to write a ſuppliant to Lord ——? I am the firſt to pronounce myſelf moſt unworthy of a pardon, if I could have obtained it on theſe terms.

Although I declare, my Lord, that the conſcious pride of virtue makes me look down with contempt on a man, who could be guilty of this baſeneſs, who could in the lobby declare that I muſt be ſupported, and in the houſe, on the ſame day, deſert and revile me, yet I will on every occaſion do juſtice to the Miniſter. He has ſerved the public in all thoſe points where the good of the nation coincided with his own private views and in no other. I venerate the memory of the ſecretary, and I think it an honor to myſelf that I ſteadily ſupported in Parliament an adminiſtration the moſt ſucceſsful we ever had, and which carried the glory of the nation to the higheſt pitch in every part of the world. He found his country almoſt in diſpair. He raiſed the noble ſpirit of England, and ſtrained every nerve againſt our enemies. His plans when in power, were always great, though in great oppoſition to the declartions of his whole life when out of power. The invincible bravery of the Britiſh troops gave Succeſs even to the moſt raſh, the moſt extravagant, the moſt deſperate of his projects. He ſaw early the hoſtile intentions of Spain, and if the written advice had been followed, a very few weeks had then probably cloſed the laſt general war; although the merit of that advice was more the merit of his noble brother, than his own. After the omnipotence of Lord B. in 1761, had forced Mr. P. to retire from his Majeſty's councils, and the cauſe was declared by himſelf to be our conduct relative to Spain, I had the happineſs of ſetting that affair in ſo clear and advantageous a light, that he expreſſed the moſt entire ſatisfaction, and particular obligations to my friendſhip. I do not however, make this a claim of merit to Mr. P. It was my duty from the advantages of information I then had.

The conſtitution of our country has no obligations to him: He has left it with all its beauties, and all its blemiſhes: He never once appeared in earneſt about any queſtion of Liberty: He was the cauſe that in 1764, no point was gained for the public in the two great queſtions of General Warrants, and the Seizure of Papers. The curſed remains of the Court of Star-Chamber, the enormous Power of the Attorney-General, the ſole great judicial Officer of the Crown, who is durante bene placito, and not upon oath, who tramples on Grand Juries, and breaks down the firſt, the foremoſt barriers of Liberty, continued during his adminiſtration, the ſame as before. Every grievance which was not rooted out by the glorious revolution, and the latter ſtruggles of our patriots, ſtill ſubſiſt in full force, notwithſtanding the abſolute power he exerciſed ſeveral years over every department of the ſtate. But I have done with Lord——; I leave him to the poor conſolation of a place, a penſion and a peerage, for which he has ſold the confidence of a great nation. Pity ſhall find and weep over him.

I am now, my Lord, once more driven from the Romans, to the gay, the polite Athenians; but I ſhall endeavour to convince your Grace, that I am not totally loſt to my country, nor myſelf, in this ſcene of elegant diſſipation, and that I do not waſte the time in unavailing complaints of my hard fate, and the ingratitude of thoſe I have ſerved with ſucceſs; for I ſhall very ſoon beg to call the public attention to ſome points of national importance, and in the mean time I ſhall embrace this opportunity of doing myſelf juſtice againſt the calumnies which a reſtleſs faction does not ceaſe to propagate.

The affair of the general warrant, and the Hebeas Corpus, is told very unfaithfully, and almoſt every particular, relative to my being made a priſoner, and ſent to the Tower on the 30th of April, 1763, has been injuriouſly miſrepreſented in ſeveral late publications. I ſhall therefore ſtate the tranſactions of that memorable day, and I may appeal to the minutes taken at the time for the accuracy of this relation.

On my return from the city early in the morning I met at the end of Great-George-ſtreet one of the King's meſſengers. He told me he had a warrant to apprehend me, which he muſt execute immediately, and that I muſt attend him to Lord Halifax's. I deſired to ſee the warrant. He ſaid it was againſt the authors, printers, and publiſhers of the North Briton, N° 45, and that his verbal orders were to arreſt Mr. Wilkes. I told him the warrant did not reſpect me; I adviſed him to be very civil, and to uſe no violence in the ſtreet; for if he attempted force, I would put him to death in the inſtant: but if he would come quietly to my houſe, I would convince him of the illegality of the warrant, and the injuſtice of the orders he had received; he choſe to accompany me home, and then produced the general warrant. I declared that ſuch a warrant was abſolutely illegal, and void in itſelf; that it was a ridiculous warrant againſt the whole Engliſh nation; and I aſked why he would ſerve it on me rather than on the Lord Chancellor, on either of the Secretaries, on Lord Bute, or Lord Corke, my next door neighbour? The anſwer was, I am to arreſt Mr. Wilkes. In about an hour afterwards, two other meſſengers arrived and ſeveral of their aſſiſtants. They all endeavoured in vain to perſuade me to accompany them to Lord Halifax's. I had likewiſe many civil meſſages from his Lordſhip, to deſire my attendance. My only anſwer was, that I had not the honor of viſiting his Lordſhip, and this firſt application was rather rude and ungentleman-like.

While ſome of the meſſengers and their aſſiſtants were with me, Mr. Churchill came into the room; I had heard that their verbal orders were likewiſe to apprehend him, but I ſuſpected they did not know his perſon, and by my preſence of mind I had the happineſs of ſaving my friend.

As ſoon as Mr. Churchill entered the room I accoſted him; Good morrow, Mr. Thompſon: How does Mrs. Thompſon doe today? does ſhe dine in the country? Mr. Churchill thanked me, ſaid ſhe then waited for him, that he only came for a moment to aſk me how I did, and almoſt directly took his leave. He went home immediately, ſecured all his papers, and retired into the country. The meſſengers could never get intelligence where he was. The following week he came to town, and was preſent both the days of hearing at the court of common pleas.

The whole morning paſſed in meſſages between Lord Halifax and me. The buſineſs of the meſſages being ſoon publickly known, ſeveral of my friends came to me on ſo extraordinary an event. I deſired two or three of them to go to the court of common pleas, to make affidavit of my being made a priſoner in my own houſe under an illegal warrant, and to demand a Habeas Corpus. The Chief Juſtice gave orders that it ſhould iſſue immediately. A conſtable came afterwards with ſeveral aſſiſtants to meſſengers. I repeatedly inſiſted on their all leaving me, and declared, I would not ſuffer any one of them to continue in the room againſt my conſent; for I knew and would ſupport the rights of an Engliſhman in the ſanctuary of his own houſe. I was then threatned with immediate violence, and a regiment of the guards, if neceſſary. I ſoon found all reſiſtance would be in vain. The conſtable demanded my ſword, and inſiſted on my immediately attending the meſſengers to Lord H———'s. I replied, that if they were not aſſaſſins, they ſhould firſt give me their names in writing. They complied with this, and thirteen ſet their hands to the paper. I then got into my own chair, and proceeded to Lord H———'s, guarded by the meſſengers and their aſſiſtants.

NEWCASTLE, May 16.

Laſt week, whilſt three men were fiſhing at Linſtock, near Carliſle, they were ſurpriſed with hearing a noiſe as of a numbee of carts rumbling at a diſtance, or that of a cannon far off, and on looking up the river, ſaw the water flying up in a ſort of a ſtream to a great height, which terrified them, eſpecially as they found the earth tremble and ſhake under them at the ſame ſeveral ſtones were alſo thrown up out of the bed of the river. This phenomenon is well atteſted, and by the literati is tho't to have been a water ſpout, or a quantity of ſubterraneous vapour which had found vent through the bottom of the river, and occaſioned a ſlight earthquake.

Vienna, April 35. They write from Chemnitz in Hungary, that ſome perſons of Fruenmarck, in the county of Hunten, haying chaſed a wild boar for ſome time, and having followed it into the mountain, farther perhaps than they had ever penetrated before, they ſaw on the ſnow the veſtiges of a human, creature, which they followed, and which led them to a cavern, where, to their great ſurprize, they found a young girl quite naked, and to appearance from fifteen to eighteen years of age. At firſt ſhe ſet up cries, but wept not. She gazed afterwards with ſurprize at thoſe round her. They carried her to the hoſpital of Carpſen, a little royal town, in the county of Altſal, near Chemnitz, where they cloathed her, and made her take ſome nouriſhment. Hitherto ſhe has conſtantly refuſed all the dreſſed meats that has been [illegible] her, and ſhe feeds only upon raw victuals, the rind of trees, roots, and other things of the like nature, which ſhe devoured very greedily. It is difficult to conjecture how ſhe came into the foreſt where ſhe was diſcovered, and how ſhe lived here.

A woman died the 20th of laſt Month at Melda, in Norway, aged 112 years, and ſome months.

Leghorn, March 21. They write from Corſica, that the fortreſs of Capraia ſurrendered, to the malecontents on the 15th inſt. and that the garriſon were made priſoners of war.

BOSTON, July 13.

From Somerſet County, Maryland, we learn that one Francis Ange, died there about three months ago in a very advanced age. A gentleman of that province, ſome years ago having occaſion to ride in the neighbonrhood where this man lived, and hearing of his great age, had the curioſity to ſee him. In a letter to his friend and correſpondent in this town, dated Auguſt 9, 1764. he gives the following account of him, as he had it from himſelf: That he was born at Stafford upon Avon, in Warwickſhire, England; that his father's name was John, a cutler by trade, and his mother's name Eleanor; that he could remember King Charles I. being beheaded, as he was then a pretty big boy; that he came into this country in a ſhip from Parkgate, called the Great Bengal, and ſerved his time with one Nicholas Demar on Rappahannock. The gentleman ſays that at that time he was not leſs than 130 years of age had ſcarce a wrinkle in his face, had thick, black hair, with a few grey hairs interſperſed, and that his wife, who was then about 80, had a ſon by him not above 27 years of age.

Extract of a Letter from London, dated May 22.

"Incloſed I ſend you a Copy of the Merchants Report on the Subject of Paper Money, obtained after many Meetings and delivered to the Miniſtry: But there are ſtill great Difficulties, the B—d of T—de being extremely averſe to the Repeal of the Act, and yet I hope we ſhall get over all, the Miniſtry being at length prevailed on to eſpouſe the Meaſures, that the Colonies may have ſomething to give on a Requiſition from the Crown, and that the Duties may increaſe by the increaſe of Commerce.—But it is ſtrongly reported that the preſent Miniſtry will be ſoon changed; if ſo, all our Labour will be rendered fruitleſs."

The Merchants of London, trading to the Continent of America, are of Opinion;

"That the moſt ſpeedy and effectual Relief to the Colonies, in reſpect to the preſent diſtreſſed State of their Commerce, for Want of a Medium of Trade, will be the Repeal of an Act of Parliament reſpecting Bills of Credit in America, paſſed in the 4th Year of his preſent Majeſty; and that ſuch Repeal cannot hurt the Britiſh Merchants, provided a Clauſe be inſerted in the Act for ſaid Repeal, declaring Paper Bills of Credit ſhall not be a legal Tender in Payment of any Sterling Debts or Contracts whatſoever, already made or to be made by or with or in the Name and Behalf of any Perſon reſiding in the Kingdom of Great-Britain."

NEW-YORK, July 30.

On Tueſday the 21ſt Inſtant, a Veſſel going out from Cow Harbour, Long-Iſland, was overſet about three Miles from the Place of her Departure; by which Accident the two Boatmen, Jonas Weeks, and John Abbot, were both drowned; the Body of Jonas Weeks was driven on Shore the next Day, at Loyd's Neck, as alſo the Veſſel and two Women, Paſſengers, who ſaved themſelves by holding faſt to the Parts above Water. One of the Women was once waſh'd off from the Veſſel,—but by what Means ſhe got hold again, we have not yet learnt.

A Diſſolution of Parliament, is expected ſoon, and that a new one will be called—a Plan ſaid to be under Conſideration for Taxing America.—The King of Spain and it is ſaid will communicate to the Pope only his Reaſons for baniſhing the Jeſuits.—But the French Miniſter writes from Madrid, that the King eſcaped Aſſaſſination only by retiring from his Capital three Days before the Plot was executed.—The Baniſhment of the Jeſuits has occaſioned 2 Meetings one in England, the other in Scotland, of a religious Order, of whom there are great Numbers in Great-Britain Bets and Wagers run very high, on the Event of the great cauſe relating to the Douglas Eſtate and Title, it is ſaid no leſs than £. 100,000 are betted on in Scotland only.—Great Bets likewiſe—Whether the Corſicans will be free Men or ſlaves, by the End of the Year—The like Betts lately ran high with Regard to America——But it ſeems to be almoſt over with poor America!—The knowing Ones offered 82 to one againſt her.

The Eaſt-India Affairs, which were to have come before the Parliament on the 27th, are put off to the firſt of June, and 'twas thought Matters would be amicably adjuſted. 'Twas thought the Parliament would riſe about the middle of June.——Some important Affairs in the Eaſt-Indies ſince Lord Clive's arrival there were laid before the Houſe.

[The Account publiſhed in the Philadelphia Chronicle of the late Reſolutions of Parliament reſpecting America, has this Addition, to what was publiſhed in our laſt, viz.]

"Then the ſaid (that is the firſt) was agreed to by the Houſe;"

"The ſubſequent Reſolutions of the Committee, being read a ſecond Time, were agreed to by the Houſe:"

"Ordered, that a Bill be brought in upon the laſt of the ſaid Reſolutions, and that Mr. Fuller, Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Thomas Townſend, junr. The 17th and 46th Regiments are now embarked on board the Tranſports deſtined for England; and the 28th embarks at Amboy: They have been more than 10 Years in America; and the 17th carries home no more than 60 Men, out of 750, that came to America in it. The Veſſels fell down Yeſterday.

BOSTON, July 30.

Tueſday laſt we had very ſevere Lightning and Thunder, accompanied with Rain, and followed by Guſts of Wind: The Clouds were very low, and gathered more over this Town than had been known for many Years paſt: The Chimney of a Houſe in Pleaſant Street was ſtruck, and a Young Woman ſitting near the Corner, was ſtunned, and ſlightly hurt by the Falling of ſome of the Bricks, but ſoon recovered. A Tree was alſo ſtruck at the Weſt Part of the Town. It is ſaid the great Utility of the electrical Points and Conductors, eſpecially thoſe on the Steeples of the Meeting-Houſes, was very apparent at this Time, theſe being obſerved to attract and conduct into the Earth the electrical Fire with which the Clouds were ſo highly charged; and it is not doubted, were the Means, under Divine Providence, of preſerving the Town from great Damage.

About Two o'Clock the ſame Afternoon, the Dwelling-Houſe of Mr. John Hager was ſtruck, and very much ſhattered with the Lightning: Four Children of the Family (the only Perſons in the Houſe) were all ſtruck down, two of them ſtunned and much burnt, but like to do well.

The Rev. and learned Dr. John Witherſpoon, one of the miniſters of Paiſley, who was in the latter end of the year 1766 unanimouſley elected Preſident of the College of New-Jerſey, in America, has lately wrote a letter to the Governors of the ſaid College declining, to accept of that high and important truſt.

We learn from Edinburgh, that the fine carpet, which was ſome time ago ordered to be manufactured at Pittemweem, in Fifeſhire, for her royal highneſs the Princes Dowager of Wales, is now finiſhed, & laſt week was ſhewn to a vaſt number of people at the cuſtom-houſe, it is eſteemed by the beſt judges to rival, if not excel, the manufacture of Turkey and Perſia, the figures are finely fancied; the colour exquiſite; and the whole ſo highly finiſhed as to excite univerſal admiration. It is about twenty five feet long, by ſeventeen in breadth.———The drawing of the pattern alone, by which it was worked, it is ſaid coſt fifty pounds, and the carpet itſelf we are told is vallued at three hundred pounds ſterling. On Monday laſt it was ſent off by the waggon for London.

Remainder of the Letter (begun in our laſt) from Mr. WILKES, to his Grace the Duke of GRAFTON.

I Was conducted into a great apartment fronting the park, where Lord H—— and Lord E——— the two S———— of S————, were ſitting at a table covered with paper, pens and ink. The Under Secretaries ſtood near their Lordſhips. Mr. Lovel Stanhope, the Law Clerk, and Mr. Philip Carteret Webb, the Solicitor of the Treaſury, were the only perſons beſides who attended. Lord E———received me with a ſupercilious, inſolent air; Lord H— with great politeneſs. I was deſired to take the chair near their Lordſhips, which I did. Lord H——— then began, "That he was really concerned that he had been neceſſitated to proceed in that manner againſt me; that it was exceedingly to be regretted that a gentleman of my rank and abilities could engage againſt his King, and his Majeſty's Government." I replied, "That his Lordſhip could not be more miſtaken, for the King had not a ſubject more zealouſly attached to his perſon and government then myſelf; that I had all my life been a warm friend of the Houſe of Brunſwick, and the Proteſtant ſucceſſion; that while I made the trueſt profeſſions of duty to the King, I was equally free to declare in the ſame moment, that I believed no prince had ever the misfortune of being ſerved by ſuch ig[illegible], of which my being there was a freſh glaring proof, for I was brought before their Lordſhips by force, under a General Warrant, which named no body, in violation of the laws of my country, and of the privileges of parliament: that I begged both their Lordſhips to remember my preſent declaration, that on the very firſt day of the enſuing ſeſſion of parliament, I would ſtand up in my place, and impeach them for the outrage they had committed on my perſon againſt the liberties of the people." Lord H——— anſwered, "That nothing had been done but by the advice of the beſt Lawyers, and that it was now his duty to examine me." He had in his hand a long liſt of queſtions, regularly numbered. He began, "Mr. Wilkes, do you know Mr. Kearſly? When did you ſee him? &c. &c." I replied, "That I ſuſpected there was a vain hope my anſwer would tend rather to what his Lordſhip wiſhed to know; that he ſeemed to be loſt in a dark and intricate path, & really wanted much light to guide him through it; but that I could aſſure his Lordſhip not a ſingle ray ſhould come from me." Lord H—— returned to the charge; "Mr. Wilkes, do you know Mr. Kearſly? &c. &c." I ſaid, "That this was a curioſity on his Lordſhip's part, which, however laudable in the Secretary, I did not find myſelf diſpoſed to gratify; and that at the end of my examination, all the queries of paper on their Lordſhips table ſhould be as milk-white as at the beginning." Lord H-- then deſired to remind me of my being their priſoner, and of their right to examine me. I anſwered, "That I ſhould imagine their Lordſhips time was too precious to be trifled away in that manner; that they might have ſeen before, I would never ſay one word they deſired to know;" and I added, "Indeed, my Lords, I am not made of ſuch flight, flimſy ſtuff." Then, turning to the Lord E———, I ſaid, "Could you employ tortures, I would never utter a word unbecoming my honour, or affecting the ſacred confidence of my friend. God has given me firmneſs and fidelity. You trifle away your time moſt egregiouſly, my Lords." Lord H——— then adviſed me to weigh well the conſequences of my conduct, and the advantages to myſelf of a generous, frank confeſſion. I lamented the proſtitution of the word GENEROUS to what I ſhould conſider as an act of the utmoſt treachery, cowardice, and wickedneſs. His Lordſhip then aſked me, "If I choſe to be a priſoner in my own houſe, at the Tower, or in Newgate, for he was diſpoſed to oblige me?" I gave his Lordſhip my thanks, but I deſired to remark, "That I never received an obligation but from a friend; that I demanded juſtice, and my immediate liberty, as an Engliſhman, who had not offended the laws of his country; that as to the reſt, it was beneath my attention; the odious idea of reſtraint was the ſame odious idea every where; that I would go where I pleaſed; and if I was reſtrained by a ſuperior force, I muſt yield to the violence, but would never give colour to it by a ſhameful compromiſe; that every thing was [illegible] in compariſon of my honour and liberty; that I made my appeal to the laws, and had already by my friends applied to the court of Common Pleas for the Habeas Corpus, which the chief Juſtice had actually ordered to be iſſued; and that I hoped to own my diſcharge ſolely to my innocence and to the vigour of the law in a free country." Lord H——— then told me, "That I ſhould be ſent to the Tower, where I ſhould be treated in a manner ſuitable to my rank, and that he hoped the meſſengers had behaved well to me." I acknowledged that they had behaved with humanity, and even civility to me, notwithſtanding the ruffian orders given them by his Lordſhips colleague. I then again turned to Lord——— and ſaid, "Your Lordſhip's verbal orders were to drag me out of my bed at midnight. The firſt man who had entered my bedchamber by force, I ſhould have laid dead on the ſpot, probably I ſhould have fallen in the ſkirmiſh with the others. I thank God, not your Lordſhip, that ſuch a ſcene of Blood has been avoided. Your Lordſhip is very ready to iſſue orders, which you have neither courage to ſign, nor I believe to juſtify." No reply was made to this. The converſation dropped. Lord H———retired into another apartment. Lord———continued ſullen and ſilent about a quarter of an hour. I then made a few remarks on ſome capital pictures which were in the room, and his Lordſhip left me alone.

I was afterwards conducted into another apartment, I found there ſeveral of my friends in argument with the moſt infamous of all the tools of that adminiſtration, Mr.———He confirmed to me, that I was to be carried to the Tower, and wiſhed to know if I had any favours to aſk? I replied that I was uſed to confer, not to receive favours; that I was ſuperior to the receiving any from his maſters; [illegible] would ſay to him was if my valet de chambre was allowed to attend me in the Tower, I ſhould be [illegible] and have a clean ſhirt; if he was not, I ſhould have a long beard and dirty linnen. [illegible] ſaid, "That orders ſhould be given for his admiſſion at the Tower." I complained of the ſhameful evaſion of the Habeas Corpus, in ſending me to the [illegible], though the orders of the Chief [illegible] were known. Mr.———made no [illegible]. He came to viſit me in the Tower [illegible] ginning of my impriſonment when I had not the permiſſion to ſee any friend. I deſired him almoſt at his firſt entrance to take his leave, for if I was not allowed to ſee thoſe I loved, I would not ſee thoſe I deſpiſed.

While I continued in the tower, I was preſſed to offer bail in order to gain my liberty, and two of the firſt nobility deſired to be my ſecurities in the ſum of 100,000l. each. I was exceedingly grateful for the offer, but would not accept it. I obſerved that neither my health nor my ſpirits were affected; that I would by great temperance and abſtinence endeavour to compenſate the want of air and exerciſe; but if my health [illegible], [illegible] then accept ſuch generous offers; for I hoped to live, that ſo noble a cauſe might be brought to a glorious iſſue for the liberties of my country. From the beginning of this arduous buſineſs, I would not on any occaſion give bail, by which I never involved any friend, and remained the perfect maſter of my own conduct.

The laſt calumny, my Lord, which I ſhall diſprove, reſpects the actions at law againſt Lord H———, It is ſaid that I have neglected, or purpoſely diſcontinued them, ſince my excile. The imputation is totally groundleſs. I was ſo ill at Paris in the beginning of the year 1764, that it was impoſſible for me then to return to England alive, but I gave the moſt expreſs orders that the law proceedings ſhould be carried on with vigour, and in fact there was not a moments delay. When my wound began to heal in the ſpring, I was diſſuaded by all my friends from returning to a country where the ſame Adminiſtration, which had illegally ſeized my perſon, plundered my houſe and corrupted the fidelity of my ſervants, were ſtill in full power.———I yielded to theſe reaſons becauſe propter veſtrum ſcelus, nihil mihi intra meos parietes tutum, nihil inſidiis vacuum viderem.——Lord——for near two years availed himſelf of every advantage which privilege and the chicane of the law could furniſh. He never entered any appearance to a court of Juſtice, and the common Pleas had, as far as they could, puniſhed ſuch an open contempt, ſuch a daring proof that Admiſtration would not ſubmit to the law of the land, and had endeavoured to compel his Lordſhip to appear. Towards the end of 1764, I was outlawed. The proceedings continued againſt his Lordſhip till that hour. He then appeared, and his ſingle plea was, that as an outlaw, I could not hold any action, No other defence was made againſt the heinous charge of having in my perſon violated the rights of the people.

I felt this, my Lord, as the moſt cruel ſtroke which fortune had given me. Juſtice had at length overtaken many of the inferior criminals, but my outlawry prevented my puniſhing the great, the capital offender, when, after all his ſubterfuges, he was almoſt within my reach. I pleaſe myſelf, however, with the reflection that no Miniſter has ſince dared to iſſue a General Warrant, nor to ſign an order for the Seizure of Papers. In the one the perſonal liberty of every ſubject is immediately concerned. On the other may depend not only his own ſafety and property, but what will come ſtill more near to a man of honor, the ſecurity, the happineſs of thoſe with whom he is moſt intimately connected, their fortunes, their future views, perhaps ſecrets, the diſcovery of which would drive the coldeſt Stoic to deſpair, their very exiſtance poſſibly, all that is dear and ſacred in friendſhip and in love. I was the laſt oppreſſed, but I was the firſt man who had the courage to carry through a juſt reſiſtance to the acts of deſpotiſm. Now the opinions of our ſovereign courts of juſtice are known and eſtabliſhed. I rejoice that ſeveral others, who have ſuffered before me, have ſince made their appeal to the laws, and obtained redreſs. I hope the iron rod of miniſterial oppreſſion is at length broken, and that I am the laſt victim of violence and cruelty. I ſhall not then regret all the ſacrifices I have made, and my mind ſhall feaſt itſelf with the recollection in the unjuſt exile I am doomed to ſuffer from my friends & my native land.

I will now, my Lord, only add, however unfaſhionable ſuch a declaration may be, that conſiſtency ſhall never depart from my character; that to the laſt moment I will preſerve the ſame fixed and unconquerable hatred to the enemies of freedom and the conſtitution of our happy iſland; the ſame warm attachment to the friends and the cauſe of liberty; that I keep a ſteady and a longing eye on England: that my endeavours for the good and ſervice of my country, by every method left me, ſhall have a period only with my life; and that although I do not mean to lay any future claim to your Grace's favour, I will take care to ſecure your eſteem, I am, my Lord,

Your Grace's moſt obedient,
and very humble ſervant,
JOHN WILKES.

BOSTON, July 30.

We hear from Briſtol in the Colony of Rhode-Iſland, That a Tiger was ſeen in that Town, a few Days ago, which killed ſeveral Dogs.

"Grafton, July 20. Saturday laſt the Wife of Mr. Thomas Axtell, of this Town, was ſafely delivered of three living Sons, weighing in all 17 pounds 9 ounces.—Mr. Axtel is in his 56th Year, and his Wife in her 40th.—So ſignal an increaſe by a ſecond Wife to one that has brought up a Family, and been ſome Years a Grandſather, and under decline in more reſpects than one, has drawn in the Bounty of his Neighbours; and is recommended to the Admiration and Generoſity of all whoſe Hearts may be open'd to give ſome Teſtimonal thereof.

TueſdayMorning laſt Mr. Samuel Coleſworthy, Shipwright, fell from a Stage at the North Part of the Town, and his Back coming acroſs a Piece of Timber, bruis'd him in ſuch a Manner that he died in the Evening of the ſame Day.

Annapolis, in Maryland, July 9.

Laſt Week arrived here the Ship Albion, Capt. Spencer from Briſtol, with upwards of One Hundred of his Majeſty's Seven Years Paſſengers. By Means of a Ventilator on board, tis ſaid they are very heathy. The Ship has ſince proceeded for Cheſter River.

The deplorable Havock lately made in the Family, of a Widow Lady on the Eaſtern Shore by that horrid contagious Diſtemper commonly called the Gaol-fever, ought to give freſh Warning to the Inhabitants of this Province how they admit this baneful Malady into their Families. A caſual Viſit, it ſeems, from one of the Felons, ſometime ſince imported in a Convict Ship, communicated the Diſtemper to Negroes. It is confidently reported that that near thirty People in this Family, (among whom the worthy Lady herſelf was one) fell Victims to the Fury of this malignant raving Peſtilence.—It's Progreſs was rapid, and its Virulence too powerful for all the Skill and Aſſiduity of our ableſt Phyſicians; nor did its Rage intermit, 'til by a Waſte of Lives, it wanted Subjects to prey upon.—What aggravated the afflicting Circumſtances of this unhappy Family, was a total Suſpenſion of thoſe tender Offices which this much reſpected Lady might have expected from a humane Neighbourhood. They could only behold, with heart-felt Sympathy, a Diſtreſs which they could not relieve without the utmoſt Hazard of their own Lives. The Caſe of Mr. Howard, near Annapolis, who loſt his own Life, and many of his Family, is a recent and notorious Inſtance of the Malignity of this Diſtemper.—Moved by a tender Concern for the Inhabitants, who have too often felt the direful Effects of this wide-waſting Contagion, our Aſſembly, at their laſt Meeting, enacted a Quarantine Law, which will probobly give ſome Check [illegible] Introduction, and ſave the Lives of Thouſands.

Edinburgh, May 16. Tueſday Evening arrived in Town from London the Rev'd Meſſrs Nathaniel Whittaker & Sampſon Occom, Miniſters of the Goſpel in New-England. The Purpoſe of theſe Gentlemen's arrival is, to ſolicit Contributions for the Indian Charity School under the Care of the Rev. Mr. Wheelock, which is founded for the education of Indian Youth, to fit them for being Miſſionaries among their civilized Countrymen. The Rev. Mr. Occum is of the Mohegan Tribe, and is the firſt Scholar educated by Mr. Wheelock. After being employed as a Schoolmaſter in the Wilderneſs, he was ordained a Miniſter of the Goſpel by Suffolk Preſbytery on Long Iſland, where his Influence among the Indians is very conſiderable. He is the firſt Indian Preacher that ever ſet Foot in Britain.

The Rev. Mr. Whitefield is expected from London To morrow.

It is ſaid a Veſſel is arrived at Caſco Bay from England, and has bro't Prints to the 15th of June:—But we hear no further.

BOSTON, Auguſt 6.

We hear that Captain Springer, who about [illegible] Years ago failed from hence in a Sloop for Virginia, but meeting with bad Weather his Sails and Rigging were torn to Pieces, and his veſſel receiving ſo much other Damage that for a long Time ſhe was left at the Mercy of the Seas, and being drove a conſiderable Way to the Eaſtward in great Diſtreſs, he luckily met with a French Ship outward bound to the Eaſt Indies, who took him, with his People on board, from whence he returned to Caſco Bay a few Days ſince in a veſſel arrived there from Europe ——He had been ſo long miſſing, and given over for loſt, that it is ſaid his Wife has lately entered into Wedlock with another Perſon

NEW-YORK, Auguſt 6.

Extract of a Letter from Penſacola June 7.

About the End of laſt Month arrived here the Levant Frigate, Capt. Bazil Keith, to relieve Captain Fitzherbert of the Adventurer. The 5th inſt. ſailed from hence, the Adventurer, Capt. Fitzherbert, and the Cygnet, Capt Durell, (on-board the latter was Brigadier Taylor and his Lady) they both propoſed calling at the Havannah Some Days ago arrived a Brig from London, with Goods for the Spaniards; ſhe brings Advice that one Captain Elliot of the Navy, was appointed Governor of this Province; one of the Family of Elliot in Cornwall ——The Reaſon that no Spaniards have been here this long Time, is owing to Don Anthony Deulloa, the Spaniſh Governor of New-Orleans, having informed the Governors of Vera Cruz, Campeachy, and the Havannah, the Names of the Veſſels that came here, their Captain's Names, and the Cargoes brought to, and carried from this Place; this will occaſion their being ſtrictly looked after.—The arbitrary and illegal Proceedings of the Lieut. Governor, in a ſhort Time would have ruin'd this infant Colony; in moſt Caſes he endeavours to oblige the Chief Juſtice by Threats, and even Force, to give Judgment according as he orders; when he can't effect his Purpoſes in that Manner, he iſſues Injunctions by his orderly Serjeants, and brings up Cauſes into his Court of Chancery, where he gives away the Property of thoſe he diſlikes, without Juſtice or Jury. He has diſſolved the Aſſembly about ten Days ago.

Laſt Wedneſday Evening, Capt. Laſh, in a Sloop arrived here in 14 Days from St. Thomas, by whom we have poſitive Advice, that the Iſlands of St. Thomas and St. Johns, had both been declared Free Ports, by his Daniſh Majeſty open to all Veſſels and Comodities of what Nation or Kind ſoever, without any Reſtrictions or Reſervations, ſave the Common Fees and Duties heretofore uſual in thoſe Ports.

HARTFORD, Auguſt 10.

Laſt Week a Perſon was committed to the Goal [illegible] Town, on Suſpicion of counterfeiting [illegible]ill'd Dollars; and two other Perſons [illegible]n up on the like Suſpicion procured Bonds, for their Appearance at Court; and another Perſon has been committed to Springfield Goal, on the ſame Account. So that if thoſe Money Makers, Money could procure a Currency that neceſſary Article, which is now ſo much wanted among us, would be very plenty. But many of their Dollars are made in ſo bungling a Manner, that any Perſon who has ever ſeen a Dollar, may very eaſily diſcover the Cheat.

Laſt Tueſday two tranſient Perſons were taken up at Windſor, for committing each of them, two Thefts, and received Sixteen Laſhes on each of their Backs; Eight for each Offence. The next Day they were committed to the Goal in this Town, to take their Trials at the Superior Court next Month, for breaking open and robbing a Houſe at Windſor.

The ſame Day, a Foot Traveller, was ſet in the Stocks for his Inſolence to a Magiſtrate in this Town.

On the 10th Ult a Girl at Ripton, in Stratford, about Fifteen years old, was found hanging in her Chamber.

We hear from Eaſt-Haddam, that laſt Thurſday Morning, a young Man, named Smith, who the preceeding Evening had left a Tavern, was found dead by a Log; his Head was very much bruis'd. The Jury's Verdict was, That his Death was occaſioned by a Fall over the Log.

Simſbury, July 30, 1767.

This Day paſſed through this Town, on Foot, one Mr. Samuel Wright, of Saliſbury, on his Return from Springfield, his native Place; where he has now been to viſit a Brother of his, aged 92, and a Siſter 95 Years, both of whom he informs, are both well in Health, and retain their Memory and Reaſon, and perform Buſineſs. The Woman ſpins a Run in a Day, not of Neceſſity, but of Choice. This Mr. Wright ſays, he is now in the 89th Year of his Age. He came from Saliſbury, the beginning of this Month, and arrived here in two Days, which (as he came) is more than 40 Miles, and would have arrived at Springfield the third Day, but was detained at Suffield, one Night, by an old Acquaintance. He appears rational, cheerful, and walks ſprightly and as upright as many Men of but fifty Years of Age.

N. B. Notwithſtanding former Advertiſements, that no Letters would be delivered, without the Poſtage; yet People ſend their Children, and Servants; Some are deſerving to be truſted, but Others, when ſued, to liquidate their ſmall Accounts, in the Law, ſuch may depend, that no Credit can further, be given them.

TO THE PRINTER.

SIR,

If you think the following not unfit to have a Place in your Paper, it is preſented to the Public, in Hopes that ſome friendly and able Hand will be induced to oblige the Public, with ſomething of the Kind, much better calculated to anſwer the End propoſed, by

Your Humble Servant,
A WELL-WISHER TO HIS COUNTRY.

THO' I am of no great Conſequence in the World, and act but in a ſmall Circle; yet I cannot but obſerve, a little, how Things go on. If I ſhould judge only by what appears of late in ſome public Papers, I ſhould think the whole Attention of the Country was like to be ſwallowed up in little perſonal, party Squabbles and Litigations, of which, I muſt hope, there are yet many that have no Reliſh. Is it not poſſible, that inſtead of thoſe narrow Views, ſomething ſhould be produced of a more favourable Aſpect, upon the Intereſt of Mankind? No-Body needs to be told, that we are the pooreſt in this Colony for the Want of Money. But many perhaps, need to be told, or ſome Way put upon conſidering, that we are like to remain ſo, unleſs ſome Expedient can be come into, to prevent it.

Mankind are very apt, in ſome Reſpects, to have their Ups and Downs.—Not long ſince, the Cry of the whole Country was, Home Manufactures, live more independent, make your own Cloathing, &c. But now Trade begins to flouriſh again; the Price of Goods is fallen, and the Buſtle about home Manufactures is very much ſubſided: And were it not that moſt the Traders come very much into the Method of ſelling for ready Pay, Things would ſoon revert to the old Channel, and many of us ſhould become Bankrupts again. However there are other Things that want regulating yet.

There are two Things which cannot fail to keep a Country poor, viz. Importations being as great or greater than Exportations, and our own Produce held too high for foreign Market. The former of theſe will naturally and even neceſſarily exhauſt our Caſh; and the latter will prevent its coming in; ſo that not only Induſtry, but Prudence and Moderation, are neceſſary in Order to our having a Medium of Trade: Without Induſtry we can have nothing to procure it. If we run into Superfluity and Exceſs, or do not uſe Moderation in the Conſumption of foreign Goods, our Caſh is ſoon gone, and we are reduced: and if we, imprudently hold up the Effects of our Induſtry, at ſuch a Price as they will not command in foreign Markets, either we muſt keep them, or the Trader who receives them of us muſt ſink; either of which will prevent a Medium.

It is obſerveable, that the Price of Proviſions is lower than heretofore, as well as of foreign Goods; Whether they are yet reduced to a proper Standard is beſt known to thoſe who deal in the marcantile Way. I am not for having Agriculture put under any unreaſonable Diſcouragements; for it is a clear Caſe, that the Life, Honor, and Riches of this Colony (if ever we have any) muſt take their Riſe in the Field. And the Farmer already labours under Diſadvantages, for attempting any great Things, at Improvement of his Lands, beyond what he is able to compaſs by his own domeſtic Strength, thro' the Scarcity and Dearneſs of Labourers in the Field; Which latter is a Diſpoſition very obſerveable even in moſt Sorts of Labourers, both Male and Fe-

Charleſtown, S. Carolina, July [illegible]

This day arrived here from Weſt Florida, his Majeſty's ſhip Cygnet commanded by Philip Durell Eſq; in which came paſſengers Brigadier General Taylor and his lady whom Captain Durell landed at St. Auguſtine. The Cygnet in her way from Penſacola, went to the Havana, and, when abreaſt to the Moro was hailed and ordered to bring to, Captain Durell anſwered that he would do ſo as ſoon as the ſhip was in ſafety, on which ſeveral guns were fired at him from the Moro and juſt as the anchor was gone a twenty four pound ball ſtruck the Cygnet about ſix inches above the water, went through her larboard ſide and ſtuck in the ſtarboard. Captain Durell was not permitted to go on ſhore, but wrote to the governour complaining of the inſult offered to the Britiſh flag, and had for anſwer, that they had the King's orders not to ſuffer any ſhip to enter that port. We are told ſeveral other letters paſt. A few days after, the Adventure frigate, Captain Fitzherbert came to the Havana, with diſpatches from Admiral Parry to the Spaniſh governour, and met with much the ſame treatment. The Spaniards uſed the moſt ſcurrilous, abuſive language to both ſhips, calling the people Engliſh Dogs, &c. Theſe are all the particulars of this extraordinary affair we have as yet been able to procure. There is no doubt but that proper notice will be taken of ſuch daring inſults, and the Dons be made to know themſelves, and not forget who were their conquerors.

His Majeſty's ſhip Eſcorte is ſailed from New-Providence for Great Britain. We hear the Bahamian have diſcovered the wrecks of ſome of the Spaniſh regiſter ſhips loſt in St. Bernard's Bay, as formerly mentioned, and have got a conſiderable treaſure out of them.

Extract of a Letter from New-Providence, dated June 27, 1767.

"—By a veſſel in three days from Porto-Prince, in Cuba, we are aſſured that all the Jeſuits in that iſland had been ſeized a few days before he ſailed, together with all their papers and effects, to a very conſiderable amount, and carried to the Havana, in order to be ſent from thence to Old Spain. They had not the leaſt notice or apprehenſion of this extraordinary revolution, till they ſaw themſelves ſurrounded in their convents, &c. by a number of ſoldiers, and their perſons and properties conveyed under guard, to the principal port in the iſland. This is all the news we have of any importance——"

Extract of a Letter from Penſacola, dated June 10.

"An account is come from the Chickeſaw country, that five traders have been lately found murdered on the Cherokee river, and thoſe Indians ſay the murder was committed by ſome of the northern tribes who have it ſeems, found their way thus far ſouth. The Creeks lately burnt alive a Choctaw headman, whom they had taken priſoner, this has deſtroyed every appearance of a pacification taking place, which before that, the Choctaws ſeemed inclinable to."

LONDON, May 1.

Friday laſt as Mr. B—— near Temple-Bar, was coming through Blackwall, a great number of perſons followed him, expreſſing their great ſurprize at the magnitude of his perſon; ſome were of opinion he was one of the Patagonians ſo much talked of, but being at laſt prevailed on to take a glaſs of punch by ſix honeſt tars, was found to be a hatter by trade, when each beſpoke a hat, deſiring it to be cocked after his own faſhion, but all alike, and that they ſhould call it the Patagonian cock, upon the ſtrength of which he came to town, and had a high regale with his friends on his relating the ſtory.

LONDON, May 1.

They write from Midhurſt in Suſſex, that on Friday laſt the remains of the late Lord Viſcount Montague were met on the road by a numerous train of his Lordſhip's tenants, tradeſmen and others, and attended to Cowdry, his Lordſhip's late ſeat; where the corpſe lay in ſtate that night, & the next day was interr'd with great funeral ſolemnity in the cloiſter of his own pariſh church of Eaſtbourne. According to his particular orders, his pall was ſupported by 12 of the pooreſt old men that could be picked out of his neighbourhood, who had a ſtrong ſuit of cloaths and ten guineas each man. Vaſt was the concourſe of people who flocked together upon this mournful occaſion to teſtify their ſorrow, ſome for the loſs of an hoſpitable neighbour, ſome of an eaſy and kind landlord, and ſome of an indulgent maſter; but the moſt affecting ſcene of all was the crowds of poor who aſſembled from all quarters to pay the tributary tear of gratitude to their deceaſed benefactor, whoſe liberality they had experienced for a long ſeries of years, but more eſpecially in theſe trying times of ſcarcity and diſtreſs: a ſight ſo woeful has not been beheld in that country ſince the death of the late Duke of Richmond; but a ray of hope breaks through the gloom, that this loſs will be repaired by his Lordſhip's ſon & ſucceſſor, who it is not doubted will equal his deceaſed Lord and Father in charity, generoſity and goodneſs.

BOSTON, Auguſt 13.

Laſt Thurſday ſe'nnight Capt. Hyſlop arrived at Caſco-Bay from London, which Place he left about the 7th of June, by whom we hear, that the Board of Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms was actually eſtabliſhed, to conſiſt of ſeven, and a ſalary of 500 l. each; and the Secretary and the Receiver-General of the Board 300l. each;—That Lieut. Governor Hutchinſon and Mr. Secretary Oliver, would have been of the Board, but are provided for another Way, by Salaries to be paid them out of the Revenues raiſed on Duties on ſeveral Articles of Commerce, by which they, with all the Officers of the Crown, will be [illegible] independent of the People:—That the Chief Juſtice of the Superior Court was to have 500l. and the Secretary 300l. per. Ann.—That the Duty of 1s. paid on Tea in England was taken off and 3d. laid on in America.——That the Rates on Lemmons, Wine, Fruit, &c. and alſo upon ſheet, ground and flint Glaſs, Lead, Colours, Paper, &c. were not yet fixed, but would be at the meeting of the Parliament next after their Adjournment for Whitſuntide Holidays; and that the Debenture on China Ware exported would be but one half—That nothing would be attempted by way of Internal Taxation of the Colonies:—And that the Addreſs of the Houſe of Commons to the King in behalf of the Gentlemen who ſuffer'd in the Colonies during the late Troubles, praying for ſome Recompence or peculiar Marks of the Royal Favor to them, was graciouſly anſwered by Aſſurances of his Majeſty's Intention to reward them for their Attachment to Government.——

We alſo hear that the Act of Compenſation and Indemnity, lately paſſed here, was diſallowed.—

Tueſday died Mrs. Lowder, Wife of Mr. Jonathan Lowder, Poſt-Rider to Hartford.

One Day laſt Week, Mr. Samuel Kingſbury of Medfield, was unfortunately drowned, as he was bathing in the River there.

Yeſterday being the Anniverſary of the Birth Day of his Royal Highneſs the Prince of Wales, the Guns at Caſtle William were fired at one o'clock.

We hear that the Anniverſary of the 14th of Auguſt is to be celebrated To-Morrow.

Southborough, Auguſt 11, 1767.

On Saturday laſt, about two o'clock Afternoon, a Thunder Storm aroſe, in which the Houſe of Mr. Nathaniel Joſlyn, of this Town was ſtruck, and his little Son of ſix Years old killed. The Lightning entered the Houſe by the Chimney, ran down the Principal or Rafter, a large Piece of which it ſplit off at the lower End, then went along by the Plate of the Houſe till it come over the Chamber Window, when it turned down by the Window Frame and Studd, in its Way ſcorching ſome Tow in a Crack, till it came to the Top of the Window in the lower Room, cloſe by which the Child ſtood, holding up a Maſon's Trowel in his Hand, ſaying, "Mother what is this?" when probably the Trowel attracted the Lightning, and he fell down and expired——Several Perſons were in the Room, but they received no hurt—a young Man in the Chamber was almoſt ſtunned with the Shock.

NEW-YORK, Auguſt 6.

On Saturday laſt the Supreme Court adjourn'd to the third Tueſday in October.

In this Term Catharine Branſon, Mary Curten, John Campbell, and Ann Lavally, were ſeverally indicted and tried for Grand Larceny, and found guilty, &c. praying the Benefit of their Clergy which was allowed by the Court, were burned in the hand, and ordered to be diſcharged, except John Campbell, who being charged with a Felony committed in Pennſylvania, was remanded.

Frances Malone, on an Indictment for ſtealing from a Perſon privily, was tried and found guilty, and having pleaded her Belly, the Court awarded a Jury of Matrons, to try whether the Priſoner be with quick Child or not, who being returned and impannelled, after examining the Priſoner privately, found that the Priſoner is with quick Child, whereupon the Court ordered that the Priſoner's Sentence be reſpited till next Term.

William Johnſon, on an Indictment of Felony, for Sacrilege, in ſtealing Books out of St. Paul's-Church, was tried, and found guilty, and ordered to be executed on Monday the 17th Inſtant ——This Perſon, by the Name of William Herring was tried in the Term of October laſt, upon three Indictments for Grand Larceny, and found Guilty, but was allowed his Clergy, and burnt in the Hand.

Elias Carter, Robert Taylor, Dennis Maccarty, and Elias Stillwell, diſcharged by Proclamation, no Perſon appearing to proſecute.

We hear that Catharine Branſon, one of the Priſoners who was burnt in the Hand, the ſame Night committed another Robbery, and was ſent to Goal.

Extract of a Letter from a Gentleman in London, to his Friend in Philadelphia, dated May 16, 1767.

"As we doubt not our Friends in general will be anxious to know the Reſolutions of Parliament, reſpecting the Province of New-York, we have incloſed the Votes of the 15th Inſtant, and we deſire we may have the moſt early Intelligence of the Reception they meet with on our Side. ——As to Paper Currency, we fear nothing will be done to Purpoſe, this Year; as the Plan propoſed by many in the Adminiſtration, is to appropriate the Intereſts ariſing therefrom to make Governors &c. independent on the Aſſemblies; a Plan which the Merchants know will not be adopted on your Side, and we are without Expectation of better Terms this Seaſon. The Committee have taken infinite Pains for many Months, and were in Hopes a few Weeks ago to have ſucceeded; but ſuch is our unſettled State of Adminiſtration, and ſuch the preſent Diſpoſition towards America, that in our own Minds we give up the Point for this Year."

PHILADELPHIA, Auguſt 10.

We hear from Kingſton, in Jamaica, that his Majeſty's Ship Phoenix, ſailed from thence for England on the 29th of June, in which were ſent home, in order to take their trials, Bowers and Hull (the two ticket porters, ſome time ſince apprehended) for robbing Meſſrs. Paines, Hamburgh merchants in London, of about 2000 guineas; great part of which has been recovered.

NEW-YORK, Auguſt 13.

Capt. Kerr from Montſerrat, informs us, that a large Number of Engliſh Veſſels ſailed the 26th of laſt Month from the Iſlands in the Weſt Indies for Europe, as is uſual at that Time, to avoid the Hurricane Seaſon, and compoſed a Fleet of about Forty Sail, which Capt. Kerr paſſed in Sight of the next Day.

Monday laſt his Majeſty's Ship Garland, Capt. St. John, ſailed out of the North River, to the Hook, and is ſaid to be going on a Cruize to Rhode-Iſland.

A Daughter of Mr. Anthony Waters, on the North Side of Staten Iſland, was killed at her Father's Houſe laſt Saturday Noon, by Lightning, as ſhe was removing an ironing table in the Entry; two Gentlemen from Philadelphia, one of which named Jarvis, were cloſe by her, received not the leaſt Hurt: After turning twice round ſhe fell on her face and when taken up, no other Marks of Hurt could be diſcovered, but a ſmall blue Spot under one of her Eyes.

An ANECDOTE.

[From the LONDON CHRONICLE.]

LAST year Mr. Sheridan, the actor, obtained an Iriſh act of parliament protecting him from arreſts on account of his debts in Dublin, amounting to ſixteen hundred pounds: and having this ſeaſon ſaved 800 pounds, he gave notice that he was ready to pay his creditors ten ſhillings in the pound and deſired them to call on him for that purpoſe, with an account of their reſpective demands. Mr. Faulkner, the printer of one of the Dublin papers, was one of the creditors: This gentleman told Mr. Sheridan, that he would not trouble him with his demand, till he dined with him; Mr. Sheridan accordingly called at Mr. Faulkner's, and after dinner Mr. Faulkner put a ſealed paper into his hand, which he told him contained his demand, at the ſame time requeſting Mr. Sheridan to examine it at his leiſure at home. When he came home he found under ſeal, a bond of his for 2 hundred pounds, due to Mr. Faulkner, cancelled, together with a receipt in full of a book debt, to the extent of one hundred pounds. Whether is the conduct of the actor or printer the more generous and laudable?

HARTFORD, Auguſt 17.

On Tueſday the eleventh Inſtant, departed this Life, the worthy and amiable Conſort of the Rev. Robert Breck, of Springfield, much lamented.

BY Intelligence received from England, relating to the Affair of the Suſquehannah and Delaware Companies, it is thought convenient to have a Meeting of ſaid Companies:——This is therefore to Notify all concerned, to meet at Windham, on Wedneſday the 16th Day of September next, then and there to tranſact any Matters relating to ſaid Affairs, as may be thought needful.

male, a ſtrong Inclination to hold up the Price of their Labour, as high as ever, if not to riſe a little more. More eſpecially this appears to be very much the Caſe with Spinners, to the great Diſcouragement of domeſtic Manufactures. For the Farmers who are able to raiſe the Wool and Flax, for their own uſe and to ſpare to others, are diſcouraged trying to make any more Cloth than what their Families can ſpin; which in many Inſtances is not half ſo much as they have Occaſion to conſume. And others who do not raiſe thoſe Commodities, are diſcouraged as to purchaſing of them; becauſe the manufacturing (beſide the Materials to do it with) will coſt as much as to purchaſe the Cloth of the Merchant; eſpecially if they muſt hire it done. So that by theſe Means, we are reduced to a kind of Neceſſity, not only to be dependent on other Countries, but to render our Importation too bulky; and ſo are draining our Country of its Medium of Trade. I am really of the Mind, that the exceſſive Demands of Labourers of this Sort, contribute much more to the impoveriſhing of the Country, than is generally imagined; and that all Sorts of People, who regard the public Intereſt, would do well to take it into their ſerious Conſideration, as a Thing attended with manifold Diſadvantage. It tends to diſcourage the Farmer from doing much at raiſing thoſe neceſſary Articles, to dishearten Houſholders as to manufacturing them; to keep us dependent on the Labours of other Countries, to drain off our Medium, the Life and Sinews of Induſtry, Trade and Buſineſs of every Kind, and to entail Poverty and Diſtreſs on our Country.

It is likewiſe obſerveable, that this is very much the State of the Caſe with Artificers and mechanic Tradeſmen of moſt Sorts. There is nothing more common with them, than to ſay, when Proviſions and other Neceſſaries are high; they muſt riſe in their Demands—but when Times take a different Turn, it is almoſt as common for them to be as backward to fall; ſo that ſeveral uſeful and neceſſary Callings become a Burthen to Mankind.

These and perhaps many other Things that might fall under the Obſervation of judicious Men, have an unfortunate Aſpect upon this Colony, which is as capable of flouriſhing as our Neighbours.—Were we practically ſenſible of the beſt Methods of promoting the common Good, and were willing to own, that perſonal, is wraped up in the common Intereſt.

It ſeems to look of late, as if there was a Sort of Ambition among Traders, to ſell as cheap as may be; at leaſt not to be underſold.

I Query, Whether it is not a laudable Example, and according to the above Principles, tending to the common Good: If People of other Faculties & Callings, were in any good Meaſure diſpoſed to come into the ſame Method, it ſhould be known.

Further I would Query, Whether it is not much to be deſired, that Gentlemen of Obſervation and Abilities ſhould oblige the Public with ſomething of this Kind, done to better Advantage? Would it not be more agreable to Mankind, than little perſonal or party Matters, which are ſome Times crouded into the public Papers? and are often a Portrature of the Author's own Temper, while he labours to expoſe Others.

Elizabeth-Town, New-Jerſey, July 28.

Laſt Night a notorious Riot was committed in this Town, by the Officers and Soldiers of the 28th Regiment quartered here. About One o'Clock in the Morning, the Town was alarmed by the ringing of the Bells, and firing a Gun from the Court-Houſe.—It ſeems that the Party was ordered to march at Four o'Clock this Morning. About One o'Clock the Officers attacked the Court-Houſe, with Guns, Swords, and fixed Bayonets; the Gaoler, being rouſed, betook himſelf to a Priſon, and deſired them to deſiſt.—But Entreaties made them more furious, and they ruſhed and broke open the Door. The Gaoler preſented a Fuzee, which they ſeized by the Muzzel; he, however fired it, and it is thought lamed one of the Officers, to the no ſmall Terror of the Reſt.

By this Time the Inhabitants gathered, and the Officers and Soldiers had entered into the Priſon Doors, and were puſhing every one who was not of their Party, and unarmed; ſeveral were wounded, but none killed. At Four o'Clock they had collected all the Party, and a Magiſtrate advanced from the Inhabitants to Capt. Johnſon, then at their Head, and demanded the Rioters which he ſhould name to him; but he drew back into the Ranks, and ordered them to march to Amboy. After marching ſome Miles, he, with the head Rioters, withdrew in a By-road, and got on board the Tranſports. But the aforeſaid Magiſtrate, with ſome of the wounded, went immediately to Amboy, and applied to the Honourable Frederick Smyth, Eſq; our Chief-Juſtice, who ordered the Officers aſhore that were concerned in the aforeſaid Riot; and the Magiſtrate appearing, they made all the Conceſſions poſſible to him, aſked Pardon of the Gaol-Keeper, promiſed Amendment, and paid a large Sum of Money for the Damage done to the wounded; and, as they were bound immediately to Europe, were permitted to depart in the Tranſports, which ſailed this Day.

PHILADELPHIA, Auguſt 3.

Tueſday laſt, between five & ſix o'Clock in the Afternoon, we had a hard Thunder Guſt, at which Time a Flaſh of Lightning ſtruck the Southeaſt Part of a Chimney of the Linen Factory; the Flaſh took its Courſe down the Chimney and rent it very much, till it came to the Roof of a Houſe on the Eaſt Side adjoining the Factory, where it divided, one Part going down one Side of the Roof and the other the contrary Side; the Part that went down the South-Side of the Roof, tearing off the Shingles, and ſplitting the Rafters, left the Roof, penetrated through a Stone Wall into a Room on the ſecond Story, where was a Man, who received a conſiderable Shock; from this Room it could be traced no further. The other Part that went on the North Side of the Roof tore it, and entering into a Room on the third Story, where it took a Wire, which led to a Bell on the ſecond Story, from whence it was carried by another Wire, affixed to the ſaid Bell, into an adjoining Room, where the Wire ending near a Bed with Iron Curtain Rods round it, they conducted the Lightning round the Bed, ſplit the Poſts and melted the Points of the Hooks that ſupported the Rods, as it had done the Wire abovementioned, from thence it paſſed almoſt imperceptibly thro' the Floor, where on the lower Story it glanced along a Parcel of Pewter Diſhes, where it juſt left its Track by melting each a little, and from thence it took into the open Air. Several People felt the Shock, but no one received any Damage.

PENSACOLA, (in Weſt Florida,) June 7.

ON Wedneſday laſt, the 5th inſtant, his Honour Mountfort Browne, Eſq; Lieut. Governour, & Commander in Chief of this province, made the following Speech to the Aſſembly, viz.

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Aſſembly,

When I called you together for the diſpatch of public buſineſs, I met you with a heart truly diſpoſed to join you in promoting the welfare and happineſs of this infant colony, but on reading your journals, I find much of your attention taken up in unworthy attempts to throw reflections upon my conduct, and the opinion of his Majeſty's council, by the moſt inſolent & ſhameful reſolutions that any aſſembly ever preſented to a governour! And I ſuppoſe your ſubſequent proceedings aroſe from my paſſing over your daring reſolutions unnoticed.

But be aſſured, that my moderation proceeded only from my wiſhing to have you carry through the public buſineſs with alacrity and reputation to this colony, and not in ſwallowing up in the moſt ſurprizing manner the very means which ſhould be applied to its ſupport.

What muſt other colonies think of you, when they know you tax the ſubject merely for your own benefit & advantage. I ſincerely hoped your journals would have produced to the world a laſting monument of diſintereſt, by giving up, for the improvements of the colony, the great ſalaries which you have taken to yourſelves. Such grievances call aloud for redreſs and I ſhall redreſs and make them known that the people may have an opportunity of contributing to their own happineſs hereafter, by a more proper choice of their repreſentatives. I do therefore in his Majeſty's name, by and with the advice of his Majeſty's Council, diſſolve this preſent Aſſembly, and it is diſſolved accordingly.

MOUNTFORT BROWNE.

The Aſſembly being made up from the tumultuous and accidental union of perſons from various parts of the world, of different characters, inclinations and profeſſions, full of jealouſies and animoſities, and appearing to the Governor, to regard only their own intereſt, to the great diſcouragement of new ſettlers, his Honor thought himſelf under the diſagreeable neceſſity of diſſolving them.—They had voted themſelves each ten ſhillings ſterling a day.

Governor Browne is laying out a moſt beautiful town on Dauphin Iſland called Hillſborough, which from its advantageous ſituation, will hurt Penſacola in regard to the trade with the Spaniards at New-Orleans and the Indians on the Miſſiſippi.

QUEBECK, July 9.

Saturday laſt embarked here for New-York, in Battoes, from which they ſaluted the Garriſon, the Company of the Royal Train of Artillery (Captain Martins) commanded by Capt. Groves: They have left this City with the general Regret of its Inhabitants, & as being perfectly poſſeſs'd, and much deſerving of their Eſteem, not only as a quiet and civil Company, but an upright One in all their Dealings.

LONDON, May 1[illegible]

We are informed that the Society for promoting Chriſtian Knowledge, Hatton garden, at the requeſt of the Cymmrodorian Society, have charitably undertaken to print 15000 bibles, and 1500 folio common prayer-books in the Welch language, for the Uſe of the Antient Britons in Wales, who are totally unacquainted with the Engliſh language.—A truly charitable undertaking, and will be an honor to this laudable Society.

A duel was lately fought in Dublin, at which a father was ſecond to his own ſon, and had the pleaſure to ſee him ſhot thro' the ſhoulder, run through the body, and left for dead upon the ſpot: he has ſince recovered however, but will never be in a condition to amuſe himſelf in that manner again.

We are very glad of having the firſt opportunity of acquainting the public, from a channel whoſe authority is wholly indiſputable, of the true reaſon of the late extraordinary, unexpected, and memorable expulſion of the Jeſuits from Spain. The fact ſtands thus.——The Jeſuits in the Spaniſh dominions had forged, or ſurreptitiouſly obtained, a bull from the Pope, delegating them the ſame powers as, and rendering them independant of all Archbiſhops and Biſhops whomſoever, caſes of ordination only excepted. The circumſtance (reſpecting a privilege ſo very new and alarming) ſome of the Fathers too inconſiderately and precipitately communicated to a few of the council of Caſtile. This was privately carried to the Miniſters of State, and by them imparted to his Catholic Majeſty. The King, fired at the ambitious inclinations of the Jeſuits, tho' no way dubious of the authenticity of the bull, complained of the matter, by his ambaſſador at Rome, to the Pope. His Holineſs was aſtoniſhed; he abſolutely denied a recollection of any ſuch grant. The proper records were ſearched, but in vain, no veſtige of any ſuch bull was to be found. Couriers were immediately diſpatched to Madrid with the news of this ſingular event. His Catholic Majeſty and the Spaniſh Miniſters were alarmed at ſuch a daring ſtep in the Fathers; they deliberated in ſecret, and a very ſhort conſideration (conſidering the important nature of the buſineſs) determined the King to rid his country at once of ſuch a dangerous body of miſcreants.—The method that was taken for that purpoſe, our readers, are already acquainted with.

The turning reaſon for the expulſion of the Jeſuits out of Spain has been, a late diſcovery of a fourth vow enjoined by that order, though not to all its members, nor even known by them, of being true to their General above King or Pope!—Thus Roman Catholicks at large vow attachment to the Pope above civil magiſtrates; and Jeſuits to their General above the Pope! Proteſtants, beware of both, like your anceſtors, neither grant them emoluments nor truſts.

PHILADELPHIA, July 30.

LAST Sunday Evening the Royal Highland Regiment embarqued for Ireland: which Regiment, ſince its arrival in America, is diſtinguiſhable for having undergone moſt amazing fatigue; made long and frequent Marches through an inhoſpitable Country, bearing the moſt exceſſive Heat, and ſevereſt Cold, with Alacrity and Chearfulneſs; frequently encamping in the deep Snows, as thoſe who inhabit the interior Parts of this Province but rarely ſee, and which thoſe only who inhabit the moſt Nothern Parts of Europe, can have an Idea of; continually expoſed in Camp and on their Marches, to the Alarms of the ſavage Enemy, who as frequently flew from them ſucceſsleſs in their Attempts; were preſent at almoſt every Engagement during the late War in the Weſt-Indies and America; ſerved at Gaudaloupe, Martinico, the Havannah, at Ticonderoga, at the Reduction of Fort Du Queſne, at the reduction of Canada. They have the ſincere Thanks of the Freemen of this province, for that ſtill further diſtinguiſhing Mark of the reſolution and Bravery, by which under the conduct of Col. Bouquet, aſſiſted with a ſmall Number of the Royal Americans, this, and the Neighbouring Provinces, are now at Eaſe, and have the Bleſſings of Peace ſecured to them, from any further interruption from the ſavage Enemy; and that though they were much inferior in Number, & had an additional Diſadvantage, a large Convoy to protect, they defeated an Enemy, whom, if ſucceſsful, would have deſolated the whole Frontier; and, inſtead of the Diſtreſs, which would have been conſequently felt in the interior Parts of the Province have reſtored a beneficial and advantageous Commerce. Beſides our Thanks for having thus ſecured our Peace, they receive our thanks for that Decorum in Behaviour, which they kept up during their Stay in the Barracks in this City, giving an Example, that the moſt amiable Behaviour in civil Life, is not inconſiſtant with the Character of the good Soldier; and for their Loyalty, Fidelity and orderly Behaviour, the Inhabitants of this City wiſh them, the Officers and Men, Health, Happineſs, a ſafe and agreable Voyage.

ABERDEEN, May 7. A barber's boy in this place was dreſſing a gentlemen about eight o'clock at night, when he filled his bag with ſome pounded rozin, (that one of his companions had left in the ſhop) which he took for hair powder, and accordingly powdered the gentleman's hair with it; after the boy had done, he took up the candle to ſee how he had dreſſed him, when unluckily ſome of the hairs catched fire and ſet the gentlemans head in a blaze, which put him in ſuch a paſſion, that he beat the poor boy ſo much, that it was neceſſary to carry him to the infirmary where he remains very ill.

LONDON.

May 14. Advice is received in town that the whole 27 convents of St. Maur, in France, who had adoped ſome principles of the Jeſuits, and were diſcovered therein have had abſolute orders for removal within 48 hours, upon pain of impriſonment.

They write from Leighorn, that the Corſicans were fortifying the principal ſea ports of the Iſland capable of ſuch defence with very ſtrong booms and and chains, in order to prevent the approach of an enemy. It is added, that Paoli's fleet actually conſiſts of 70 ſail of armed veſſels, two thirds of which were purchaſed from other European powers.

We hear that the principal citizens of Norwich have ſet the laudable example of trying an expedient for avoiding venality & corruption at the Election of Members of Parliament, by ſubſcribing the following aſſociation: "Senſible of the great depravity of morals and licentiouſneſs of manners brought upon us by bribes at our elections, and alarmed at thoughts of that bondage which muſt inevitably be the fruit of it, we whoſe names are underwritten, not ſeeing the Neceſſity of ſubmitting to a nomination founded on the corrupt principles of bargain and ſale, and having no point in view but to chooſe our repreſentatives with honour to themſelves and the city, and to preſerve our own freedom and indepency, do hereby unite and aſſociate in the friendly ſociety, binding ourſelves to each other by our own word and honour, and promiſing that we will not, on any conſideration whatever either directly or indirectly, engage our voice and intereſt to any Candidates, or to any perſon on their behalf, againſt the next general election of members to ſit in Parliament, untill the very day of election; and than each man to vote as his inclination may prompt him. And in the mean time, we recommend to each other to keep a watchful eye upon what paſſes, and to have frequent converſation upon the ſubject.

May 18. It is ſaid that the debates on the American affairs came on in a great aſſembly laſt Wedneſday, and continued till two o'clock on Thurſday morning, when it was agreed to, by a great majority, to reſtrain the Aſſembly of New-York and Maſſachuſetts-Bay from acting in a public capacity, till the act paſſed laſt ſeſſion of Parliament for quartering ſoldiers in America be complied with.——It is ſaid, that the aſſemblies of theſe two provinces had made an act for raiſing a certain ſum of money to be paid the ſoldiers in an equivalent for the privileges granted them by the abovementioned act: By this artifice, it would ſeem, that they eluded the authority of the Britiſh parliament. But we hope this report is groundleſs.

Extract of a letter from Dunkeld, May 8.

"A buxom country wench, who lives at D——a village about four miles from this place, was ſo harraſſed by the addreſſes of a number of Lovers, that ſhe gave her hand to a taylor, more out of view of being freed from the viſits of the others, than from any particular attachment to him; this ſtep ſo enraged another of her lovers who, till then, had flattered himſelf of having the principal place in her affections, that he was reſolved to be revenged on the taylor. Laſt Tueſday they met at K——n market, when the taylor had taken in more liquor than he could well carry; being in this helpleſs ſtate his rival, as they were returning home together, took the opportunity of performing the ſame operation on him, that the Italians do on their male fingers, upon which the rival made his eſcape. The wife declared ſhe would live no longer in a place where ſhe would be the the talk of the whole country, and make her elopement to Edinburgh. The taylor is thought to be in a fair way of recovery, and ſeems more afflicted by the loſs of his wife than of his manhood."

We hear that preparations are making at Windſor Caſtle, for the reception of the Prince and Princeſs of Brunſwick, who, it is ſaid, will reſide there occaſionally this ſummer.

According to letters from Leghorn the coaſts of Sardinia are at preſent much infeſted by the Algerine corſairs, which had occaſioned an order of the Court of Truin for ſome armed veſſels to be fitted out at Cagliari to cruiſe againſt theſe Barbarians.

Some letters from the above place ſay, that all the ports of the iſle of Sardinia are ordered to be ſhut againſt the Jeſuits.

May 23. The Senate of Venice have been informed by their Conſul at Algier, that he has concluded a truce with the Dey for four months, in order, if poſſible, to conclude a formal peace before the expiration of that term: but the conditions which the Dey requires are ſo diſadvantageous to the republic, that there is no likelihood of their being accepted; he demands 1ſt. That the like Preſents be ſent to him, as to his predeceſſor when the peace was concluded, and which conſiſted of the ſum of 50,000 zequins, a ſaddle laced with gold, and enriched with jewels, and a great quantity of very rich ſtuffs. 2dly, he demands that inſtead of 10,000 zequims, which the republic had engaged to pay annually they pay for the future 12,000. 3dly. That they ſend him without delay, all the preſents which he demanded of the republic at the of his advancement to the dignity with time which he is inveſted. And 4thly and laſtly, he makes the following very extraordinary demand, viz. That his corſairs may have the liberty of cruzing in the Gulph of Venice, to purſue their and attack the ſhips of thoſe nations with whom he has no treaty; and that if any of thoſe corſairs ſhould happen to be taken, the republic ſhall be obliged to repair the loſs in ready money.

The propoſal of the Eaſt-India company for granting to the government 400,000l. per ann. for four years, it is thought by ſome, will be accepted: but the proprietors, it is imagined, will not be allowed to make the late intended increaſe to their dividend; and the duty upon tea exported to Ireland and America, it is alſo thought will be lower'd under a certain obligation to government, that the revenue will not be thereby injured.

M. Mello, the Portugueſe Miniſter here has received a circumſtantial account of the plot, laid by the Jeſuits, to aſſaſſinate his Moſt Catholic Majeſty; which horrid proceeding, joined with their other bad behaviour of forging bulls, &c. was, beyond all doubt, the certain cauſe of the late total and eternal expulſion of thoſe Fathers from Spain.

It is ſaid that his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty has, by his Ambaſſador at Rome, demanded of his Holineſs to iſſue a bull, or ordinance, aboliſhing for ever the Society of Jeſus, and the very name of Jeſuits.

Cambden, in his Britannia, informs us, that the Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem (who firſt ſet out with a profeſſion of poverty) became at length ſo powerful, as to alarm the ſeveral Princes of Europe, who had intereſt enough with the Pope to get them diſſolved, and ſeize upon their eſtates; and at their diſſolution it was found, that they poſſeſſed in Chriſtendome no leſs than nineteen thouſand manors. Now though the Jeſuits may not poſſeſs quite ſo many manors in Chriſtendom, yet as they have great riches and power in Europe, and a moſt extenſive country in America, the ſame cauſe may work the ſame effect, and the dread of their growing power may very probably have gone a great way towards their late extripation.

An account is ſaid to have been received this week of the pregnancy of her Daniſh Majeſty.

CHARLES-TOWN SOUTH CAROLINA, July 14. From North Carolina, we are informed, That Governor TRYON, with the Commiſſioners appointed for that purpoſe, joined by the Chiefs of the Cherokee Nation, on the 4th of June, began to run out the Boundary Line between North-Carolina and the Cherokee Hunting Ground at the Corner Tree on Reedy river, where the Line behind the Province terminates. The Surveyors went a North Courſe 53 Miles, marking as they went into the Mountains; and on the 13th of June, they marked ſeveral on the top of Mount Tryon, on the Head Waters of White Oak & Pacolet Creeks running into the Green & Broad Rivers; but ſeveral Obſtacles having impeded a further Survey, it was agreed by the Whole, that the Boundary ſhould be a direct Line from the ſaid marked Trees to Chiſwell's Mines in Virginia; which being ſettled and agreed upon, proper inſtruments were drawn up, and ſigned by the Parties preſent, to be tranſmitted to his Majeſty.— The Indians were ſo highly pleaſed with his Honour's Condeſcenſion to their ſeveral Requiſitions, that they complimented him with the War Name of the Great Wolf of North Carolina.

In the Schooner Saltana, which failed ſince our laſt for London, went Paſſenger one—— Gibbons, who had been a Soldier upwards of 16 Years, and lately diſcharged from Col. Since our laſt arrived ſeveral Whaling Sloops from the Gulph of St. Lawrence; and we hear the Fiſhery there has been very indifferent this Seaſon, many of the Veſſels having met with little or no Succeſs: Two Sloops were lately caſt away in the Streights of Belleiſle; one of them, Capt. Coffin, belonging to Nantucket (not White of Marſhfield, as reported) the People were ſaved and kindly aſſiſted by Captain Hamilton, of the Merlin Sloop of War, in bringing off the Sails, Rigging & Stores from the Wrecks.

PHILADELPHIA, Auguſt 13.

Extract of a Letter from London, June 5.

"I am now to tell you exactly what Duties the Parliament have laid for America, viz. Four Shillings and Eight Pence per Hundred on Crown, Plate, Flint and White Glaſs, imported into the Colonies; One Shilling and Two Pence per Hundred on Green Glaſs; Two Shillings per Hundred on Red and White Lead, and Painters Colours; and Three Pence per Pound on Tea, imported in the ſaid Colonies."

A Gentleman at Fort Pitt, writes of the 28th of July, that the firſt Week of that Month the Froſt was ſo ſevere as to ſpoil a Garden at the Eaſt End of the Lawrel Hill and killed a Number of Shrubs and Buſhes. And that on the 27th of the ſame Month, the Parties of the 21ſt and 34th Regiment, marched into the Garriſon.

NEW-YORK, Auguſt 3.

Thurſday laſt a Soldier belonging to the Regiments here was brought out upon the Green to receive 1000 Laſhes, but before his Comrades could get him ſtripped, he wounded himſelf with a Pair of Sciſſars in the Belly to ſuch a Degree that the Sentence of the Court Martial could not then be put in Execution; however we hear he is in a fair Way of Recovery.

We hear that William Johnſton, who was to have been executed laſt Monday, purſuant to his Sentence for Felony and Sacrilege, has obtained his Excellency's Pardon.

Laſt Saturday Evening the Soldiers quartered in this City, being at their Exerciſe on the public Parade, a Number of the Inhabitants looking thereon, the Soldiers having their Bayonets fixed, in endeavouring to make more Room to perform their Exerciſe, crowded on the People, and we hear wounded one, which put the Inhabitants in great confuſion: Trials have been commenced on the Occaſion, but whether or how they are determined we have not yet learnt.

On Monday laſt arrived the Harriot Packet, Capt. Oake in 11 Weeks from Falmouth, but the Papers by her being only to the 28th of May, contain no Advices ſo late as we have had by the Way of Boſton and Philadelphia. The Mail to go by this Packet will be made up on Monday next.

Another Packet may be daily expected.

THE CONNECTICUT COURANT.

Mr. GREEN,

IN your Laſt, two Perſons, calling themſelves Goldſmiths, "Inform the Public, "that they have the Vanity to believe, their Demands have ever been ſhort of any Goldſmith's in this Colony." Vanity indeed, with great Propriety! when 'tis obſerv'd, that in the Article of Gold-Necklaces (in which they have been ſo very celebrated) they have had a Price equal to any One, reckoning the Labour, and the Advance on the Gold.---And 'tis ſurpriſing, theſe Gentlemen did not ſee into what a Dilemma their expreſſive Vanity leads them; for they "are determined to ſerve all their "Cuſtomers, for the future," at a Rate yet ſhort of the former, viz.—"demanding only "Seven Eights of their uſual Acquirements for Labour." Why this Alteration? Is it becauſe they are determined to engroſs the Buſineſs, by repreſenting to the Publick, that they ſell cheaper than any Body elſe.——Vanity!——Or, is it not rather becauſe they are conſcious to themſelves, of having injured their Cuſtomers, by over rating Labour done by Blackſmiths and Tinkers, and mean to make Reſtitution that Way; for they very ſeriouſly expreſs a Senſe of the Obligation that lies upon "every Perſon in this popular Colony, to conduct ſo, as will have a natural Tendency to advance the Good of the Whole."

But for Men to ſet up themſelves for Standards for Others, that have acquired their Skill by Hire of Journeymen—'tis to be wiſhed the Legiſlative Body would paſs an Act, that no Man ſhould ſet himſelf up at any Trade, without having ſerved a regular Apprenticeſhip of ſeven Years, and have a Certificate from his Maſter. Then we ſhould not ſee every Blackſmith and Tinker, turn Goldſmith.

Extract of a Letter from on board the Dolphin man of War, dated in Port Famine, in the Streights of Magellan, the firſt of January.

"I am ſorry I cannot hear from you in anſwer to your well-doing, by reaſon no ſhips came this way, ſo that I reſt contented until I have the pleaſure of ſeeing you my ſelf, which may be in about two years time, for we are going to find out as much as poſſible. We have been among the tall men, and have had ſome of them on board us, but none exceed eight feet height: The common run is about ſeven feet and an half, who moſt all ride upon horſes, moſt white, with wooden ſpurs. They have two ſtones, which are ſlung in a ſort of a ſkin, ſome diſtance from one another, with which they heave out their hands, and kill wild fowl, which is pretty plenty; they being of a ſavage nature, eat the fleſh of thoſe fowls raw. As for any other particulars, ſhall let them alone until my return. I remain, dear ſir, &c."

A Letter from Paris, dated May 15, ſays, "Tho' the preceeding Advices from Rome had given Room to believe that the Pope was determined to receive the Jeſuits in his Dominions, the laſt Letters inform us, that the Pontiff had ſent Orders to the Governor of Civita Vecchi not to permit their Landing, till he received further Orders, but to furniſh them with the neceſſary Refreſhments. The Letters add, that two Couriers had been ſent to Madrid, charged with Diſpatches, repreſenting on the Part of his Holineſs, to his Catholic Majeſty, "That if the Jeſuits are guilty, they are not ſufficiently puniſhed; and too much ſo, if they are innocent. That the Laws ſeem to require, that Citizens ſhall not be driven from their Country, till after they had undergone a Trial to make evident the Proofs of their Crime: That, as to the Reſt, though it is in the Power of his Catholick Majeſty to treat his Subjects in ſuch a Manner as may ſeem fit and convenient to him, yet he cannot oblige any other Sovereign to give them an Aſylum in his Dominions; and that if the Catholic Powers ſhould all think proper to ſuppreſs the different religious Orders in the Countries under their Dominions; and conſign them to the Diſpoſal of his Holineſs, not only the Eccleſiaſtical State, but the whole Country of Italy, would be too ſmall to contain all thoſe Inhabitants, &c.

But it is thought that this laſt Part, with reſpect to the Maidens, ſo far as it relates to Natives of their own Country, will not be complied with."

PHILADELPHIA, Auguſt 13.

Saturday laſt, between two and three o'clock in the Afternoon, we had a ſevere Guſt of Rain and Hail, with Lightning, when a Rick of Hay, of upwards of 30 Tons, on Greenwith Iſland, was ſtruck by it, and ſet on Fire, which being obſerved by a Man ſtanding under another Rick, he ran to the Houſe, and informed the People thereof; upon which one Joſeph Johnſton climbed up the Rick, with a Calabaſh of Water, and being aſſiſted by ſome others (who by that Time had got a Ladder) they with their Hats applied the Water ſo faſt, that in a ſhort Time the Fire was extinguiſhed. He obſerved, in turning up the Hay, that it was much bruiſed; and the Fire was of a deep ſcarlet Colour, much exceeding that of common Fire. The Lightning made a Hole above two Inches Diameter quit through the Rick, and the Fire had burt about ten Feet down.

They write from Scotland, that ſeveral foreign agents have lately appeared in the northern parts of that Kingdom, to inliſt Highlanders for the Service of his Pruſſian Majeſty.

It is reported, that another regiment of light-horſe will ſoon be raiſed for his Majeſty's ſervice, the command of which, it is ſaid, will be given to one of the royal family.

We hear a Regulation will ſhortly be made, that all his Majeſty's foreign Garriſons ſhall be relieved once in ſeven Years.

BOSTON, Auguſt 20.

On the 16th Inſtant a very ſad Affair happened at Wrentham Weſt Pariſh, viz. Between the Hours of 2 and 3 in the afternoon, while people were genearlly attending public worſhip, the houſe of Mr. Benjamin Rockwood appeared to be on fire, and was ſo ſuddenly conſumed that nothing could be ſaved out of it; and the out buildings were with difficulty preſerved. Several apparent circumſtances gave ſuſpicion that ſome evil-minded vagrant had ſet it on fire purpoſely; care was taken the night following to way-lay the roads and bridges where it was probable the plunderers might paſs in their eſcape: Thoſe who watched in one place had the ſucceſs to take one Thomas Cook, a notorious Thief; but none of Mr. Rockwood's Effects were found upon him. Thoſe who lay in wait at another place had the chance to head a man on horſeback, in paſſing a bridge: He appeared to be loaded with plunder, and had a formidable club in his hand; but too ſoon perceiving his danger he turned ſuddenly about and eſcaped their hands. On Monday morning the woods thereabout were diligently ſearched, and a horſe was found not far diſtant, with Mr. Rockwood's ſaddle upon him, and a bundle of ſtolen effects carefully depoſited under a log: The horſe is well known to be the ſame which one Daniel McKeney was ſeen in the poſſeſſion of the Saturday evening before.

Abſtract from a letter from the moſt noble public-ſpirited, and univeſally beloved D of Northumberland.

" Your Grace knows perfectly well, that the great Art to make a populous manufacturing and trading nation happy, or what we call flouriſhing, is to give to all an opportunity of being ſatisfactorily employed: that it is the grand point, and ſhould be the aſſiduous ſtudy of Miniſters to compaſs. For the true or natural reſources of ſuch a ſtate are the fruit of induſtry proceeding from the univerſal and well judged occupation; all others are auxiliaries not to be depended upon: lotteries are baits that many not always take; and taxes are frequently oppreſſive; always hateful to a free and ſpirited people. The odium occaſioned by taxing is not becauſe taxes ought not to be impoſed, but becauſe they are frequently laid either upon improper objects, or elſe not in due proportion. Was not that the caſe, taxes would not be grievous. Whenever I argue againſt taxes, it is upon this principle. Until our more happy circumſtances, or more flouriſhing condition, enables government to provide by other means for the debt of the nation, and the other neceſſities of the ſtate, old taxes muſt remain, and even new ones be levied, but upon the fitteſt objects, and with due conſideration. It is really very diverting, my Lord, to obſerve at what rate ſome men will argue; in what manner and upon what ſtrange principles others act. They have the moſt extravagant notions of the dearneſs of all things, and employ their time to reduce the prices, which is impracticable, and unneceſſary; it being in my opinion good policy to keep things dear: cheapneſs is a ſure ſign of poverty & indolence. On the other hand, dearneſs indicates great induſtry and population. The extravagant price of all things in this nation does not ſo much proceed from ſcarcity as from a conſumption. It is an advantage to have all proviſions dear in a populous country, in order to encourage agriculture, &c. provided always that due attention be given to manufactures, trade, and navigation; for when they flouriſh, and by theſe natural means our comings in adequate, or duly proportioned to our going out, it would ſignify little whether, for example, mutton coſt ſixpence or 1 ſhilling per pound; for if it ſhould be ſaid, that the dearneſs of proviſions and labour will prevent our going as cheap to market with the manufactures we ex[illegible] as our rivals, that inconvenience [illegible] remedied by bounties; and then no[illegible] can deny but what it would be an [illegible]tage to have things dear in proportion to our ſucceſs, or abilities to pay. Indeed we cannot, in that caſe properly diſtinguiſh things to be dear; for it is only diſproportioned to our circumſtances that makes men count them ſo. Hence it is manifeſt, that inſtead of loſing time to find out a method to reduce the price of all things, we ſhould give our attention to the main point, which is the giving to all an opportunity of being ſufficiently and conſtantly employed, by encouraging of manufactures and trade in the moſt extenſive manner that the nature of things will admit of with prudence. When this is accompliſhed, all other requiſites will follow very naturally as ſo many happy effects of one great cauſe.

" A free and extended trade, ſuperintended by intelligent, aſſiduous perſons, will bring about ſooner then many are capable of conceiving, all that the ſubject can wiſh for, and the government deſire."

From the London Chronicles, of May 23, and 26.

AN ingenious merchant ſkilled in the trade and affairs of our colonies and iſlands in America, has computed that they now take of our manufactures annually to the amount of FIVE MILLIONS, with which they might be furniſhed at an average 33 per cent. cheaper, if we allowed them, anp they were inclined to trade with foreign nations. This 33 per cent. of difference amounts to near 1,700 000l. per annum; which if this calculation is juſt, they pay for their attachment to our government, and their reſpect for our modes. The ſeeds of m——f are ſaid to be ſowing that map greatly hurt, and at length produce the ruin of this gainful commerce: For it is the opinion of ſome, that we ſhall not be ſatisfied without getting a little more from them, and that in the way of c———n, to ſhew our p——r. Others, however, think this account exaggerated; but even half of it is too much to riſque, if the hazard may, by prudent meaſures, be avoided. If this ſhould really happen, it will add another inſtance to the Book of Great Events from little Cauſes. I am your's, &c.

The Engliſh Papers bro't by Captain Jefferies, contain nothing new or intereſting, relative to America, and all we can collect from private Letters, is, that the Bill for ſtopping the Legiſlative Authority in this Province, until we comply with the Billeting Act, had paſſed the Houſe of Commons; that the Americans were permitted to import the Produce of the Straights without calling at England to enter; that there was no Probability of obtaining a Paper Currency this Seſſion; that a Board of Cuſtoms was ſettled for America; and that it was ſuppoſed the Parliament would break up about the firſt of July.

THE

Printed by THOMAS GREEN, in HARTFORD.

AT a Convention of the MEDICAL CORPORATION, in Litchfield County, at Litchfield, on the ſecond Tueſday in June laſt, Thomas Ruſſell, Eſq; of Cornwall, who had not before met with the Corporation, was pleaſed to join and incorporate. Alſo Meſſ. Francis Forgue of Fairfield in Fairfield County, Hoſea Hulbert and John Crane, both of Waterbury, in New-Haven County, being Perſonally preſent, were made free of the Corporation. After which Mr. Seth Bird etertained the Corporation with a Diſſertation on Mercury, which was followed by a ſhort Oration, pronounced by Mr. Oliver Fuller, introductory to the Examination of Mr. [illegible] Phelps, who was afterwards admitted to Practice, and made a Member of the Corporation. And as moſt of the Members of the Corporation take the CONNECTICUT COURANT, it is their ſpecial Deſire and Requeſt, that the Printer thereof publiſh the before mentioned Diſſertation and Oration, principally for their own Benefit: At the ſame Time humbly hoping, that if they convey no Inſtruction, they may afford no diſagreable Amuſement to any Gentlemen who read the COURANT.——

POSTULAT. 1ſt.

THAT Mercury is the moſt ponderous of all Fluids.

2d. That Mercury is the moſt Fluid of all Bodies.

3d. That Mercury is ſpecifically heavier than our Blood, in a Ratio of 13 to 1.

4th. That Mercury conſiſts of Particles the moſt minute, pervading the Vaſcula Minima with Eaſe.

5th. That the Particles of Mercury are perfect Spherules.

The Truth of theſe Propoſitions being already demonſtrated by phyſical Authors that are common amongſt us, I thought it needleſs for me to attempt it in this Place; and if they are admitted, are ſufficient Data, from which to account for all the Phænomena of the Operations of this celebrated Mineral on a living, human Body.

Mercury then, being applied to our Bodies, in any Manner, whereby it ſhall be capable of entering the Veſſels, and mixing with our Fluids, will be preſently returned with the venal Blood to the right Ventricle of the Heart; whence paſſing by the Arteria Pulmonalis and Vena Pulmonalis, will reach the left Ventricle, where it will be in the common Road of Circulation to all Parts of the Body. And here it may be neceſſary to premiſe, that the Circulation of the Blood depends on the muſcular Force of the Heart and Arteries, to propel forwards their contained Fluids, the Heart being the Primum Mobile: And this being granted, the Heart acts as any other mechanical Engine in thruſting out its contained Fluids, and according to the known Laws of Motion, the Celerity of all Bodies, when once put in Motion from any given Force, will be Cæteris Paribus, as their Denſities are to their Surfaces.

LEMMA 1ſt. by Poſtulat 3d. The Mercury in the left Ventricle of the Heart will acquire a Velocity 13 Times greater than the Blood from the firſt Impetus given by the Heart.

LEM. 2d. That Mercury containing the moſt Matter under the leaſt Surface, its Figure and Fluidity, all tend to make it perſevere in a right Line vaſtly longer than any Particles in our Fluids.

LEM. 3d. That the Particles of Mercury and of Blood, muſt looſe continually of the Motion firſt impreſſed, and that in a Ratio as their Surfaces are to their Denſities and Vice Verſa; that the Particles of Mercury muſt be relatively increaſing in a Ratio of thoſe of the Blood, as their Denſities are to their Surfaces, all other Things being equal. But the Blood is a very tenacious Fluid, preſently hardening, by Reſt and Cold, into a compact Sciſſile Maſs. And by Poſtulat 2d. Mercury is the moſt Fluid of all Bodies, that it hath all the Advantage of the great Diſproportion of Aptitude to Motion.

LEM. 4th. That the Mercurial Particles will exceed thoſe of the Blood when they come to reach the leaſt and ſmalleſt Veſſels, both as to Force and Celerity, more than 100 to one. Whence the following Corollaries.

COROL. 1ſt. We may hence ſee how well calculated this Mercury is for deſtroying all Viſcid Coheſions in our Blood, and whole Maſs of Fluids, and even the component Globules thereof, viz. by its being moved forwards with a Force ſo vaſtly ſuperior to that of the Blood; for——in a rectilineal Motion of the Fluids the Mercury paſſing with ſo great Force and Swiftneſs, daſhes the Blood Globules to Pieces as a leaden Ball would a Row of Snow Balls, and in like Manner the Morbid Coheſions, but with much greater Advantage, as thoſe latter incline to maintain their Poſitions, adhering to the Sides of the larger Veſſels, and the Mouths of the Capillaries; ſo that each Ictus muſt be with much greater Force and Power than on a Body that is looſe on all Sides, in contact with nothing but a ſurrounding Fluid. But as all the Particles cannot paſs long in a right Line, by Reaſon of the conical Form of the Veſſels, there will conſequently ariſe an inteſtine Motion in the Humours, whereby the mercurial Particles will be variouſly agitated, and toſſed from Side to Side of the Veſſels, whereby the Veſſels will alſo be urged to vibrate more briſkly and ſmart, from all which the Fluids muſt be greatly comminuted, and from this increaſed Action of the Veſſels, and repeated Percuſſions of thoſe little mercurial Globules. Whatever clogs the Veſſels, and hinders the free Circulation of the Fluids, muſt of Neceſſity in Time, be knock'd to Pieces, rubbed off, and ſo far comminuted, as to be capable of being driven through the now Patulent Orifices of the Veſſels and of Expulſion from the Body, when unfit for Circulation any longer in it.

COROL. 2d. Why it comes to be the moſt powerful Deobſtruent in all chronicle Diſorders, eſpecially thoſe depending on a pituitous Lentor? As to removing Obſtructions in general, it hath already been accounted for in the laſt Paragraph.—But why, eſpecially, in a pituitous Lentor? Becauſe this is accumulated chiefly in the glandular Parts, Folicles and Cells which ariſe from the numerous Ends of the convoluted, ſerous and lymphatic Veſſels, being the moſt ſluggiſh Part of our Humours, ſeparated and formed where the Circulation is the moſt languid.——But we have proved that Mercury acts with the greateſt Force, and moves with the greateſt Celerity relatively, conſidered in thoſe very Places laſt mentioned.

3d. Why is it ſo plentifully pro[illegible] the fluid Secretions and Excretio[illegible] Anſwer is eaſy, for the more our [illegible] are comminuted, and the oftener the particles to be ſecreted and excreted, are brought to the Mouths of the ſecretory & excretory Veſſels, by ſo much will their Diſcharge be encreaſed.—But that this is the Caſe, under the Operation of Mercury, we have proved at Corol. 1ſt.

4th. Why Mercury promotes a Salivation rather than any of the other Secretions? Here ſetting aſide the antient Hypotheſis of Volatility (making the Stomach, Gullet and Fauces ſerve as an Alembic) not only as vague and improbable, but notoriouſly falſe: For by certain chemical Experiments it appears, that Mercury doth not riſe in Fumo without a greater Degree of Heat than the Blood ever attains to in the Heighth of the moſt ardent Fever. It remains therefore, that we inveſtigate the true Cauſe; and by the foregoing Doctrine it appears, that this hath the Advantage of all other Projectiles of perſevering in a right Line;——but that the carotid Arteries (which ſupply the ſaliſal Glands with their Juices) do paſs in the moſt direct Line from the Heart of any Veſſels in the Body is beyond Diſpute, conſequently a much greater Quantity of Mercury muſt paſs theſe Veſſels in Proportion to the Reſt; and ſo alſo to the ſalival Glands, for the Branches to theſe do not make greater Angles with their Trunks, than thoſe to the other Parts of the Head; and we have before ſhewn how greatly Mercury promotes the fluid Secretions; therefore, where the greateſt Quantity is, there will be the greateſt Secretion: But the greateſt Quantity is brought to thoſe Glands.

5th. Why it deſtroys Acrimony of every Kind? And here it may be enquired, What Produces Acrimony in the Blood? And how many Kinds there are? And in Anſwer to this I would obſerve, that Acrimony may be produced various Ways; as by Stagnation and Reſt, a ſpontaneous Diſſolution and Putrefaction enſues, the Salts are ſuffered to unite and form Cluſters unfit for an eaſy Circulation; and thoſe may differ according to the Way of Living, and the various Subſtances made Uſe of in our Diet. Hence Cachexies of different Kinds, as Acid, Muriatic, Aromatic, &c. Again, by the encreaſed Action of the Veſſels in febrile Diſorders, the animal Salts may be encreaſed, and highly volitalized, and rendered very Acrimonious: But by Poſtulat 6th. Mercury being a neutral Subſtance will not encreaſe either acid or alcaline Acrimony.—By Poſtulat, 5th. its Particles are perfect Sphérules, or little Spheres, and not tending to unite very eaſily with any other Subſtance whatſoever (except the moſt ſtrong and concentrated Acids, which can never exiſt in the human Body) The Force and Celerity with which the Mercury hath been demonſtrated to move in our Veſſels, in the foregoing Lemma's, will undoubtedly be ſufficient to knock to Pieces thoſe Cluſters of Salts, break off the Points of all thoſe ſpiculated Particles, wherever they come in Contact, by which, in Time, they would be entirely deſtroyed.

6th. Why, after mercurial Courſes, Perſons are diſpoſed to Acidities, eſpecially of the Primæ Viæ? And perhaps ſeveral Things may conduce hereto—As 1ſt. The ſpare, vegetable Diet made Uſe of moſt commonly. 2d. The weak and exhauſted State of the Bile. 3d. So great a Deſtruction of the red Globules. 4th. And laſtly, as a Conſequence of all the Reſt, the Relaxation of all the Veſſels, which is always the Caſe in acid C[illegible]ies.

[illegible] Why it anſwers beſt in robuſt Con[illegible]ons?

[illegible]h. Why in the Sanguineous, and Phlegmatic than Others?

I have choſe to anſwer theſe two Heads under One, as the ſame Reaſons ſerve for both: As mercurial Courſes rack the Conſtitution, and weaken powerfully, the Reaſon is plain, why the Robuſt will beſt bear it. The Sanguine are (generally ſpeaking) thoſe that have very elaſtic Fibres, a rich and denſe Blood, a large Proportion of red Globules, which will therefore bear a Diſſolution of the Blood Globules, and a Relaxation of the Veſſels better than Others.

The Phlegmatic, whoſe Juices are naturally ſluggiſh are diſpoſed to Corpulency, and will very well bear a Loſs of Subſtance, and an Increaſe of Circulation, which they may be ſure to meet with here.

9th. Why thoſe whoſe Veſſels are naturally ſlender and thin, their Humors dilute, having a ſmall Degree of Cohesion, cannot bear mercurial Courſes, without manifeſt Damage to their Conſtitutions?

Here it is ſuppoſed that the Condition of the Veſſels and Fluids, is already below the healthful Standard, and the Error in both Caſes, ſuch as muſt inevitably be increaſed by Mercury: For a Body moving with that Force and Celerity as I have before demonſtrated Mercury doth, cannot fail of daſhing the now broken, diſſolved Humors more & more to Pieces, and bringing them ſtill into a greater Degree of Diſſolution, and cauſe a conſtant and powerful Abraſion from the Sides of the Veſſels, and prevent the Appoſition of any new nutritious Particles, or at leaſt but comparatively Few; whence Miraſmus, Dropſies, &c. I would not be underſtood to ſuggeſt, that Mercury is never to be uſed in ſuch Conſtitutions, but alway with Caution; and if the good Ends to be obtained, are not much more than equal to the Evil we know muſt follow, it's evident it ought to be avoided.

10th. Why Mercury cannot be introduced into the Blood in any conſiderable Quantity with Safety, in the Heighth of inflamatory Fevers? For here a ſanguine Plethora is ſuppoſed, the Veſſels highly elaſtic, and a Heat greatly increaſed, as an increaſed Heat is eſſential to all Fevers, and more eſpecially to this; but Heat rarifies all Bodies, and that in Proportion to their natural Rareneſs. But that the Blood is a very rare Body, will not be denied; and the more the Blood is rarified, the greater will be the Secretion of animal Spirits, whence an Increaſe of the muſcular Force of the Heart and Arteries.——But the Heat of the Blood depends on the Action of the Veſſels, therefore the greater the Action of the Veſſels, the greater will be the Heat of the Blood, whence the Blood will be powerfully urged againſt the Sides of the Veſſels, whoſe ſmaller Branches will be in eminent Danger of burſting;—but if a Body 13 Times as ſolid as the Blood, and moving with an hundred Times the Force, be mixed with the Blood, and thruſt therewith againſt the Sides of the Veſſels, the Danger of an Hemorrhage would be apparent. But this we have proved to be the Caſe with Mercury.

[The Remainder will be in our next.]

L O N D O N, June 18.

We are informed that his Majeſty, will go to the Houſe of Peers on Thurſday next, &, after ſigning ſuch bills as are ready, will prorogue the parliament.

The following among other bills lie ready for the Royal aſſent; viz.

The bill to continue ſeveral laws relating to the running of accuſtomed goods; to prevent the running of goods, and the danger of infection thereby: to the granting liberty to carry rice from Carolina and Georgia, in America, directly to any part of Europe, ſouthward of Cape Finiſterre and to the prohibiting the exportation of books reprinted abroad, and firſt written and printed in Great-Britain.

The bill for the free exportation of cochineal and indico: and for allowing the bounties upon the exportation of corn and malt, declared or made for exportation, and barley ſteeped, and intend to be made into malt for exportation, before a limitted time.

We hear the inſinuation which was lately propagated, that the Right Hon. Mr. Conway was to reſign as Secretary of State, and get the firſt vacant regiment, is without foundation: that Right Hon. gentleman's conduct ſince his coming into the adminiſtration, having given ſuch univerſal ſatiſfaction, and it is the opinion of the moſt ſenſible politicians, that he will be continued till he himſelf chuſes to deprive the public of a miniſter whoſe patriotiſm and ſteadineſs hath been equelled by few, and ſurpaſſed by none.

A letter from Leghorn, dated May 23, ſays, "Notwithſtanding the advantage obtained by the Corſican rebels in the iſland of Captia, the fortreſs has not yet ſurrendered; & when the commiſſary Otto, and Maſcent the commander, went to it, thinking it would capitulate the garriſon anſwered them firmly, they were not to flatter themſelves that they ſhould be maſters of it for a long time, inaſmuch as it was well provided with proviſions and military ſtores."

Yeſterday the purſuer of the Cruttenden Eaſt Indiaman, Capt. Rowland, came to the India houſe, with an account of the ſhips being ſafe arrived at Lizard from Bengal.

As did the purſuer of the Royal Charlotte Capt. Clements, and the purſer of the Speaker Capt. Brooke, Eaſt Indiamen, with an account of the above ſhips being ſafe arrived off the Iſle of Wight, from the Eaſt-Indies.

On Wedneſday the Remains of Lord Hope were put on board a veſſel at Portſmouth, in order to proceed to Leith, which port is within 12 miles of Hopetoun, his Lordſhip's father's ſeat; the corpſe is to be conveyed from Leith, in funeral proceſſion, to Hopetoun houſe.

They adviſe from Hamburgh, that a great number of Saltſburghers were preparing to embark on board an Engliſh ſhip in the Elbe, for the new Britiſh ſettlements in America.

They write from Senegal, that a crew of pirates in an armed ſchooner, who had committed divers roberies on the coaſt, finding themſelves purſued by an Engliſh man of war and that it was impoſſible to eſcape her, blew themſelves up by ſetting fire to the powderroom and every one on board periſhed.

Corke, June 1. This morning the 10th regiment of foot embarked, in high ſpirits, in lighters at the Quay, to go on board the tranſports at Cove.

Letters from Chatham mention, that Orders are received at that yard, to take his Majeſty's Ship Monmouth, of 64 guns to pieces, being judged unfit for further ſervices. This ſhip was eſteemed the beſt ſailor in the whole navy, had a principal ſhare in the actions fought by the Admirals Anſon and Hawke, againſt the French in the Bay of Biſcay, when commanded by that brave officer, the late Admiral Harriſon, in the war preceeding the laſt; was in the late war in ſeveral actions, commanded by the Captains Gardner & Hervey, the former of whom was killed on board, when engaged ſingly with the Foudroyant of 80 guns. She never gave chace to any ſhip that ſhe did not come up with.

We hear [illegible] certain Iriſh nobleman and his lady went laſt Thurſday to Dunmow in Eſſex, in order to claim the gammon of bacon, which according to the cuſtom of that manor, is given to thoſe who ſwear that they repented not of their marriage in a year and a day of the celebration thereof. This is the firſt time that perſons of their rank have laid claim to it. It is therefore hoped that many more lords and ladies will ſoon follow the example, and thereby reſcue matrimony from the contempt it now ſuffers in the faſhionable world.

We are told that a petition was delivered to his Majeſty on Friday laſt from the following convicts, viz. Lawrence Sweetman, William Elliot, Jacob Wood, and John Benham, now under Sentence of death in Newgate, humbly praying that his Majeſty would be pleaſed to order any one or all of them, for amputation of a limb, or any other experiment that ſhall be thought fit to be made upon them, to try the efficacy of Mr. Pierce's ſtyptic medicines, all chearfully ſubmitting to riſk the life already forfeited to juſtice. In conſequence of the above petition, a reſpite was ſent yeſterday at three o'clock from the ſecretary of State's office for John Benham to undergo the operation; when the time is fixed, a general invitation will be given to all the gentlemen of the faculty, as no other beſides them will be admitted to inſpect it.

Cambridge, June 12. Monday laſt Mr. Nathaniel Jardine, linen-draper, near Bennet Church in this town, was ſeized with a fit, as he ſat upon a bench at his door, from which he fell, and received a violent cut on his head, that rendered him ſenſeleſs; he was immediately blooded, which ſomewhat recovered him, and he was carried by his own deſire to the houſe of Mr. Clay, grocer in Trompington-ſtreet, where he died on Wedneſday. His brother, a few months ago, was taken much in the ſame manner, but died inſtantly. Theſe brothers were about ſixty years old, had lived together from their infancy, and had for more than forty years kept a linen-draper's ſhop, during which time they never had their houſe cleaned but once, which was when their mother died, whom to ſave expences they laid out themſelves. It is aſſerted that they had no bed, but uſed to lie upon ſome old packing cloths that their goods came in; and were ſo continually diſturbed leſt any of their effects ſhould be ſtolen, that they frequently watched alternately. They did not even allow themſelves the common neceſſaries of life, not a whole joint of meat having been known to enter the houſe for twenty years paſt. Thus pinched for want of ſuſtenance within, and (through neglect in their linen and apparel) peſtered with vermin without, no wonder they always carried a very meagre aſpect. On the death of their father they found upwards of 1000 guineas concealed in his bed; and on the deceaſe of the laſt brother, the ſurvivor found a conſiderable ſum of money that he had ſecreted from him. It is not certainly known what he died poſſeſſed of, but it is generally ſuppoſed from 6 to 8000l. the whole of which, except a legacy of 20l. he has left by will to the above Mr. Clay; who it ſeems had ſhewn him ſome civilities by now and then ſending him a dinner, &c.

N E W - Y O R K, Auguſt 27.

Wedneſday laſt Captain George Tucker arrived here from Turks-Iſland in 17 Days. He ſays that many Settlers have lately arrived there from Bermuda, and that the Place bids fair for being in a ſhort Time, very conſiderable on Account of Trade; that Governor Sommer has appointed a Council, and the Inhabitants have choſen an Aſſembly, by Virtue of an Order from England: and that ſeveral French Sloops have lately been there, but could not diſpoſe of their Cargoes, there being but very few Purchaſers. Salt very ſcarce.

Sept. 3. Laſt Night arrived the Ship Sally, Capt. Curtis, in 7 Weeks from London, but as we heard nothing of it till this Morning, when the Paper was juſt going to the Preſs, and have not even Time to look over the Papers, which are to the 8th of July, we can only tell our Readers, that on the Second of July the Parliament was prorogued to the 31ſt of Auguſt.——His Majeſty in his Speech thanks the Parliament for their Attention to the commercial Intereſt of the Nation, and the other Buſineſs before them, for the Supplies granted for public Service—and the Proviſion made for the honorable Support of his Family.——That no material Alteration had happened in the State of foreign Affairs.—That the fixed Objects of all his Meaſures are to preſerve the Peace, and at the ſame Time to aſſert and maintain the Honor of the Crown, and the juſt Rights of his Subjects, &c. and recommends the ſtrict Obſervance of Order and Regularity.

That the following Bills had received the Royal Aſſent the 29th of June, viz.

A Bill for eſtabliſhing Commiſſioners of Cuſtoms in America.

A Bill to continue ſeveral Laws relating to the running of uncuſtomed Goods and to prevent Frauds relating to Cuſtoms, and for granting Liberty to carry Rice from Carolina and Georgia, to foreign Ports.

A Bill for eſtabliſhing an Agreement for £. 400,000 per Annum, with the Eaſt-India Company.

A Bill to render more effectual in his Majeſty's Dominions in America, the Act for puniſhing Mutiny and Deſertion.

A Bill to prevent the Importation and Wearing of French Lawns.

A Bill to indemnify Perſons who have omitted to take the Oaths to qualify themſelves for Offices and Employments,—and to many other Acts.

In a Paper of the 2d of July, it is ſaid, This Day his Majeſty will give his Aſſent to the Bills —For reſtraining and prohibiting the Governor and Council, and Houſe of Repreſentatives of the Province of New-York from paſſing or aſſenting to any Act of Aſſembly for any other Purpoſe, until Proviſion ſhall be made by the ſaid Aſſembly for furniſhing the King's Troops with all Neceſſaries required by the Law.

—For taking off the intended Duty of 1s. per lb. on Black and Singlo Teas conſumed in Great-Britain; and for granting a Drawback upon the Exportation of Tea to Ireland, and the Britiſh Dominions in America, for a limitted Time,—and to ſeveral other Bills.—But as the Parts in the following Papers relating to theſe laſt mentioned Bills are cut out, we know not whether they did really obtain the royal Aſſent or not; and we hear the Captain reports, and that private Letters in Town from England, adviſe, that the Bills againſt the Americans did not paſs;—we muſt refer our Readers to future Papers for more certain Intelligence, which we have not now Time to collect,—great Changes in the Miniſtry are mentioned in the Papers as likely to happen.

☞ Another Paper juſt come to Hand aſſures us, that the above Bills did certainly obtain the Royal Aſſent, on the 2d of July.

By a letter from London of the 13th of June we learn that the Bill for appointing a Board of Commiſſioners in America, has had a ſecond Reading in the houſe of Commons and paſſed to be ingroſſed:—That the Salaries for the Governor, Secretary, and Juſtices of the Superior Court, were ſettled at the Sums, formerly mentioned; and that the Juſtices of the Inferior Courts in the Colonies were alſo to have fix'd Salaries, the firſt Juſtice £ 300 ſterl. per Ann. and the others £ 100 each.

Letters from the interior Part, of Nova-Scotia, give us the moſt pleaſing Accounts of their fine Crops of Hay this Seaſon, and that the Proſpect of the approaching Harveſt for all kinds of Grain wears the moſt plentiful Appearance.

Tueſday night arrived here Capt. Cochran in a Snow from St. Chriſtophers, but laſt from Euſtatia. On the 9th Auguſt he met with very high Gales of Wind which carried away his Mainmaſt, and did him other Damage.

It is generally thought there has been a Hurricane at ſome of the Weſt-India Iſlands, as ſo many Veſſels have met with hard Gales on their Paſſages therefrom.

We hear from Newport, that on Wedneſday the 26th ult. at about 8 o'clock in the Evening, a large Brigantine, belonging to Meſſ. Evan and Francis Malbone, commanded by Capt. John Molbone, Son of ſaid Evan, bound in from Jamaica, with a Number of Paſſengers on board, took Fire between Point Judith and the Light Houſe, and with her Cargo totally conſumed, with five Paſſengers, being three Women and two Children, who were burnt in the Veſſels Cabbin. She was the fineſt Veſſel in the Colony, being 210 Tons, and built after the beſt Manner, and fully loaden with Rum, Sugar and Molaſſes, beſides Cotton, and Plate and Caſh on board, belonging to the Paſſengers. This melancholy Affair (as we are told) happened as follows, Supper being Set in the Cabbin, a Negro went to draw ſome Rum between Decks, where was a great Quantity:—The Rum took Fire from his Candle, which could not be extinguiſhed by their utmoſt Efforts: The Caſk ſoon burſt, and the Flame was inſtantly communicated to every Part of the Veſſel: Nothing remained but to ſave their Lives, and even that was attended with great Difficulty, altho' the Weather was good and the Sea ſmooth: They could not get out the Boat, but only two ſmall ones: and the Flame and Heat in and about the Cabbin was ſo intenſe, that with the greateſt Danger of their Lives, the Men got out of the Cabbin two Women, but could do no more for ſaving the Reſt in the Cabbin, altho' their Shrieks and Cries called for a helping Hand. They quitted the Veſſel and went on Shore: She burnt all Night and then ſunk in about 15 Fathoms of Water, and every Thing on board, even Money was loſt.—This is the ſhort account we have received: perhaps a more particular Detail of this ſorrowful Affair, will be publiſhed hereafter.

It is ſaid that one of the Paſſengers which periſhed, was Mrs. Hallam, who with ſeveral others were coming to the Continent from Jamaica, to join their Company of American Commedians: They had with them a Quantity of Plate, their Scenes Cloaths, &c. ——— which with the Value of Veſſel and Cargo, makes the Loſs to amount to about 7000 l. Sterling.

H A R T F O R D, September 7.

Laſt Week, David Campbel, and Alexander Pettigrew, were indicted before the Superior Court, ſitting in this Town, for breaking open, and robbing the Houſe of Mr. Abiel Abbot, of Windſor, of Two Watches, to which Indictment they both plead guilty, and were ſentenced each of them to receive 15 Stripes, to have their Right Ears cut off, and to be branded with a Capital Letter B on their Foreheads; which Puniſhment was inflicted on them laſt Friday. Pettigrew bled ſo much from the Amputation of his Ear, that his Life was in Danger.

Extract of a Letter from Marſeilles, May 21.

"Signior Romanzo, the Corſican courtier, has been among us theſe ſeven days paſt. The Duke de—— —having ſaid ſomething very impertinent againſt the Britiſh nation and particularly againſt a great perſonage the generous Corſican told him that the Britiſh were a nation of men, and their King the beſt Prince in Europe. He ſaid this with ſuch an emphaſis and ſo indignant a look, that the Duke thought proper to call him out, and they fought behind the ramparts. The Duke was ſeverely wounded, but Signior Romanzo eſcaped unhurt. This affair has done him great honour with every body, Ce'ſt un beau coup cela poer prendre conge, ſaid a colonel of the Gent d'Armes. M. Romanzo is preparing to embark, on his return to Corſica."

June 11. Laſt week a milkman was ſummoned for not paying his ſervant her wages. The gentleman who ſat in Court aſked him the reaſon why he would not pay the wages due to her? To which he made anſwer, ſhe would not get up in the morning. The girl then aſked if ſhe might be heard in her defence? which being granted, ſhe ſaid ſhe did not know what time her maſter expected her to get up in the morning, as ſhe was always up time enough to heat thirty-ſix quarts of water againſt her maſter brought home thirty quarts of milk to mix with it, and rub the ſides of the pails with ſoales to make the milk froth, as if juſt come from the cow; upon which the Court ordered Mr. Nick and Froth to pay the girl her wages, and diſmiſſed the cauſe to the ſatisfaction of all preſent.

We hear that conſiderable damage was done among the ſhipping below bridge this morning by the wind; a light collier ran a ſhore below Greenwich and was bulged ſeveral ſmall ſtars ſunk at their moorings.

From the Amſterdam Gazette of June 5. London, May 29. The agents of the colonies in America, had, a few days ago, ſeveral conferences with the King's miniſters, on the ſubject of the arraignments in agitation for maintaining the ſuperiority of the crown over its colonies. They received ſtrong aſſurances that nothing ſhall be neglected which can contribute to render them flouriſhing and happy; but that the Court and the P———t were firmly reſolved to ſupport, by all conſtitutional means, their juſt rights and privileges, &c. to ſecure the dependence of the ſaid colonies on Great Britain."

A Letter from Paris, dated June 8, ſays, "We have here an account that the Engliſh government are about to make an entire prohibition of blond lace, of the manufactory of this kingdom. The merchants and dealers in that article are likewiſe going to lay the ſame before the King's council here, in order to have a ſtop put to all kinds of hardware and worſted goods coming into France, from England."

June 18. We hear that the gentlemen & principal inhabitants of Cheſham, Bucks, did, in the Time of ſcarcity and diſtreſs, ſubſcribe a conſiderable ſum of money to ſupply eleven hundred and upwards of indigent and induſtrious poor, for ſeventeen weeks ſucceſſively, with a quartern loaf for each perſon at the price of 4d.]

A Letter from Devonſhire ſays, 'they have the greateſt appearance in that country, for the fineſt crop of corn for ſeveral years paſt, but a very bad one for fruit; that in ſeveral pariſhes they will not be able to make a hogſhead of cyder, or perry owing to the bloſſoms being deſtroyed by the windy and cold ſeaſon.

In a letter addreſſed to a miniſter on the ſubject of the Eaſt-India dividend, a certain great man who has been charged with being the author of a meaſure diſagreeable to ſome of the members of an opulent commercial company, is exculpated of the charge, as follows: "Your G———e has an example before our eyes; in him, who in our days has run the boldeſt career of honeſt ambition, ever grand in the formation of his projects, as well as bold in the execution; he ſcorns to employ public meaſures as the means of private gratification; and I will venture to ſay that in all his views, even the moſt unexceptionable, he never proceeded on conſiderations ſo trifling and ſelfiſh. They were ignorant indeed, of his character, who at firſt aſcribed the preſent meaſure to him. The public; in general are now ſatisfied of the part he took in it. Your G———e, at this time; alone enjoys the——of ſo——— an act."

In the abovementioned letter it is poſitively aſſerted, that "the Dutch have actually ſold out immenſe ſums, not chuſing to continue in our funds at a low intereſt, when their confidence in the faithful and exact payment is loſt. They prefer lodging their money at a higher rate with the French, ſince, if they are to be left at the diſcretion of the borrower, an abſolute Engliſh miniſter, is matter of little choice."

It is reported that the Hon. Hans Stanley, Eſq; is ſhortly to ſucceed Sir Joſeph Yorke, as his Majeſty ambaſſador to the Sates General.

[Remainder of the Piece begun in our laſt.]

11. WHY Mercury cauſes ſo great Diſturbances on a ſudden Conſtipation of the Pores by Cold?——Becauſe the Mercury is hereby prevented from paſſing off by Perſpiration, being greatly accumulated in thoſe ſmall Veſſels, and retarded in its Motion, by the coagulated Lymph (which by the Way, will be the Caſe, in Conſequence of the Cold) and here a Body being confined in the Veſſels, acting with ſuch Force as we have before ſhown this doth, muſt neceſſarily raiſe notable Tumults, as for Inſtance; in the looſe Parts, Tumefaction in the Body, Pains, Inflamation, and finally in all a Putrefaction of the Humors, a Deſtruction of the Veſſels, and an Extravaſation of their contained Fluids, and a whole Train of the moſt dire Symptoms, too many to be here enumerated.

12th. Why ſo apt to take Cold, in the Uſe of Mercury?

And this is principally owing to the Enlargement of the Pores, which is effected by ſo ponderous a Body paſſing ſwiftly and continually through them; which alſo undoubtedly abates of the muſcular Force of the Sphincters with which thoſe Veſſels are endowed, wearing their Sides thinner, and rendering them ſenſible to the Action of Acrimony, in which Manner Cold is ſuppoſed to act upon them; yet not being able to contract and prevent the frigorific Particles entering, they ſuffer themſelves to be wedged up by them, and the congealed Lymph.

13th. Why hard Meats are ſo detrimental in mercurial Courſes?

This at beſt making a groſs Chyle, laying a Load on the Veſſels, which at this Time they are poorly able to bear, for nature, like other Servants, knows not how to ſerve two Maſters; for while the whole muſcular Syſtem is employed to withſtand the violent Efforts of Mercury, it cannot be diverted in the Buſineſs of Digeſtion: Whence a crude Chyle, together with the morbid State of the Saliva, relaxing the Veſſels, obſtructing the Circulation and Perſpiration, and bringing the neceſſary ill Conſequences which before have been enumerated to follow from theſe Particulars.

14th and laſtly. Why Mercury is capable of anſwering many excellent Purpoſes, in the Hands of the ſkilful and prudent? And why ſo dangerous an Inſtrument in the Hands of the ignorant Pretender?

This needs not much Explanation, as many of the good Purpoſes that may be anſwered, have already been pointed out, to which many more might be added:—And if what is here delivered be true, it is apparent, that a Man deſtitute of the Knowledge of the Structure & Organization of the Human Body, the Circulation of the Blood, mechanical Powers, and chemical Analyſis of Medicine, undertaking to preſcribe ſuch a Medicine as this, is like the Mad-man, who caſts Firebrands, Arrows and Death, and ſaith, Am not I in Sport? For it is evident at firſt Bluſh, that a Medicine that is capable of producing the greateſt Changes, and effecting the greateſt Cures, muſt alſo be capable of doing the greateſt Miſchiefs, when miſapplied. But we have before ſhewn, that Mercury is capable of producing the greateſt Changes——and I would beg Leave here to ſubjoin a Declaration of the immortal *Boerhaave "That Mercury "alone cures one third Part of Diſeaſes"—Therefore, when this Medicine falls into the Hands of the above deſcribed Ignoramus's, it is altogether Chance if they don't kill more than they cure therewith. But from the ill Effects of thoſe Intruders may the good Lord deliver us!

GENEROSISIMI AUDITORS.

AT the Requeſt of this worthy Congreſs, give me Leave to interrupt your better Amuſements by a conciſe, unpoliſhed and very ſuperficial Diſcant upon the MEDICAL ART, and upon that which is of the greateſt Importance to the Profeſſors of it, UNANIMITY, CONCORD, and GOOD AGREEMENT.

Sed quo me Vertam, quod Dicam. Ubi Incipere Neſcio.

SHOULD I attempt to range the Field of Nature—thence to trace Diſeaſes; the Taſk would be unequal, the Theme too ſublime, far too ſublime for my juvenile Capacity.---Or, ſhould I attempt a Treatiſe upon the Object of Phyſic, thereby to inculcate the Neceſſity, Uſefulneſs and Dignity of this Art; this has already been done by abler Pens, and is what Mankind have ſufficiently experienced for many Ages, tho' in its State [illegible]tile.

WHEREFORE, with the greateſt Submiſſion to your Candor and Generoſity, ſhall juſt touch upon natural Philoſophy, the grand Baſis of true medical Knowledge, and which (in my humble Opinion) is the moſt neceſſary Acquirement, for a truly worthy and accompliſhed Æſculapian, as it contains in it the Science, or Knowledge of the Nature, Cauſes, Properties and Effects of Matter; the Laws by which it is governed and regulated; the Attraction of Gravitation and Coheſian in particular; and that in Proportion to the coheſive Quality of the Particles, is the Gravity, et Vice Verſa. Hence ariſes the Solidity and Texture of the ſame. Should we be a little more critical in our Enquiry, and ſubdivide Matter into two Claſſes, that of Solids and Fluids, we naturally derive an adequate Idea of the Circulation of the Fluids of the Human Body, as performed by the Gravity of the Fluid and Elaſticity of the Fibre: And by taking but a ſlighty View of that Branch of natural Philoſophy termed Pneumatology, and conſider the Denſity and Rarity of that homogeneous Fluid that compoſes our Atmoſphere, a philoſophic Reaſon readily occurs to the Mind of many of thoſe ſurprizing Changes that frequently, and almoſt interchangeably take Place in this natural Syſtem, and upon the human Fabric in Particular, the moſt delicate Part of the animal Creation.—For by the Denſity of the Air, both ſenſible and inſenſible Perſpiration are wholly, or in Part obſtructed; the moſt conducive to Health, the Elaſticity of the Fibres increaſed, the Momentum of the Fluids augmented, and in Conſequence, a Lentor ſui Generis. By the Rarity, a univerſal Relaxation of the whole nervous Syſtem, an increaſed Perſpiration, a languid Circulation, and a Lentor ſui Generis Enſues: By either of which Cauſes, that Equilibrium between the Solids and Fluids in which (philoſophically ſpeaking) true Health conſiſts, is deſtroyed, and Deſeaſes thence ariſe, according to the different State of the Solids and Fluids in particular Habits previous thereto. Here Gentlemen, a large Field diſcloſes to our View; many Cauſes ariſing from the different and immoderate Uſe of the Non naturals might be enumerated; but, as I deſign Brevity, I beg Leave to wave them; only keeping this in View, that the Properties and different Qualities of the Particles of Matter, and their Effects upon each other, are a ſure Clue to guide us in the Footſteps of Nature, by which we may not only be led into the Knowledge of Diſeaſes, by the Symptoms, but into the Methodus Medendi, as comprehended both in the Galenical and Chemical Methods, conſiſting of Medicines, not only of the vegetable, but of the animal and mineral Kingdoms, ſuited to almoſt infinite Purpoſes in the healing Art.

AND, Gentlemen, ſince you have pleaſed to confer ſo great an Honor upon me (who am but a Youth) as to admit me as a Member of this medical Body; indulge me the Freedom to addreſs you as Brethren. Since many Ages are elapſed, the beſt Methods improved to bring this Art to its preſent Perfection, what is of greater Moment and Importance to Mankind, than that we vigorouſly purſue the preſent Method? That Friendſhip, Harmony and good Agreement ſubſiſt among us; that we are conſtant in our Attendence upon every Convention; that we ever act upon the higheſt and ſtricteſt Principles of Honor, Truth and Fidelity towards each other, and that we exert every Faculty for the Improvement of each other, which are true Indices of a generous and noble Principle. Let us baniſh from our Breaſts thoſe low-liv'd, [illegible] and contracted Notions of Noſtrums and Arcana's, the very Support of Ignorance and Empiriciſm, by which Thouſands have been (as it were) butchered, and are now blended with the common Duſt!—The Growth of Phyſic and of this Society in Particular, depends upon the Conduct of each individual Member. The Excellency of this Method, is very conſpicuous in that lively and very inſtructive Diſſertation juſt pronounced, and ſtill further appears in the Method of examining Candidates for the Practiſe of Phyſic and Surgery. Should there be any preſent, I beg them to ſtep forth——

SIR,

I BID you heartily welcome, truſting you are not altogether inſenſible how important the Buſineſs, how arduous the Taſk you now are about to aſſume, for future Action in Life. Permit me to tell you, you have (as it were) taſted the Sweets, and now are entering a Scene of Trouble, complicated Perplexities and Fatigue, where you'll daily be expoſed to the licentious Wrongs of Judgments raſh, & Scourge of Sanderous Tongues. And ſhould you (after a ſtrict Enquiry into your Knowledge of Philoſophy, the Theory and Practice of Phyſic and Surgery) be admitted this Society, don't flatter yourſelf the Work is accompliſhed, but let me earneſtly recommend an intenſe Application to Books every leiſure Moment; a free Converſe with Men of Letters, by which that Fund of Knowledge will be increaſed, the Proſpect grow more extenſive, this infant Society nouriſhed; 'til advancing ſlowly, by ſmall Improvements, ſhe arrive to full Maturity.

GENTLEMEN SPECTATORS,

I RELY upon your Goodneſs and Generoſity for Pardon in my Addreſs, in juſt reminding you of your Obligations in this Reſpect. You can't but be ſenſible how great the Ignorance in the healing Art, and the Growth of it this preſent Day, which calls for ſome Method to prevent the ſame. Then, how great the Neceſſity of the Inhabitants of America, Connecticut, this County in particular, in its infant State, that ſome Way or other it ſhould be ſuppreſs'd! Many Expedients, you are ſenſible, have been attempted, but proved abortive; the preſent is hoped and wiſhed Succeſs. And as you value and eſteem Health, and the Growth of Phyſic (the greateſt Bleſſings to Mankind) neglect the Impoſtor, the Empiric, and the falſe Pretender, and every One that ſlights ſo laudable a Method; his Practiſe beſpeaks Ignorance, or a low, contracted Principle, and declares him an Enemy to himſelf, and to all Mankind. Neglect, did I ſay? I recal the Expreſſion, as there are undoubtedly a Number of reputable Phyſicians within the Limits of this County, who have not (as yet) entered this Medical Corporation: Far be it from me, to caſt any the leaſt Contempt or Reproach upon worthy Gentlemen of the Faculty; I mean to include thoſe only who openly declare their Diſtaſte to ſo glorious a Scheme (if I may be allowed the Expreſſion) and who are known (by a Series of Inſtances) to be trifling with Men's Lives, only for the Sake of the Title of Doctor, and thereby to gain a ſmall, tho' a very undeſerved Subſiſtance; whereby Gentlemen of Merit, have been, and are ſtill brought in the greateſt Contempt and Diſrepute. View but the Man (whether obtained by a liberal Education or a cloſer Application of his more ſprightly Genius) that has ſpent his Youth, his Fortune in Nature's Lap, and has (as it were) rifled her of all her Charms, and gay Attire, for the Good of Mankind—I ſay, view his Character, as a Gentleman, Scholar, and Phyſician: Him improve, not only for your own Safety and Advantage, but for the Encouragement of true medical Knowle[illegible] and for the Diſcouraging and eradicating th[illegible] baſe-born Sons of Infamy. And let Us join Hand and Heart, in a Cauſe ſo Glorious; live and act open, generous and free.

To the PRINTER.

CIVIL Society reſults from the Neceſſity of our Natures;—and civil Government from a State of civil Society; and in no Government do a People conceive themſelves ſo perfectly free, as that wherein they are their own Governors.

To be governed by no Laws but thoſe of their own making, either by themſelves, or by their Repreſentatives aſſembled—to be ſubject to no Rulers but thoſe of their own electing, is in the View of the Populace, the Perfection of civil Liberty. And the Springs of Government, in every ſuch State, is the Virtue of the People—and the Principle of that Virtue is, that though they are Subjects, it is for their Good, and to none but themſelves, that the Government they are under, is the Baſis of their Happineſs. To corrupt the Principle of their Virtue, is to demoliſh the Pillars of Government, and bury joyful Liberty in its Ruins; And to have perfect Liberty is to have perfect Security of Property; and Security of Property conſiſts in forming the beſt Laws to regulate and protect it, and in eſtabliſhing proper Tribunals to which the Subject may freely reſort, and have a Remedy, where he hath a Right to be redreſſed wherein he is wronged.——And as all human Tribunals are conſtituted of fallible Men, it is neceſſary that there be a Subordination of Judicatures eſtabliſhed, that Matters of great Moment may be removed by Appeal, or otherwiſe, from the Inferior to the Superior Courts, to be re-conſidered, and re-judged by other and ſuperior Judges.

Query, then, What has the Subject more than the Shadow without the Subſtance—the Expence & Burden without the Advantage, where the Judges of the ſupreme and ſubordinate Courts are the ſame Men, it not being the Office, but the Man that examines, deliberates, and adjudicates? Is not this depriving the Subject of the Advantage of having his Cauſe tried at different Times, by different and ſuperior Judges—and, in Lieu of it, giving him only the Expence and Burden of having his Cauſe tried at different Times, by the ſame Judges?

An Objection, I am aware, is ready —Quando duo Jura Concurrunt in una perſona idem eſt ac ſi eſſent in diverſis—but whether it may, or may not be ſtrictly lawful, I leave to the Learned in the Law to ſay——it is enough that I aſk, Is it for the Good of the Public?—Is it not dangerous to Poſterity?—Adopt this Principle without Limitation, and what are all the boaſted Advantages of our happy Conſtitution more than that of an elective Monerchy? Yea, much leſs, the ſame Hand that makes the Law, is alſo a Solicitor of Cauſes, & a Judge. Query, if a Man can ſerve two Maſters?

June 16. Wedneſday laſt, the following extraordinary affair happened at Craven hill, near Kingſton Gravel pits. An elderly gentlewoman who liv'd with her daughter, dreamed on Tueſday night that ſhe was dead; on riſing next morning, ſhe communicated the ſame to the ſervant that attended her, and to the reſt of the family, with certain aſſurance that ſhe had not long to ſtay in this world, although then as well and hearty as for years paſt; but on her ſon's going out of the room, ſhe called him to ſtay, or he would not any more ſee her alive; where, on his returning, ſhe inſtantly dropped down and expired immediately.

The following is his Majeſty's moſt gracious SPEECH, made on Friday the 4th of July to both Houſes of Parliament.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"THE advanced Seaſon of the Year, joined to the Inconvenience you muſt all have felt from ſo long an Abſence from your ſeveral Counties, calls upon me to put an end to the preſent Seſſion of Parliament; which I cannot do without returning you my Thanks for your diligent Application to the public Buſineſs, and the Proofs you have given of your Affection for me, for my Family, and for my Government: And tho' from the Nature and Extenſiveneſs of the ſeveral Objects under your Conſideration, it could not be expected that all the great cammercial Intereſts ſhould be compleatly adjuſted and regulated in the Courſe of this Seſſion, yet I am perſuaded, that, by the Progreſs you have made, a ſolid Foundation is laid for ſecuring the moſt conſiderable and eſſential Benefits to this Nation.

"As no material Alteration has happened in the State of Foreign Affairs ſince your firſt Meeting, I have nothing to communicate to you on that Subject. The fixed Objects of all my Meaſures are to preſerve the Peace, and, at the ſame Time to aſſert and maintain the Honor of my Crown, and the juſt Rights of my Subjects.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

"I thank you for the neceſſary Supplies which you have ſo chearfully granted for the publick Service; and my particular Acknowledgments are due to you, for the Proviſion you have enabled me to make for the more honoroble Support and Maintenance of my Family.

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

"The great Attention which you have ſhewn to the particular Purpoſe for which I called you ſo early together, and the very wholſome Laws paſſed for relieving my Subjects from the immediate Diſtreſs which the great Scarcity of Corn threatened to bring upon them, give me the moſt ſenſible Pleaſure. I rely upon you for the Exertion of your utmoſt Endeavours to convince my People that no Care has been wanting to procure for them every Relief which has been poſſible; and that their grateful Senſe of Proviſions ſo wiſely made for their Happineſs and laſting Proſperity cannot be ſo fully expreſſed as by a ſtrict Obſervance of that Order and Regularity which are equally neceſſary to the Security of all good Government, as well as to their own real Welfare."

PHILADELPHIA, Auguſt 31.

Laſt monday, between three and four o'clock in the afternoon, a woman was robbed, near Buſh-hill, on the road to Schuylkill, by two ſoldiers, who came behind her when one of them held his hands over her eyes, while the other rifled her pockets; from whence they took two ſix pound Jerſey bills; alſo a large pair of ſquare carved ſilver buckles from her ſhoes.

Mr. James Barclay, of Warwick Townſhip, in Bucks County, gives us a very ſtriking inſtance of the uncertainty of human life, in an affecting narrative of the ſudden deaths of Mr. Robert Stewart, of that townſhip, and his three ſons, Joſeph, John and Benjamin, which happened after the following ſurprizing manner, viz. Mr. R. Stewart, having a well, near his houſe, about 30 foot deep, that in ſummer was uſually dry; he employed a well digger, on Saturday the 22d inſt. to ſink it deeper, who, after working in it ſome time, told his employer it was ſo damp and unwholeſome that he could not continue the work. Upon this a fire was kindled at the bottom, in order to prepare it for another trial on Monday. Whether this fire continued burning appears uncertain. But on Monday morning about ſun-riſe, Mr. Stewart, accompanied by ſeveral of his children, ſons and daughters, went to the well, when Joſeph, a young lad, was ſent down (by a ladder) to ſee if the fire was perfectly extinguiſhed. The unhappy youth had ſcarcely reached the bottom before he was ſtruck motionleſs by a noxious vapour, and as it was imagined by thoſe above that he had fallen by a miſ-ſtep, John went immediately to his aſſiſtance, and taking his then life-leſs body in his arms, in order to carry him up, he was himſelf ſtruck in like manner, and had not the power to ſave either his brother or himſelf. The father thinking that Joſeph was hurt by a fall, and that John was unable to git him up, went haſtily down to them, and taking hold of the former, then claſped in the arms of the latter, he was likewiſe inſtantaneouſly affected; and, in a ſhort ſpace, they all fell dead together. Benjamin. (who with his ſiſters above, was beholding the diſtreſsful ſcene, and judging the true cauſe) in the anxiety of his mind, reſolved to go to the relief of his unfortunate father and brothers. His filial and fraternal affection were ſo great, that no entreaties could ſwerve him from his purpoſe. He told his mother and ſiſters that he would take a bottle of camphire, which was given him to make uſe of, as occaſion ſhould require, and that the moment he felt any thing unuſual from the Place, he would leave it. The unfortunate young man deſcended, and ſoon met with the ſame deplorable fate. The neighbours were by this time aſſembled; and two, who arrived firſt, attempted to go down, with ropes tied round their bodies, but they were quickly obliged to return for the preſervation of their lives. Mr. Benjamin Snodgraſs, a brother in law to Mr. Stewart, ſenior fixing a rope round his body, alſo went down, where he tried to diſengage the well rope from under the dead bodies, but being unable to do it, he took a knife from his pocket and cut it; and as he was about to fix it round one of the bodies, he gave a ſignal to be drawn up, being then on the verge of death; and it was with great difficulty his life was ſaved. To render this mans preſervation the more extraordinary, it ſeems, that within a few feet of the mouth of the well, the rope ſlipt from his body, and he was held for ſome time by his arms. So that it may with propriety be ſaid, that "his life hung ſuſpended by a thread." After this the well digger went down, but he had hardly fixed the rope round Benjamin, before he was perceived to catch at the ladder, whereupon he was drawn up, almoſt dead. The father and his three ſons were, however, ſoon taken up, and all poſſible means were uſed to revive them, but in vain. The ſhaft of death was ſped! and they were all interred the next day, in one grave, near Neſhaminey Meeting-Houſe. Mr. Stewart has left, beſides his wife, one ſon and five daughters to lament the fatal cataſtrophe.——He was about 50 years of age John 24, Benjamin 21, and Joſeph between 13 and 14.

Charleſtown, South Carolina.

Auguſt 3. The gang of villains from Virginia and North-Carolina, who have for ſome years paſt, in ſmall parties, under particular leaders, infeſted the back parts of the ſouthern provinces, ſtealing horſes from one and ſelling them in the next, notwithſtanding the late publick examples made of ſome of them, we hear, are more formidable than ever as to numbers, and more audacious, and cruel in their thefts and outrages. It is reported that they conſiſt of more than 200, form a chain of communication with each other, and have places of general meeting, where (in imitation of councils of war) they form plans of operation and defence, and (alluding to their ſecrecy and fidelity to each other) call thoſe places free-maſons lodges.——Inſtances of their cruelty to the people in the back-ſettlements, whom they rob or otherwiſe abuſe, are ſo numerous and ſhocking, that a narrative of them would fill a whole gazette, and every reader with horror. They at preſent range in the Forks between Broad, Saluda, and Savannah-rivers. Two of the gang were hanged laſt week at Savannah, viz. Lundy Huſt, and Obadiah Greenage. Two others, James Ferguſon and Jeſſe Hamberſam, were killed, when thoſe were taken.

Laſt Thurſday evening, one Sullivan, a ſhip carpenter, was ſhot thro' the body and kill'd on the ſpot, on the high road, about half a mile without the town, by one Floyd, a clock-maker. The jury of inqueſt brought it in willful murder, and Floyd is committed to jail.

NEWYORK, September 3.

Monday laſt an Egg-Harbour Sloop, one Hoſier Maſter, as they lay along Side of the Wharf near the Albany Pier, was robbed; The Maſter's Cheſt, wherein was about £. 150 in Caſh, beſides his Cloaths, being taken out of the Cabin, while he and another lay aſleep in it, and carried on to the Wharf to a ſmall Diſtance from the Veſſel, where the Cheſt was found the next Morning broke open, and every Thing taken out of it: Great Search and Enquiry was made all the next Day, to no Purpoſe.— The next Afternoon, a Man at work on board a Veſſel lying near the Egg-Harbor-Man, miſſed ſome Money out of his Pocket, and his Suſpicions fell upon one Norton, a Hand belonging to Hoſier, whereupon he had him apprehended, and examined, and finding his Suſpicions too much confirmed, he had Norton committed to Goal:—On Wedneſday Morning, Norton offered to confeſs; whereupon being brought before a Magiſtrate again, he owned the Robbery of the Sloop, and ſaid he had hid the Money in one of the Wharfs but had thrown the Cloaths into the River upon which the Wharf being ſearched in the Place where he ſaid he had hid it, the Money was happily found, but nothing of the Cloaths to be ſeen:—Norton then empeached another as an Accomplice, & ſaid the Cloaths were hid alſo, but on ſearching the Place, none could be found; whereupon both he and the Accomplice were committed to Goal.

BOSTON, Sept. 3.

Capt. Clark in a Sloop from this Port bound to North Carolina, about the 10th ultimo, met with a terrible Gale of Wind, which oblig'd him to cut away his Maſt, and was in great Danger of Sinking but was happily met with by Capt. Doane, in a Whaling Sloop bound in, who took him and all his People on board, & arrived here laſt Week.

MONDAY, September 21, 1767. NUMBER 14

THE

Printed by THOMAS GREEN, in HARTFORD.

CORTE, (Eaſt Lon. 9. 30. Lat. 41. 50. a Town of Corſica, ſituated near the Middle of the Iſland, 40 Miles S. of Baſtia.) June 1.

AN expreſs and ſeveral officers are arrived from Capraia, with advice that the fortreſs capitulated on the 29th paſt, at evening, and next morning was put into the hands of the beſiegers. Leave was given to commiſſary Bernard Ottone, who commanded there in chief, to embark with the garriſon to Genoa, or any other part of the Genoeſe territories, and the enemy's officers have been treated with politeneſs, and dined at the ſame table with thoſe of Corſica. M. Ottone immediately wrote a letter to the Senator Pinelli, acquainting him with the capitulation, and deſiring him to ſend a veſſel to take the garriſon on board. In conſequence of this, a pink arrived on the 31ſt, and M. Ottone with ſome attendants embarked. As ſoon as they were on board, a gale of wind aroſe, and the ſhip was obliged to put to ſea: The reſt of the garriſon are ſtill on ſhore, waiting for another veſſel.

The fortreſs had been defended for 102 days, with no other ſuſtenance for 80 people than bread and water. There were found in it eleven pieces of braſs beſides other ordnance, two barrels of cartouches for the muſquetry, two barrels of powder, ſeveral ſmall arms, and a great number of bullets.

LONDON, June 20.

They write from Barbadoes, that the Prince de Rohan commander in chief of the French Iſlands had fitted out ſeveral frigates of war to cruize againſt all merchant ſhips of his own nation, who ſhall attempt to trade to any of the adjacent Engliſh ſettlements.

We are credily informed that his Excellency the Earl of Rochfort, his Majeſty's Ambaſſador Extraordinary to the Court of France, is daily expected in town from Paris. Some ſay he comes to tranſact private buſineſs of his own; others ſay his lordſhip was ſent for, in order to be appointed one of his Majeſty's principal Secretaries of State.

They write from Paris, that a girl of ſeventeen years old, has the power of throwing herſelf into a trance at pleaſure, during which ſhe has actually been known, in preſence of ſeveral witneſſes, to remain inſenſible to the application of hot iron, to different parts of the body.

June 22. It is confidently reported the Earl of Chatham will attend the Houſe of Peers before the riſe of parliament.

We hear that Meir Jaffier, who lately died in the Eaſt-Indies, has left to Lord Clleve, rupees to the value of 120,000l. ſterling; on which his lordſhip ſummoned a council for their opinion, whether that money properly belonged to the company or himſelf; when they determined, that it was his lordſhip's ſole right; whereupon his lordſhip took poſſeſſion of it, but immediately after generouſly ſettled the whole of it on the widows and orphans of thoſe officers and ſoldiers who loſt their lives on the ſervice.

It was obſervable laſt winter, that the eldeſt ſon of almoſt every duke in France were in London; when formerly nothing could tempt a Frenchman beyond Calais, except an ambaſſador's train.

The city of Dublin has offered a bounty of two ſhillings a barrel, for the firſt 5000 barrels of wheat imported into that metropolis.

We are aſſured, by a gentleman of varacity, who arrived in town laſt week, from Belleiſle, that the French have already fitted out there, and in the river Villaine, upwards of 200 veſſels, to be employed this year, in the Newfoundland Cod-fiſhery.

By accounts lately arrived in the Prince Frederic, we are credibly informed, that the new iſlands near the ſtreights of Magellan, were, the laſt ſummer, very fruitful in peaſe, beans, turnips, potatoes, &c. &c. the ſeed of which had been ſown by the [illegible] of the men of war ſtationed at Port Egmont, which was diſcovered by the Dolphin in her laſt voyage, and ſaid to be as ſafe and commodious a harbour as any in the world. That the corn was in the ear when they left that place, which was in January laſt, anſwering to our July, the iſland lying in nearly the ſame parallel with London, in the ſouthern hemiſphere. The Land being without trees, care had been taken to get a large number tranſported from the ſtreights, ſo that with proper management and induſtry, it is hoped they will one day turn out of the utmoſt uſe. Theſe are the iſlands which ſome have repreſented to be ſo ſteril, as not to produce any kind of vegetables! Had Commodore Anſon, in his voyge round Cape Horn, known of this port, there is not the leaſt doubt but his whole fleet might have gone into the South Seas in good condition.

It is ſaid, that all teas, ſeized and condemned for being illegally imported, will not be ſold for home conſumption as uſual, but be exported to Ireland and the colonies: and it is further ſaid, ſuch exports will be allowed in ſmaller quantities than heretofore.

It is reported, that the value of the cargoes of the Eaſt India Company's ſhips, that have arrived in the courſe of the preſent year, is upwards of five millions ſterling.

June 24. Some politicians begin to think, that in caſe the courts of Vienna, Paris, & Madrid, ſhould pay any regard to the See of Rome againſt the diſſidents in Poland, a general war in Poland would probably take Place, as the five great Powers who have already declared in their favour as guarantees of the treaty of Oliva, would exert their force in favour of ſuch declaration.

June 25. The reports of a change in the miniſtry continue, and the laſt were, that Mr. Conway was to return to the army; Lord Briſtol to be ſecretary of ſtate; the Duke of Grafton to go to Ireland; & Mr. Charles Townſhend, to be both firſt Lord of the Treaſury and Chanceller of the Exchequer.

A few days ſince one Ann Ward, aged 70, was married to a young fellow of 22. The bride had ſaved upwards of 900l. with which her huſband went off early next morning, and has not been heard of ſince.

We hear the merchants of Briſtol, Liverpool, and White haven, laſt week ſent orders for ſome thouſand quarters of corn to be imported from North-America.

We hear from Liſbon, that Mr. Hay, the Britiſh Envoy, had preſented a memorial to the King againſt the inconveniencies the Engliſh now labour under by the preſent laws of Portugal, which prohibit exportaion of ſpecie; in conſequence of which the above reſtriction had already been in part removed.

They write from Jamaica, that a great many merchants on account of the decay of trade, and ſcarcity of ſpecie; had already gone down to ſettle at Muſquito ſhore, where the Engliſh ſettlements were in a thriving condition.

A report prevails that the Earl of Northumberland will be appointed ambaſſador, at Paris, in the room of the Earl of Rotchfort.

A ſettlement of a capital nature 'tis ſaid is intended for the borders of the Miſſiſippi, and the agents are already very buſy in collecting reſidents.

They write from Rochfort, that the Dauphin, a ſecond rate ſhip of war, pierced to mount 90 guns, would be ready to launch there by the middle of September next.

June 26. By a gentlemen juſt arrived from Scotland, we are informed, that at Edinburgh & other places they are at preſent greatly agitated by the near approach of the determination of the Douglaſs great cauſe, and betts are nearly on an equality that ſeveral ſhort hand gentlemen are arrived from London to take down the debates, for which they are to be paid from 300 to 500 guineas each perſon; and that moſt of the nobility and perſons of diſtinction in that Kingdom were come to Edinburgh to be preſent at the debates.

LONDON, July 4.

The great talk of a change in the Miniſtry will end in the opinion of many of our politicians, in nothing but talk.

On the other hand it is too notorious to be contradicted, that there has been a violent agitation among the members of the adminiſtration, within this week paſt. Whatever latent cauſe may have put them into ſuch a manifeſt troubled motion, a few days we think, will determine whether a total and laſting calm is to ſucceed or not.

July 7. It is now confidently ſaid that his Grace the Duke of Richmond will be appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

Friday afternoon the lady of the Hon. Col. Fitzroy, brother to the Duke of Grafton, was ſafely delivered of a Daughter, at his Houſe near Mary-Fair.

This morning ſome diſpatches of importance were ſaid to be received from the Governor of Boſton.

It has been thought, and ſtill is ſuppoſed by many, that a new parliament will precede the next ſeſſions; but we hear the contrary is determined upon.

On Sunday laſt a young divine preached for the firſt time in Mr. Whitefieldd's meeting in Tottenham-court-road: he is reckoned among the firſt claſs of orators at preſent in this metropolis.

They adviſe from Hamburgh, that a great number of Saltſburghers were preparing to embark on board an Engliſh ſhip in the Elbe, for the new Britiſh ſettlements in America.

"The aggonizing ſtate of this country muſt naturally produce convulſions ſo long as there remain the leaſt exiſtence of the antient conſtitution, or that ſome alteration in the preſent meaſures takes place. The Inhabitants of the Tercera iſlands, diſpleaſed with the eſtabliſhment of a new tribunal of Relaſam amongſt them, by the ſupport of a regiment ſent ſome time ago from Oporto, have publicly declared againſt that new eſtabliſhment, and a riot having enſued, the gov. it is ſaid was killed; mean while the inhabitants, though Portugueſe, and deſiring to continue under the Portugueſe ſubjection, have had recourſe to arms, proteſting that they will rather ſuffer death than ſubmit to ſo groſs an impoſition on their liberties.

"Two men of war, and ſeveral tranſports are preparing to take in a number of land-forces ſufficient to inforce an obſervance of the firſt orders of the court, and to puniſh ſeverely all thoſe iſlanders that had oppoſed them. So continual a ſeries of unfortunate events muſt undoutedly have proved afflicting in the higheſt degree to the R——l mind of his moſt F——l Majeſty; but the eaſineſs with which they have been hitherto ſtifled, as it has been thought by the wiſdom of the Prime Miniſter, who has hitherto calmed his vexations ſo naturally; the predelection which his M——y has ever ſhewed towards him has encreaſed; and the arrival of every bad piece of news may be ſaid to have confirmed him ſtill ſtronger than before in the good graces of his maſter; nay even our very differences with England, whereof the demands are of ſuch a nature as will be complied with, yet, by the manner in which they are urged, ſeem to imply danger from a refuſal, have nevertheleſs produced ſuch a favorable effect in favor of the count that his M——y, in reward for the extraordinary talents, it is ſaid he has already ſhown in the management of that affair would have raiſed him to the high degree of Duke of the moſt noble and antient title of Aveiro, but the cautious favorite, thinking, perhaps, that a leſs ſignal diſtinction would be more durable to his poſterity, has deſired that the R——l bounty may, for the preſent, be confined to the creating him and his heirs forever, Marquis of Caſcaco, and for which, it is ſaid, there is accordingly a patent making out."

July 6. They write from Liſbon, that the Portugueſe Governor of Tercera has been ordered home to anſwer his conduct, which was ſaid to have greatly exceeded his commiſſion.

Letters from Liſbon of the 2d ult. confirm the account of the inhabitants of Tercera having revolted againſt the new Governor; and add, that ſome ſhips are equipping and arming to take troops on board, in order to quell the inſurgents.

How many examples for our ſafety and welfare are every where ſurrounding us? Do not the Dutch point out the herring-fiſhery, that noble Gift of Providence, deſigned for the plenty and protection of this iſle? What a nurſery would it be for ſeamen? What a relief to our poor, at ſea and on ſhore, in net-making, &c. and what a national revenue would it bring in, as well to us as the Dutch, were it but ſpiritedly followed?——The herring, cod, and whale fiſheries would afford the nation a ſurer and greater ballance in trade, than all the commerce of Europe does at preſent. Great-Britain is as a great merchant, and where ſhe cannot vend her commodities in one place ſhe ought to find out another, and be conſtantly induſtrious for the Support of her inhabitants. From ſome unhappy differences between the mother country and her colonies, it is plain the demands for our manufactures have ceaſed: Let us, until this diſagreable bar is removed, ſtrenuouſly encourage our fiſheries to the utmoſt extent, and even ſhare thoſe riches of our own with the Dutch, that have afforded them more wealth and ſafety than all their mighty Eaſt India commerce has done, and can of all things under the ſun, come the neareſt to be an equivalent to this nation for the apparent decay of our plantation trade.

Yeſterday there was a great council at St. James's, to which it is ſaid, no leſs than one hundred and ſix members of the Privy Council were ſummoned to attend.

It was reported at Paris, when the laſt Letters came from thence, that the catholic cantons of Swiſſerland had taken the reſolution to baniſh the Jeſuits from their country, and particularly from Lucerne.

All the perſons who have taken upon them to appear as partiſans of that ſociety have been immediately puniſhed. The vicar-general of this city, and ſecular prieſt, who, by his order tranſlated into Spaniſh, The Apology of the Jeſuits baniſhed from France, are juſt baniſhed 50 leagues from this capital, and one of the friends of the latter had been fined fifty ducats for explaining ſome words in that apology which the tranſlator did not perfectly underſtand.

By a letter dated the firſt of Dec. laſt, from a Gentleman who was on board the Falmouth Eaſt-Indiaman when ſhe was ſtruck with lightning, we are informed, that they were afterwards wrecked in the mouth of the Ganges; and of 360 men, which they carried from England, there are only about 160 now alive at Calcutta, the reſt being either killed by the lightning, burnt in the ſhip, drowned, devoured by tygars when they got aſhore, or died of fatigue.

Extract of a Letter from Bruſſels, dated June 27.

"An edict of the Empreſs Queen has juſt made its appearance here, prohibiting the admiſſion into this country of any of the Jeſuits expelled from Spain, or exiled from France; it matters not whether they are ſubjects by birth, of her imperial Majeſty or not, if they wear the Habit of their Order."

July 7. We are informed, that orders are given for proper liſts to be made out againſt next ſeſſion of parliament of all the Papiſts, or that are reputed as ſuch, in the reſpective dioceſes out the Kingdom.

July 14. The Earl of Chatham, who has been dangerouſly ill at North-End, is now tho't to be in a fair way of recovery.

BOSTON, Sept. 10.

Tueſday Morning laſt between the Hours of III & IV a Fire broke out in a Joiner's Shop in Beer-Lane at the North Part of the Town, which conſumed the ſaid Shop, as alſo a Whiteſmith's and a Tallow-Chandler's adjoining: The Cupola of the New-Brick Meeting-Houſe (ſo called) catch'd on Fire in ſeveral Places, but by the Dexterity of ſome of the Inhabitants, and it providentially being calm Weather, that Edifice, and the Houſes in the Neighbourhood, which conſiſted of many wooden Buildings, were preſerved from Deſtruction.

NEWPORT, September 14.

DRINKING TO EXCESS corrected.

KAMHI, Emperor of China, was always careful to have his table ſerved with European wines. Having one day ordered a Mandarin, his moſt faithful favorite, to drink with him: the Prince got drunk, and afterwards fell into a profound ſleep. The Mandarin, dreaded the conſequence of this intemperance, paſſed into the Eunuch's lodge, and told them that the Emperor was drunk; that it was to be feared he might contract the habit of drinking to exceſs; that wine would ſtill more irritate his humour, which was already too violent; and that, in this ſtate, he would not even ſpare his deareſt favorites. To remedy ſo great an evil, added the Mandarin, you muſt load me with chains, and put me into a dungeon, as if the order came from the Emperor. The Eunuch approved this motion for their own intereſt. The Prince ſurpriſed to find himſelf alone at waking, aſked what became of his table companion? He was anſwered, that having had the miſfortune to diſpleaſe his Majeſty, he was led by his orders into a cloſe priſon, where he was to be put to death. The Monarch appeared for ſome time loſt in thought, and at length gave orders for the Mandarin to be brought before him. He appeared loaded with irons, and threw himſelf at his maſter's feet as a criminal waiting the ſentence of his death. What brought thee into that condition, ſaid the Prince to him? What crime haſt thou committed? I am ignorant of my crime anſwered the Mandarin; all I know is, that your Majeſty had commanded me to be thrown into a dark priſon, and there be delivered over to death. The Emperor became more thoughtful than before, appeared ſurprized and troubled. At laſt, imputing to the fumes of drunkeneſs a violence which he retained not the leaſt remembrance of, he had the Mandarin's irons ſtruck off, and it was obſerved that he ever afterwards avoided an exceſs in wine.

The GHOST. A TALE.

FAR in the weſt there liv'd of old,
An honeſt Yeoman, rich and bold,
Merry his heart as heart could be,
His ſoul quite open, gen'rous, free,
Hearty he was in all he ſpoke,
And no man better lov'd a joke,
It happen'd at a certain time,
'Twas of the year the very prime,
His blooming Neice thought fit to wed,
And love and hymen crown'd the bed,
To grace their nuptials he prepar'd
A feaſt,---and all his friends appear'd;
Among the reſt a youth from town,
Much to his Uncles Joy came down,
He came an unexpected gueſt,
Yet not leſs welcome than the reſt;
But to the good man's great chagrin,
He'd ne'er a bed to put him in,
But one, and that he knew for truth
Was haunted,---ſo inform'd the youth.
But he whoſe breaſt with courage glow'd,
Not the leaſt kind of terror ſhow'd,
Reply'd--theſe tales my boſom fire,
And ſuch a room I much deſire.
The gueſts broke up, the Servant Maid,
To warm the bed went much afraid,
And often chang'd her roſy hue,
As fancy tipt the flame with blue.
The youth undreſs'd,--was cover'd o'er,
And wearied, ſoon began to ſnore,
But ſlept not long,--at dead of night,
The creaking door proclaim'd the ſprite;
Rous'd with the noiſe, yet void of fear,
He ſaw a female Ghoſt appear,
But as ſhe ſtalk'd around the room,
He would not truſt the doubtful gloom,
For then the taper's dying light,
Could not aſſure him he was right:
Conquer'd at laſt he hid his head,
The ſpectre ſtraitway ſought the bed,
Rais'd up the cloaths, and by his ſide,
Lay down like any loving Bride:
He thought the Gueſt now much too near,
So crept to t'other ſide for fear:
But lying ſtill,--he ſoon perceiv'd
It was no Ghoſt, he found ſhe breath'd;
Then baniſhing all fear of harm
He ſeiz'd her hand and found it warm,
Took off her ring, but nought beſide
He touch'd, or elſe the Youth's bely'd.
She ſtarted up, and as before,
Thrice walk'd the room then ſhut the door.

No ſooner did the morn appear,
Then all were met the Youth to hear,
Expecting that he would recite,
The dreadful viſions of the night.
The modeſt Youth then bowing low,
Beg'd of the aſſembl'd fair to know,
Which of them all a ring had loſt,
With di'monds ſet: a ring of coſt;
The Yeoman's Daughter glad to gain,
What ſhe much valu'd once again,
Reply'd, 'tis mine,----then you my dear
Was the kind Ghoſt that did appear;
The ſecret I'll no longer keep;
But what you did was done aſleep,
Then told the ſtory to them all,
And mirth and laughter ſhook the hall.
The Father pleas'd, by Becket's Head
Sworn, he that night with her ſhould bed;
For, ſaith my friends, I think it right,
She went to bed to him laſt night,
A thouſand pounds my Daughter's portion,
What ſays my Nephew to the motion;
The Youth was pleas'd the Maid conſented,
All were rejoic'd and all contented.

Briſtol, Feb. 19, 1767.

NEW-YORK, September 10.

A perſon from Newark, in New-Jerſey, gives us the following very odd Intelligence; that one Sears, ſome four or five Years ago, having wilfully ſhot, and deſperately wounded one of the Conſervators of the peace in the Borough of Elizabeth, had been committed to Newark Gaol: Before his Trial came on, he aſſign'd over what Eſtate he had to ſome near relation; on his Trial he was found guilty, and among other Articles of his Sentence, he was to find Security for his good behavior during Life; but he being of a very fractious and obſtinate Temper, he could never get ſuch Security: For ſome Time his Relations ſupported him in Gaol, when finding it too chargeable in their Imagination, they witheld their Support: For ſome Time longer he was ſupported by the Charity of the Town, but they thinking it was not their Duty to do it, ſtopt their Hand alſo a few Months ago. Upon his being told, thoſe who had hitherto ſupplied him with Proviſions would do ſo no longer, he voluntarily determined to faſt Forty Days without Food, or die; He perſiſted in the Reſolution, and in all the Time he only took daily two Coppers worth of rum, and neither eat or drank any Thing elſe for the whole Forty Days, in which Time he was reduced to a perfect Skeleton, and continued in a great Meaſure like a mere Lunatick:—At the Expiration of the Time, which was but about a Fortnight ago, he was prevailed with to take ſome Nouriſhment, but for the firſt Day or two, every Thing he took came up again, his Belly having grown almoſt faſt to his Back: However, by the Help of ſome Medicines or lenitive Food, he is at laſt like to recover again after his long obſtinate Faſt, though he is yet very poor and low.

From New-Rochelle, we have an Account of the Dwelling-Houſe of Juſtice Guion of that Place, being entirely deſtroyed by Fire, on Friday laſt, about 12 o'Clock:—The Fire catch'd by a Crack in the Oven, and there being nobody but Mrs. Guion then in the Houſe, the Flames ſpread with ſuch Rapidity, that very few of the Effects could be ſaved, and 'tis ſaid almoſt all Mr. Guion's Papers were deſtroyed.

Laſt Night Capt. Weſtcot, in a Sloop belonging to New-London, put in here from North-Carolina.

EUROPE, ſtill ſore with the wounds it received in the laſt war, ſeems as yet deſirous of reſt and peace. There have been, in different periods of hiſtory and different parts of the world, ſome very poor, and very military nations, who had no other road to riches, or conſideration, but war. No experience of the miſchiefs attending it, can affect people of that character; it would be ridiculous to caution a man againſt danger, wounds or even death, who had no poſſible manner of living, but by encountering them. To the happineſs of mankind, providence has now circumſcribed theſe hungry nations within very narrow bounds: like the birds and beaſts of prey, their numbers far from being conſiderable, and Europe at preſent is infeſted with but few of them. On a review of the wars of this century in Europe, and their conſequences, it would be difficult to prove any nation at all a gainer by them. Ambition, indeed, is not very attentive to calculations. It is however hoped, that the total want of any brilliant acquiſition, may, for a while at leaſt, check that luſt of dominion, which has been for now, almoſt an age, ſo very unfruitful. There is but one Prince now living on the Continent of Europe, who has been even apparently a gainer by conqueſt; and it ſtill remains a doubt, whether, in three ſucceſſive wars, he has not paid more for his purchaſe than it is worth exclusive of the riſks he has himſelf run, and which his ſucceſſors will probably be liable to, in conſequence of his victories.

In this ſituation of affairs, exhauſted as moſt of the principal powers of Europe are of men and money, and involved deeply in debt, it is poſſible that they may ſuffer mankind to indulge for ſome years longer in the bleſſings of peace. Our next neighbour and old rival, France, ſeems in theſe circumſtances, vaſt as her natural reſources are. The conſequences of a ruinous war having reduced her very nearly to a ſtate of general bankruptcy, nothing but time, together with the ſtricteſt œconomy, attention, and induſtry, can reſtore to their former ſtate, her manufactures, commerce, marine, and finances. To all theſe points, however, ſhe has with equal aſſiduity and ſucceſs been very attentive ſince the peace; in which time ſhe has recovered her trade, in many parts of the world, to a ſurprizing degree. It is true, her attempts to retrieve her commerce, have met with diſcouragements, and the dreadful hurricanes in the Weſt-Indies, and ſome other misfortunes, have put them back conſiderably, in ſome articles of it; but, on the whole, the natural advantages of that country, in the hands of an enterprizing and induſtrious people, have had a conſtant operation in their favor, and they recover apace.

The court of France ſeems at preſent to lay itſelf out with the greateſt care, to cement and cultivate the ſtrict alliance and family union with the other branches of the houſe of Bourbon, in Spain and Naples. The preſent King of Spain, however diſagreeable it may be to the Spaniards in general, gives entirely into French meaſures, and makes a common intereſt of the affairs of both nations. Mutual ceſſions of lands, it is ſaid, have been made in America and the Weſt Indies; the French having given up to the Spaniards, what they had poſſeſſed on the Miſſiſippi; and the Spaniards, as it is univerſally reported and believed, have relinquiſhed to them the part that ſtill remained in their hands, of the great and valuable iſland of Hiſpaniola. Many have been ſurprized, that this exchange of territory was not by ſome means attempted to be fruſtrated by Great-Britain; conſidering how much it muſt affect our poſſeſſions in the Weſt Indies, and ſo great and valuable a branch of our commerce, as the ſugar trade.

France ſeems, as well as England, to have entirely dropped her ſubſidiary connections in Germany. With her new ally, the houſe of Auſtria, ſhe however keeps upon the moſt friendly terms, and there ſeems to be a cordial harmony between them. In the north, her intereſt ſeems to have declined greatly; though it is ſaid, notwithſtanding theſe appearances, that her ambaſſador at the court of Peterſburgh has lately got leave to eſtabliſh a factory at Archangel, on the White Sea. It is alſo believed, that ſhe has attempted to negociate a treaty of more conſequence with Sweeden; whereby ſhe has offered to pay the ſudſidy arrears due to that court, upon condition that the Sweeds ſhould build her a certain number of men of war at a ſtated price, and ſupply her for the future, in caſe of war, with a fixed number of ſhips and ſailors, in lieu of the old ſtipulation of land forces.

This ſeems an improvement of her plan of northern politics: Indeed both France and Spain, ſenſible of their paſt errors, and of the great importance of their object, are increaſing their marine, with the moſt unwearied aſſiduity, in which the former has been greatly aſſiſted, as well by the Genoeſe, as by the great quantity of ſhip timber, with which they have ſupplied their arſenals at Toulon, from Corſica, ſince their troops took poſſeſſion of the Genoeſe part of that iſland.

The affair of the Canada bills, which was the only cauſe of altercation between the courts of Great Britain and France, has been amicably ſettled, to the ſatisfaction of both. Though the court of Spain has not yet tho't proper to manifeſt that regard to juſtice and honor, with reſpect to the Manilla ranſom, which might have been wiſhed and expected, yet it is not probable that it will ſo ſuddenly venture to involve itſelf in a ſecond rupture with G. Britain. Spain has already ſuffered by her obſtinacy in that affair, if it be true, as is generally believed, that it was in conſequence of her fears for the vengeance that it might have taken upon that account that the flota which had already ſailed for Europe, was ſtopt in its voyage and remanded back again to its port. The detention of their Weſt India treaſure is always attended with ill conſequences in that country; nor are theſe confined to the commerical part of the nation, the people in general ſenſibly feel them. The miſchief however did not ſtop there; the flota having afterwards received orders to ſail for Europe, met with a violent ſtorm, by which ſome of the ſhips were drove aſhore and the reſt obliged to put back in a ſhattered condition to the Havana.

The alliance by marriage between Great Britain and Denmark, as well as that which took place about the ſame time, between a ſiſter of the preſent King of Denmark and the Prince Royal of Sweden by cementing anew and drawing cloſer together the Proteſtant intereſt ſeems in a great meaſure to counterpoiſe the cloſe union of the houſe of Bourbon.

Though the death of the late King of Denmark has hitherto made no viſible alteration in the ſyſtem of the north; yet it may not be vain to expect, that a total change will take place in the conduct of that court. Influenced entirely, as it has been for ſome years paſt, by French councils, we may now hope to ſee an Anglo-Pruſſian ſyſtem take place in their ſtead. It is not to be doubted, but the amiable Princeſs, whom his Daniſh Majeſty, has eſpouſed, will contribute greatly to encreaſe theſe good diſpoſitions, as well as the harmony and friendſhip which ſubſiſts between our court and nation, and thoſe of Denmark.

The Prince of Orange, perpetual Stadtholder of the United Provinces, being alſo happily arrived of age (8th March 1766) to take the adminiſtration upon him may be looked upon as a great addition and ſtrength to the Proteſtant ſyſtem. The great and voluntary rejoicing, which were ſo univerſally made upon that occaſion throughout the whole United Provinces, and which exceeded, even as to outward appearance, thoſe that are the offspring of fear or neceſſity, in deſpotic governments, ſufficiently teſtify the great weight which the Princes of that illuſtrious houſe will ever bear in the republic.

The Empreſs of Ruſſia (excepting the part ſhe has taken in the affairs of Poland) ſtill preſerves a pacific aſpect towards the reſt of Europe, and an attention to the intereſt and improvement of her ſubjects. Her court is become the aſylum of the ſciences to which ſhe invites learned men from every part of Europe.

Germany, as well as Italy, afford at preſent but little room for political obſervation. The two rival powers in the former, at the ſame time they take the greateſt care to complete their armies, and remount their cavalry, ſeems, for the preſent to have no particular intention to give umbrage one to the other. The part which the King of Pruſſia has taken, in concert with Ruſſia, Denmark and England, in the affairs of Poland, does not appear (partly through the inability of the Poles to contend with the great powers in queſtion) likely to be attended with any extraordinary conſequences; unleſs the Empreſs

Queen, ſtimulated by her hatred to the King of Pruſſia, ſhould make the Catholic cauſe a pretext for interfering in favour of Poland; in which caſe there can be no poſſibility of foreſeeing how far the conſequences may extend.

The moſt remarkable incident which this year produced in Italy, was the pope's abſolute refuſal to acknowledge by any of thoſe vain titles, which he pretended to claim in right of his father, the eldeſt ſon of the unhappy family of Stuart. This example has been followed, even by thoſe Roman Catholic princes who had formerly given the greateſt protection to that family; ſo that as the father had lived long enough to ſee every hope of ſucceſs to his claims to theſe kingdoms extinct and dead, the ſon has already found his very pretenſions diſallowed by every power in Europe. The ſuperiors of the Engliſh, Scotch, and Iriſh colleges in Rome, having thought proper to pay thoſe honors which the pope had himſelf refuſed and forbidden, were, upon that account, ſent into exile; while the unfortunate adventurer retired into the country to avoid the mortifications which he muſt have hourly experienced in that capital. On a ſurvey of affairs in all parts of Europe, on the whole, appearances are pacific.

NEW-YORK, Sept. 17.

Monday laſt a Schooner belonging to Norwalk in Connecticut, one Hind Maſter, bound up the North-River, in attempting to come through Hellgate, ſtruck upon the Rocks there, where the Veſſel ſtill lies in a bad condition, and 'tis feared will be loſt; but ſome Paſſengers with the People, got ſafe aſhore.

Yeſterday came in from Sea, after having been out about three Weeks, the Snow Margaret, Capt. Morgat, of this place: She was bound for Monte Chriſti, and 'tis ſaid, had a French Captain on board, with ſome French Mariners, deſigned for Hiſpaniola, and that the French Captain having attempted to deſtroy Capt. Morgat, and take the Veſſel from him, he had got him ſecured, and thought it beſt to put back again. We hear the Aggreſſor is ſince put on board his Majeſty's Ship Coventry, now lying in the North River.

Capt. Reynolds from Surinam, is come in Ballaſt: He ſays, that no Molaſſes was to be got there when he left it; and they had had exceſſive Rains there. He left Capt. Maſterton of this port at Surinam.

Capt. Newton from New-Providence, adviſes us, that many of the Bahama Fiſhermen continue to work upon the Spaniſh Ship, that was wrecked on one of their Keys ſome time ago; and that every now and then they come acroſs ſome Treaſure, which keeps up their Spirits, and ſome times pays them well for their Labour.

Tueſday laſt arrived here the Brigantine Hannah, Capt. Robert Jarvis, from London.

The public had great Expectations on the Arrival of a London Veſſel, to have received the Particulars of the Proceedings of the Parliament of Great Britain reſpecting America; but we can get nothing more by Capt. Jarvis, than has already been publiſhed: None of the Acts are arrived;——nor are there any Accounts of the Settlement of the Board of Commiſſioners of His Majeſty's Cuſtoms, or of the Appointment of any other Officers, the Reports of which and of the Salaries of the Governors, Judges, &c. &c. we chuſe to defer untill we can publiſh them with ſome Certainty.——As to regular Troops being to be ſent hither we can find no Manner of foundation for ſuch reports.

In Captain Jarvis came Paſſengers the Rev. Mr. Moſes Badger, and the Rev. Mr. Beach; who ſome Time ſince went to England for Epiſcopal Ordination; the former an Itinerant Miſſionary in the Province of New-Hamſhire, the latter for New-Brunſwick in New-Jerſey.

We hear from Brookfield, that one John Wait of that Place going out very early in the Morning of the 12th Inſtant to take care of his fat Oxen in his Paſture, within a few Rods of his Houſe, to his great Surpriſe, diſcovered with his Cattle a Mooſe, which after having gone back and taken his gun he inſtantly killed.—It was 18 Hands in height, and weighed 626 lb.—the Horns were 23 Inches long, & from Horn to Horn at the Ends thereof 2 Feet and 7 Inches.—on each Horn were two Branches, the firſt 11 Inches, the other 7.

It is remarkable that in September 1765, about the ſame time in the month, one of the ſame Creatures was killed in the ſame Town: There had not been any of that Kind of Creature ſeen in that Part of the Country for 40 Years before that Time.

NEW-YORK, Sept. 24.

On Tueſday came up from the Hook, where ſhe arrived on Saturday laſt the 19th Inſtant the Ship Eagle Capt. Markham, having on board two Companies of the Royal Train of Artillery; which we hear are to relieve ſome of thoſe who have been for ſome time on this Station, who are expected to go home in the ſame Veſſel in about 3 Weeks. The Ship left London the 4th of July, and the Land the firſt of Auguſt, but we can hear of no late Papers or Intelligence by her.

Laſt Thurſday Morning died at his Houſe in this City, in the 74th Year of his Age, Abraham De Peyſter, Eſq; Treaſurer of this Province. His Remains were interred laſt Saturday in a Vault in Trinity Church, and his Funeral attended by their Excellencies Governor Moore, and General Gage, the Members of his Majeſty's Council for this Province, and moſt of the other Gentlemen of this Place.

Laſt Week Mr. Henry Van Neſs, of this City, Painter, in firing off a Muſket, in Haerlem Woods, that was double charg'd, received ſuch a prodigious Blow in the Breaſt with the But End thereof, that he died in a few Hours after.

From ſeveral Parts of New-Jerſey, particularly the Counties of Salem, Cumberland, Burlington, and Monmouth, we have melancholly Accounts of a bad Diſtemper prevailing among the Horſes in thoſe Parts:—Many of the Farmers have loſt half their Stock, and very few are taken but what die very ſoon:—No certain Method of Cure is hitherto known, but 'tis generally found that giving well Horſes Tar on their Bridle Bits, has been a good Preſervative againſt it.

HARTFORD, Sept. 28.

We hear, that the Univerſity of Edinburg have conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on the Rev. Mr. Wheelock, the Founder of the Indian Charity School in Lebanon, in this Colony.

Saturday Evening arrived in Town from Boſton, the Hon. Thomas Hutchinſon, Lieutenant-Governor of Maſſachuſetts, and ----- Sheaf, Eſq; who, with a Number of other Gentlemen, we here, are appointed Commiſſioners, to ſettle ſome diſputable Boundaries between the Provinces of New-York, and the Maſſachuſetts-Bay; and that they are to meet at New-Haven.

Norwalk, September 5, 1767.

Departed this Life, Mrs Mary Lockwood, Wife of Col. James Lockwood, Eſq; in the 81ſt Year of her Age. Her firſt Huſband was Maj. John Boſtwick Eſq; of New Milford. She was Mother to the Rev'd Mr. David Boſtwick, deceas'd, late Paſtor of the Preſbyterian Church in New-York. She was a virtuous and amiable Gentlewoman. She was the youngeſt of five Siſters, that were all living in March, 1764. They all belonged to Norwalk and Danbury, at the ſaid Time when they was all living, in ſaid March, 1764. The eldeſt of ſaid Siſters, was then in the 88th Year of her Age—the ſecond Siſter was in the 86th Year of her Age—the third Siſter was in the 84th Year of her Age—the fourth Siſter was in the 81ſt Year of her Age—and the fifth Siſter (Mrs. Lockwood) was then in the 77th Year of her Age——All their Ages, put together, will make 416 Years. There is ſtill two of the ſaid Siſters now living; one in the 87th Year of her Age, and the other Siſter in the 84th Year of her Age. Their Maiden Names were Buſhnall. The aforeſaid five Siſters were by one Father and one Mother.——They were all accounted credible, virtuous Women. The firſt Huſband of the eldeſt Siſter now living, was the Rev'd Mr. Seth Shove, late Paſtor of the Church at Danbury.

Sept. 10, 1767.

STOLEN, or taken out of a Paſture in Northampton, belonging to Mr. Solomon Stoddard, an Iron Grey Mare, four Years old paſt, marked with the Letters, NH in the near Buttock, if I remember right: She trots chiefly—between 13 and 14 Hands high—was fat, and without Shoes, when taken away, and is handy to lead in a Team. If any Perſon ſhall take up ſaid Mare, and inform the Owner, ſo that he ſhall find her, ſhall have Five Dollars Reward, and all neceſſary Charges paid him, by me the Subſcriber.

SELAH WRIGHT.

HARTFORD, September 25, 1767.

LAST Wedneſday the Rev'd William Patten, was inſtalled into the Office of Colleague-Paſtor, of the South Church in this Town. The Rev'd Mr. Pitkin of Farmington, made the firſt Prayer upon the Occaſion; the Rev'd Mr. Wheelock of Lebanon preached a Sermon ſuitable to the Occaſion, to a numerous Audience, from Philip. ii. 20, 21. The Rev'd Mr. Pomroy of Hebron, made the Prayer before the Charge: The Rev'd Mr. Whitman of Hartford gave the Charge: The Rev'd Mr. Biſſel of Wintonbury, prayed after the Charge, and the Rev'd Mr. Lockwood of Weathersfield gave the Right Hand of Fellowſhip. The Whole was conducted with Decency and Decorum.

Reverend and dear Sir,

YOU having already been ſolemnly ſeparated to the Work of the Goſpel-Miniſtry, by Prayer, and the laying on of the Hands of the Preſbytery, whereby you have been regularly introduced into that ſacred Office—And the Church of Chriſt in this Place, having given you a Call to ſettle among them as their Colleague-Paſtor, which Call you have declared your Acceptance of.

We, the Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt, convened in Council, upon this Occaſion, do in the Name, and by the Authority of Chriſt, and with the Concurrence of the Meſſengers of the Churches here preſent, commit to you the Care of this Church, as their Colleage Paſtor.

And we ſolemnly charge you before God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhall judge the Quick and the Dead, at his appearing and Kingdom, that you take Heed unto yourſelf, and unto all the Flock over which the Holy Ghoſt has made you an Over-ſeer—Feed the Church of God, which he has purchaſed with his own Blood. Let Love to Chriſt, and Love to the Souls of the People committed to your Care, engage you to be diligent in feeding Chriſt's Sheep, and in feeding his Lambs.

Study to ſhew thyſelf approved of God, a Workman that needeth not to be aſhamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth.

Pray without ceaſing, watching thereunto with all Perſeverence—give thyſelf unto Prayer, and to the Miniſtry of the Word.

Preach the Word—be inſtant in Seaſon and out of Seaſon—reprove, rebuke, exhort with all Long-ſuffering and Doctrine. Give thyſelf to Reading, and Meditation; that thy Profiting may appear unto all.

In Doctrine, ſhew Uncorruptneſs, Gravity, Sincerity, ſound Speech that cannot be condemned. Let Chriſt, and him crucified, and the Way of Salvation, by him made known in the Goſpel, be the darling Subjects of our Preaching; that you may appear to be a truly Chriſtian Preacher, and not a meer Teacher of Morality.

Hold faſt the Form of ſound Words, in Faith and Love which is in Chriſt Jeſus. Take Heed unto thyſelf, and unto thy Doctrine——continue therein, that thou mayeſt both ſave thyſelf, and them that hear thee.

See that you faithfully diſpenſe the Sacraments of the New-Teſtament to proper Subjects, as a wiſe and good Steward of thoſe heavenly Myſteries. And as you are entruſted with the Keys of Chriſt's viſible Kingdom; we charge you impartially to diſpenſe the Diſcipline with which the Houſe of God is to be ordered, making a Difference between the Holy and Profane, without prefering one before another—doing nothing by Partiallity.

Let an unfeigned Love to Chriſt and Zeal for his Honor, and a Compaſſionate Concern for the Salvation of immortal Souls be the governing Principles of your whole Conduct as a Miniſter.

As becomes a Man of God, follow after Righteouſneſs, Godlineſs, Faith, Love, Patience, Meekneſs—in all Things ſhewing thyſelf a Pattern of good Words—be thou an Example of the Believers, in Word, in Converſation, in Charity, in Spirit, in Faith, in Purity.

And now, Sir, as God in his Providence, has joined you with me, in the Work of the Goſpel Miniſtry, and made us Fellow Labourers in his Vineyard; let us unite our Endeavours to promote the Intereſt of Religion, and build up the Kingdom of Chriſt among this People.

There is Work enough for both of us, if we have but Hearts to apply ourſelves to the doing of it.

Let us not indulge Sloath and Negligence, but lay out ourſelves with the utmoſt Diligence, Fidelity and Zeal, to ſpread the Honor of the Redeemer's Name, and promote the Converſion and Salvation of Souls.

This People have long been under my paſtoral Care—I have borne them upon my Heart, in my Addreſſes at the Throne of Grace, and have a tender Concern for their ſpiritual and eternal Intereſts; and as it is probable I muſt be called away by Death, while you may be left behind, to carry on the Work of the Lord among them, it will be no little Satisfaction to me, to leave them to the Care of One, whom I ſhall have Reaſon to think, will be a faithful Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, and will diligently endeavour to build up his Kingdom among them, while I am laid in the Duſt.

And if you faithfully keep this Charge, you ſhall be a good Miniſter of Jeſus Chriſt, nouriſhed up in the Words of Faith and good Doctrine; and when Chriſt the chief Shepherd ſhall appear, you ſhall receive a Crown of Glory which fadeth not away.

YEſterday ſome diſpatches were received at the ſecretary's office from his excellency Sir Henry Moore, Governor of New-York.

'Tis ſaid, that as the government is now interested in the affairs of the Eaſt-India company, the ſervices of Lord Clive will be honored with a ducal coronet.

The farmers round the country particularly in Devonſhire, are dabbing out their corn as faſt as poſſible; and curſing the news writers: for they ſay if ſuch a pother had not been made by them, corn would have been 20s. a buſhel; but now the price is falling, owing to the large quantities of corn imported, which may, in ſome meaſure, be attributed to the news papers.

In the courſe of laſt ſeſſions of Parliament 290 bills received the royal aſſent, 95 public, and 113 private; which is the greateſt number that has received the royal aſſent in one ſeſſion for ſeveral years.

The friends of Mr. Wilkes, we hear, are in great hopes of his pardon, and it is tho't if ſuch a circumſtance ſhould happen the celebrated exile will be in parliament at the next general election.

Advices from Liſbon mention, that orders were lately iſſued for raiſing ten additional regiments of foot, which occaſioned much ſpeculation as to the motive of ſuch as to the motive of ſuch a meaſure in a time of profound peace.

No changes have yet been declared at court. The Right Hon. Mr. C—y, whoſe reſignation was voluntary, had been deſired as we are informed, to remain in his place till a proper perſon is choſen to fill it.

Yeſterday one of the Clerks of the Bank was apprehended on ſuſpicion of filing Guineas, and as we hear a man of conſiderable Property.

Extract of a Letter from Edinburgh, July 8.

"The grand deciſion of the Douglas cauſe began this day. The preſident, in a Speech of near two hours, declared his opinion in favour of Hamilton, and was clear for a reduction. Lord Strichen ſpake next, and was as clear in favour of Douglas.

After which the Preſident aſked Lord Kaim's opinion, who excuſed himſelf, as he was then too much heated by the throng in the Court to ſpeak. It was adjourned till to-morrow."

NEW-LONDON, Sept. 18.

On Tueſday laſt arrived here Capt. Richard Leffingwell, in the Brig PITT, in 37 Days from Quebec.—He carried from hence, in June laſt, 240 French Neutrals, all which he landed ſafe at Quebec, except one woman who was ſick and entirely helpleſs before he ſail'd——They were kindly received:—As appears by following Extract of a Letter from Peter Preſhon, their Prieſt, (who went with them) to the Owner of the Brig, at Norwich, dated Quebec, Auguſt 8th, 1767.

SIR,

WE are now at Quebec, had 35 Days-Paſſage; but it did not ſeem long to us, by Reaſon we had a good Maſter, Mate and Crew; for had we have had one of our own Nation, we could not have had better Uſage——We often crouded his Quarter-Deck ſo he had ſcarce Room to ſteer, but never had a croſs Word from him, or any of the Crew, the Whole Paſſage. We have been better received here than we expected, have a Month's Proviſions given us, and are told we ſhall not ſuffer."

Tueſday alſo arrived here the Brig Norwich Packet, Robert Niles, Maſter, from Turk's Iſlands. On his Paſſage the 1ſt of September, in Lat. 25. 10. Long. 70. 20. at 6 o'clock P. M. Capt. Niles diſcovered a Wreck, which at firſt Sight appeared to be a ſmall Boat, but on further Obſervation was tho't to be a Veſſel overſet; Night coming on they ſhap'd their Courſe for, and at Half after 7 o'clock came up with her, and found ſhe was a Brig Bottom upwards, with 5 Perſons on her Bottom: Capt Niles took them on board, and found them much bruiſed & full of Sores, having been in that Situation 25 Days. The Veſſel was from Philadelphia, bound to the Weſt-Indies; was owned at Philadelphia by Mr. John Batol, and the Captain, Antonia Tobary; whom, with the Mate, Two Men and a Boy was drowned and another Man died on the Wreck Four Days after they overſet. Their Misfortune was occaſioned by the Veſſel's not being ſufficiently ballas'd.

Thoſe that ſurvived got one of the Chain-Plates, with which in Six Days they made a Hole through the Bottom, and by that Means, with great Difficulty procured a Caſk of bottled Beer, as alſo ſome raw Beef and wet Biſcuit, on which they ſubſiſted.

Capt. Niles, after he took them on Board, met with Capt. Powel, in a Brig bound to Philadelphia, on board of whom he put Four of the People; the other, one William Hammond, formerly of this Town came in with Capt. Niles.

Boſton, September 17.

On Thurſday laſt died here JEREMY GRIDLEY, Eſq; Attorney General for the province, and a Member of the General Court: His Funeral was attended on Saturday, with the Reſpect due to his Memory, by the Members of the Council and the Judges of the Superior Court in Town, the Gentlemen of the Bar, the Bretheren of the Society of Free Maſons, of which he was Grand Maſter, the Officers of the firſt Regiment of Militia, of which he was Colonel, the Members of the Marine Society, of which he was Preſident, and a great Number of the Gentlemen of the Town.

Strength of Underſtanding, Clearneſs of Apprehenſion, and Solidity of Judgment, were cultivated in him by a liberal Education, and cloſe thinking:—His extenſive Acquaintance with Claſſical and almoſt every other part of Literature, gave him the firſt Rank among Men of Learning:——His thorough Knowledge of the Civil & Common Law, which he had ſtudied as a Science, founded in the Principles of Government, and the Nature of Man, juſtly placed him at the Head of his Profeſſion:—His tender Feelings relative to his natural and civil Ties; his exquiſite Senſibility, and generous Effuſion of Soul for his FRIEND, were Proofs that his Heart was as good as his Head was ſound; and well qualified him to preſide over that antient Society whoſe Benevolent Conſtitutions do Honor to Mankind.—He ſuſtained the painful Attacks of Death with a Philoſophical Calmneſs & Fortitude, that reſulted from the ſteady Principles of his Religion.

MONDAY, October 5, 1767. NUMBER 145.

THE CONNECTICUT COURANT.

Printed by THOMAS GREEN, in HARTFORD.

LONDON, July 14.

THE terms on which a certain Nobleman offered to come into the Adminiſtration, were certainly as follow:

1. The Duke of Richmond to go to Ireland.

3. Mr. Yorke to be Lord Chancellor.

4. Mr. Conway to be Secretary of State for the Southern department.

Which were refuſed.

July 16. It was this Morning reported, that the Earl of Rochfort will be appointed to ſucceed the Rt. Hon. Mr. Conway as one of his Majeſty's Secretaries of State.

We hear circular Letters are iſſued, in Obedience, to his Majeſty's Commands to all Biſhops, Suffragans, and Clergy, requiring them to make out complete Liſts of all Papiſts, or reputed Papiſts, in their reſpective Dioceſes, &c. diſtinguiſhing their Sex, Ages, and Occupations, and how long they have been reſident therein;—which Liſts are to be laid before the Houſe of Peers the firſt Day of next Seſſion of Parliament.

Letter from Edinburgh, dated July 15.

"Yeſterday the Court of Seſſion decided in the long depending cauſe, between his Grace the Duke of Hamilton, and Archibald Douglas, Eſq; The Court ſat on this important queſtion from Tueſday laſt week, when after eight days ſpent in delivering their opinions on this cauſe, their Lordſhips decided in favour of the Family of Hamilton, by reducing the ſervice of Mr. Douglas, as heir to the Duke of Douglaſs."

LONDON, July 21, 22.

It is ſaid that the Decree given in Scotland, in Favour of the Hamilton Family, is not final; and that an Appeal will be made next Seſſions to the Right Honourable Houſe of Peers for a Rehearing.

We are informed that there are eight eminent citizens who have already declared to ſtand candidates for the city of London at the enſuing general election.

The Iſland of Tercera, the largeſt but one of the Azores, it is ſaid, is to be ceded to Britain, in ſatisfaction for the late aids furniſhed to Portugal. This Iſland can boaſt of a ſoil fit for the production of corn, cattle, and poultry; but its wine is very deſpicable. It has a good harbour, and lies in the Atlantic ocean, about half way between Europe and America.

Letters from Civita Vecchia, of the 27th ult. ſay, that 200 Jeſuits arrived lately from Ferrol, have landed in Corſica. They belonged to the Colleges of Biſcay, Gallicia, and Aſturias. The Number of their Fraternity, remaining in Spain, on Account of Sickneſs or Infirmity, does not amount to more than 90.

On Thurſday laſt General Cornwallis arrived at Portſmouth, in order to embark on board his Majeſty's Frigate Æolus, for his Government of Gibraltar. And on Saturday the Æolus ſailed out of the Harbour for Spithead.

Letters from Chatham mention, that Orders were received, by Expreſs from the Admirality, at that yard, not to break up the Monmouth Man of War of 70 Guns as was formerly ordered; but to take her into Dock and re-ſurvey her, and reduce her to a 60-gun.

The Grafton Man of War of 70 Guns lying at Chatham, is ordered to be ſold, being unfit for further Service; as is the Royal Sovereign of 100 Guns at Portſmouth.

A Letter from Podore Factory and Settlement ſays, that one of the Mooriſh Caravans had lately diſcovered, a long Way Inland, a Species of white Negroes, of very diminutive Stature; one of whom, of the male Sex, they brou't with them to the Fort, who did not exceed three Feet high.

We hear the late Regulation of the Navy Uniforms will nearly anſwer the ſame End to Lieutenants in Commiſſion, as if an additional Sum of ten Pounds had been made to their Salaries.

Mr. Almon, in Piccadilly, has purchaſed Mr. Wilkes's Hiſtory of England, which is ſaid to be a Continuation of Rapin, from the Revolution to the preſent Time.

We hear ſome late unjuſtifiable Proceedings of the French and Spaniards, in the Weſt-Indies, having occaſioned ſome Repreſentations to be made by our Ambaſſadors at their reſpective Courts; the Anſwers to which have been tranſmitted to his Majeſty's Secretary's of State and are ſaid to be very favourable towards a ſpeedy Redreſs of thoſe Grievances.

Yeſterday there was a grand Board of Plantation, for the laſt Time but one this Seaſon.

Yeſterday there was a grand Board of Ordnance.

It is ſaid that Lord Clive will ſhortly be created an Engliſh Baron.

Edinburgh, July 13. The Leith, of Capt. Cheyne, is arrived from the Greenland Seas without any Fiſh. She ſaw the Campletoun and Royal Bounty the 28th of May, neither of whom had any Fiſh at that Time.

We are credibly informed that ſome diſpatches have been ſent to the Right Hon. Earl Temple, and the Hon. Mr. Dowdeſwell, relating to the intended change in the Adminiſtration.

We hear from Sheffield, that upwards of thirty prime hands in the Iron and ſteel manufactures, have within theſe few days been engaged for the American Colonies.

The Earl of Chatham is ſo enfeebled by his preſent illneſs, that his Lordſhip has been obliged to be carried, for the benefit of the air between two horſes on a litter.

It is ſaid the Earl of Chatham will ſhortly ſet out for the South of France, for the recovery of his health; and it is reported Mr. Alderman Beckford will accompany him thither, for the re-eſtabliſhment of his health.

It is confidently ſaid, that the Earl of Chatham has reſigned his place.

It is alſo ſaid that the Marquis of Rockingham is to be head of the Treaſury.

We are told his grace the Duke [illegible] caſtle is to have ſome conſider[illegible] ment. And yeſterday many of [illegible] are to compoſe the new Mi[illegible] with his Grace at Claremont.

We hear that Lord Clive [illegible] over, and preſented to his Ma[illegible] ſword ſet in diamonds, and a fine [illegible] necklace, for her Majeſty, both of very conſiderable value. He has likewiſe brought a fine diamond as a preſent from the Nabob to his Majeſty, of immenſe value, and many curioſities of that country.

Lord Clive made a preſent of 20 guineas to the man on board the Britannia who firſt diſcovered the Britiſh land. His Lordſhip has alſo made preſents to his phyſician and ſurgeon, to a large amount, for the great care they took of him.

From the Gentleman's Magazine for June.

At the court of Common Council, it was unanimouſly reſolved, upon the motion of Mr. Deputy Roſſiter, that the freedom of this city be preſented in a gold box to the Rt Hon. Charles Townſhend, Chancellor of the Exchequer, as a tribute juſtly due to his diſtinguiſhed talents, ſo happily employed, and ſo ſucceſsfully exerted in the ſervice of his king and country; and as a mark of gratitude for the late inſtances of his regard to the city of London, & readineſs to promote its embelliſhment, convenience and proſperity; but more eſpecially for his ſedulous application and endeavours to promote the trade and manufactures of this kingdom, to leſſen the public debt: and with this ſalutary view, to diminiſh the expences, and improve the revenues of the State, without weakening the national force, or laying additional burthens upon commerce; for his ſpirit and reſolution in adviſing the late extraordinary, but neceſſary exertion of power, in favour of the poor under the alarming proſpect of famine, without attempting to endanger the liberties of his country by exalting the Royal prerogative above the law; and laſtly, for his well tempered zeal in ſupport of the undoubted legiſlative authority of the king and parliament of Great Britain, over all parts of his majeſty's dominions.

BOSTON, Sept. 24.

It is apprehended, that the detaining of the July Packet at Falmouth on the arrival of one from N York was occaſioned by the proceedings of the aſſembly of N. York, ſent by ſaid Packet: this conjecture is founded partly on the following paragraphs taken from the London Chronicle of the 14th and 16th of July, viz.

An Act granting to his Majeſty the Sum of Three Thouſand Pounds, for furniſhing Neceſſaries for the Troops quartered within this Colony; and for paying Capt. Philip Martain the Loſſes he ſuſtained in the Houſe of Maj. James, on the 1ſt of November 1765.

An Act to empower Commiſſioners to

An Act to revive the ſeveral Acts therein mentioned, relating to abſconding and fraudulent Debtors.

The Legiſlature of New-York, has voluntarily paſſed the Bill, for providing for the troops conformable to the act of parliament, induced by a ſenſe of the Juſtice and propriety of that Law, without any previous knowledge of the late ſteps taken here to inforce a compliance.——A clear demonſtration of the wiſdom of the Meaſures purſued, which were rather calculated for allowing time to the colonies to return to reaſon and their duty, than for proceeding with violence againſt them.

The following Extract of a letter from a Merchant in London to his Friend in this Town, we are requeſted to inſert.

London, June 17, 1767.

——"Yeſterday the Bills for ſuſpending the legiſlation of New-York until ſaid Colony ſhall comply with the Mutiny Act, and for eſtabliſhing a board of Cuſtoms, were read the ſecond Time in the Houſe of Lords; and the Bill of commerical Taxation paſs'd in the ſame Houſe to be engroſs'd.

With reſpect to providing for the Troops no Oppoſition is ſo reaſonable becauſe none can be ſo affectual, as that which procured the Repeal of the Stamp-Act viz. the general Engagement to import no Goods from England, till ſuch a Taxation be removed or diſclaimed by the Repeal of the Act: And the Efficacy of this Mode of Oppoſition could never be more aſſuredly depended upon than at preſent becauſe that the Manufactures can but barely ſupport themſelves under the preſent Scarcity of Proviſions, and ſlackneſs of Trade which is ſo great a Diſcouragement that although Wool never was dearer in England than now yet Cloths are 20 per Cent. Cheaper than ever was known: So that ſhould your Demand ceaſe for a Year or two the utmoſt you can deſire would be effected for you here without any unconſtitutional Oppoſition on your parts: This Method of Proceeding will have this good Effect beſides, viz. that you will have a good Price for all your dead Stock (by enterchange with one another for Aſſortment) which would always have been unprofitable--you would collect in your Debts and bring your Debts in England to a cloſe, before you run any further into Debt ſo that the Ballance would hereby be bro't about in your favour, which without ſome ſuch Method muſt be forever againſt you."

Tueſday being the Anniverſary of His Majeſty's Coronation, the Guns at Caſtle William, and at the Batteries in this Town were fired at Noon: His excellency the Governor's Troops of Guards and Company of Cadets as alſo the Regiment of Militia, with the Train of Artillery, were muſtered, and marched into King-Street, where they perform'd their ſeveral Firings to general Acceptation.

They write from New-York, that the Dyſentry or Bloody Flux prevails greatly in that City, it is attended with little or no Fever.

Yeſterday Capt. Wimble ſail'd from hence for North-Carolina, in whom went Paſſengers the Hon. Martin Howard, Eſq; Chief Juſtice of that Place, with his Lady.

NEWPORT, September 21.

One day laſt Week came on Shore at Point Judith, the Bottom of the Brig Dolphin; we hear that they have cut her up for her Iron Work, of which they have ſaved ſeveral Tons; and that they have alſo found about 18 or 20 oz. of Metal melted by the Fire, which they take to be a Mixture of Gold and Silver, and are in Hopes of diſcovering more.

We hear that the Uneaſineſs ſubſiſting in the Weſtern Iſlands, is occaſioned by an Order lately received from the Court of Portugal, prohibiting the making an Addition to the Number of Prieſts or Nuns, until further Orders from that Court. This with the taking into Cuſtody ſome Crown Officers, who are ſuppoſed to have been guilty of male Adminiſtration in the Receipt of the Revenue, hath been the Occaſion of ſeveral Tumults in thoſe Iſlands.

New-York, October 1.

On Sunday arrived here Capt. Thomas Miller, from London, which place he left the 23d of July, in company with Capt. Davies, of and for this port: Their ſhips are both full, as moſt of the orders that were ſent home were completed as ſoon as the merchants there had received advice that our aſſembly had made ſuch ample proviſion for his Majeſty's troops in this province, and with which we are told the King, his miniſtry, and the nation in general, ſeem well pleaſed; and that had the news reached England a month ſooner than it did, a certain act would not have received the royal aſſent.

Sir John Johnſon, (ſon of Sir William) and many other paſſengers came in Capt. Miller.

In the night of the 12th inſtant, a labourer, named Lawrence Towrs, was murdered at a houſe in Hackinſack, New-Jerſey, by a negro man that lodged in the ſame houſe: he knocked out his brains firſt with the rung of a cart, and afterwards drove a ſmall plug of wood in one of his ears. The fellow was taken up the next morning, and confeſſed the whole; and ſaid the reaſon he committed the murder was, that he formerly had lived at that houſe, and thought if he could diſpatch poor Towrs, he would get his old birth, which it ſeems he liked better than the one he then had: He is now in cloſe confinement.

New-London, October 2.

Laſt Friday a Boy about 16 Years of Age was tried for Buggery, before the Hon. Superior Court now ſitting here, and acquitted.

Yeſterday arrived here in 17 Days from Monto-Chriſto, the Brig Two-Brothers, Capt. Waterman belonging to Norwich. He informs that a Schooner ſaild from the Mount a few Days before him, with 25 Soldiers on board: who, as it was reported, was gone to take Poſſeſſion of Turk's-Iſland for the Crown of Spain, having it was ſaid, a Commiſſion for that Purpoſe.

LONDON, July 8.

Our patriot anceſtors were afraid that England would in time of war, be loſt in a miſty morning. They ſaw and dreaded the conſequences that would unavoidably attend on the enemy's fleet paſſing ours; they knew the inequality of our land armies, to that of our foes; reaſoned juſtly upon that knowledge. But far different principles prevails in this doating age: We ſee France and Spain exerting every nerve in order to augment their navies, and enable themſelves to look us in the face at ſea; we know that victory depends on the number of ſhips, weight of metal and ſize of the combating veſſels. Laſt war may have convinced us that our ſuperior courage is not to be depended on, where the ſtake is ſo important; we have witneſſed the French fighting us at ſea with equal numbers, and if not conquering under thoſe circumſtances, yet behaving in ſuch a manner as to give us to underſtand, that a ſmall number of ſhips, men, and guns, in their favour, is ſufficient to enſure victory on their ſide. The art of war is now arrived at ſuch perfection, that diſcipline, ſupplies the place of courage, and keeps the poltroon to that duty, which is willingly performed by the man of valor.—What ſignifies then, in ſuch a ſituation of affairs, the ſuperior patriots diſpoſition of our naval officers and ſailors, they may lead them to death but cannot conduct them to victory when engaged with ſuperior numbers, obſerving like rules of diſcipline, and equally well attending the ſeveral duties of their reſpective ſtations; one defeat at ſea would ruin our dependence, but twenty would not riſk that of our enemies. All the ſhipwrights we have in the kingdom ought to be provided in employment as far as poſſible, in order to prevent their entering into the ſervice of our foes; all of them that are neceſſary in or der to build three ſhips for one conſtructed in France and Spain, ought forever to be buſied in our docks. A leſs proportion of men of war cannot give an abſolute ſafety, eſpecially now we have ſuch extenſive dominions to protect, which certainly ought to be aimed at when we muſt pay the forfeit of a ſingle misfortune for our exiſtence.

From the PUBLIC ADVERTISER, June 26.

INTELLIGENCE EXTRAORDINARY.

WE hear that a ſolemn faſt will be appointed thro'out the kingdom, and that a general form of Prayer will be read in all the churches, beſeeching Almighty God, of his infinite mercy, to ſpare the life of Mrs. Britanna, whoſe conſtitution is quite broke down by the quacks into whoſe hands ſhe unluckily truſted herſelf during her indiſpoſition. Several Phyſicians of ſkill who have had acceſs to her, declare her caſe to be incurable conſumption, her ſtamnia being fairly worn out. Others ſuſpect treachery and poiſon, and do not abſolutely deſpair of a recovery in caſe the proper antidotes are uſed; but of this there are little hopes.

The Beginning of laſt Week we had here very ſerene pleaſant Weather, until Wedneſday Evening, when at about 8 o' Clock came on, and continued for ſeveral Hours, a moſt violent Storm of Wind and Rain, with ſome Thunder and Lightning: The Wind was from the S. E. and N. E. moſt of the Time: No great Damage was done to the Wharves or to the Shipping, in the Harbour; a Brig was drove aſhore on Dorcheſter Neck: But the Anxiety was great for the Pleaſure-Boats and Fiſhing-Boats, which went out that Morning, and were not returned when the Gale came on, as alſo for the Veſſels inward bound. Capt. Skimmer in a Brig from Briſtol, timely came to Anchor within the Light-Houſe, and rode it out: It is ſaid there were 30 or 40 Sail of Sloops, Schooners, and Fiſhing-Boats in the Bay that Day, which were in great Diſtreſs, but moſt of them being far out, the Wind lull'd before they drove to the Shore, whereby the next Morning they got into Plymouth and the other Harbours on that Coaſt; two or three ſmall Veſſels were caſt aſhore, but no Lives were loſt: Capt. Coffin in a Schooner loaded with Oil was caſt away on the Back of Cape-Cod, the Cargo and People ſaved, and in Hopes of getting the Veſſel off. The Town Fiſhing-Boats are ſince returned, except one that was ſtove in Pieces in Gallows-Bay: Thoſe who went on Pleaſure are alſo returned, ſome of them having been aſhore on ſeveral Iſlands in the Harbour, being very dark, could not diſcover where they were until Day-light. Thro' the Goodneſs of divine Providence no Lives were loſt that we have yet heard of.

A Gentleman and his Lady who had juſt landed on one of the Wharfs from a Boat that had been below, was by the extreme Darkneſs of the Night, led to the edge of the Wharf and both fell into the Water, and would probably have been drowned, had not ſome of the Company immediately aſſiſted and got them out. Mr. Anthony Hadley, returning home to Stoneham from this Town, was belated, and by the Fury of the Tempeſt, added to the Darkneſs of the night, loſt his Way and periſh'd on the Road; and what is more remarkable, Mr. Hadley's Son returning home from his Work, at Medford, miſs'd his Way alſo, and met an untimely End in the Horrors of that diſmal Night; the Father was 84 Years of Age, and has left a Widow and 3 Children, the Son was 52, and has left a Widow alſo and eight Children, to bemoan their unhappy Fate.

We hear the Storm has done conſiderable Damage in the Country by blowing down Trees Fences, Fruit, &c. In ſhort the oldeſt Seamen ſay, they never experienced a more terrible Gale.

BEHOLD! the venerable SAGE began,
Strange the attention & the liſt'ing earl
As when the dying Father calls to his bed
His Children, bidding his laſt Farewell.
Solemn the charge, inſtructive ev'ry line,
While flowing tears bedew the hearers cheek.
Bleſs'd Man! for ſpotleſs ſanctity renown'd,
Lov'd by the good, & by the guilty fear'd.
No railing pen can ſully your deſerts,
Unfading crowns and lawrels ever green,
Immortal prizes wait for you above.

CRY ALOUD. Spare not; Lift up thy voice like a trumpet: Oh! that I had the lungs of Stentor! Or, if I had the wings of a Seraph, I would croſs the wide atlantic, in a moment, and deliver a faithful meſſage to the dear, dear mother Country.

Forbear, my good old Matron, any longer to give heed to the lies that are told you of your own children: As you would not forfeit that character of wiſdom, of equity and generoſity for which you have been for ages paſt ſo juſtly fam'd: As you would not be deceived to your own real ſubſtantial injury——ceaſe to regard the idle tattle or rather the malignant whiſpers of thoſe who have too long been endeavouring to impreſs your mind with unreaſonable jealouſies of your colonies—They have told you, we know they have, that it is the intention of America to diſpiſe your conſtitutional authority, to break all connections with you, and to become independant: And when I conſider the character and ſtations of ſome of theſe defamers, I cannot wonder you are diſpoſed to give credit to their reports: But, believe me, for I aſſure you, you may do it with ſafety, the colonies love, eſteem and honor you: You are the root from whence they ſprang: they venerate you as their parent: they are bound to you by the ties of blood: Provoke not your children to wrath, leſt——they be——diſcouraged. While you treat them well, and ſurely they have a right to ſuch treatment, take my word for it, they never will abate their filial reſpect for you; thoſe who tell you otherwiſe are vile calumniators: they are your enemies, your worſt enemies, more inveterate than the haughty powers of France and Spain, and would make it their ſport to ſee an open rupture between you and us.—Were we not eaſy and contented when you repealed the Stamp-Act? we were. But they had the inſolence to tell you otherwiſe; and reflect—Have you not too readily believed it! you have my dear good mother, indeed you have; at leaſt ſuffer me to tell you I think you have: elſe, whence is it that we are threatened with correction? Nay, your enemies and ours are now exulting with hopes of laſhing us with whips and ſcorpions; an armed force to keep us in awe, is their conſtant talk. Is it poſſible, think you, that your own offspring can bear to be told that e're long they ſhall be ſlaves to ſycophants and tools!—wretches, whom we ever diſpiſed, but can never dread.——When you repealed the ſtamp-act we were ſatiſfy'd; content was in every heart, and every countenance was ſerene; and the tranquility was undiſturbed, 'till we were imprudently told to our faces, what we are ſlow—ſlow to believe, that it was your fixed determination to enſlave us. Should we have believed it, what muſt have been our ſentiments of our mother! Suppoſe it to be falſe, how intollerable is the inſolence towards you principally, as well as towards us!——While Britain remains wiſe, ſhe will never take ſuch meaſures as will without doubt deſtroy herſelf; as long as ſhe is virtuous, ſhe will not injure her colonies upon the partial repreſentations of their pretended friends or open enemies: She who has ſo long been the ſcourge of tyrants, will never ſet up a tyranny: While ſhe preſides over the world, the Umpire of nations, the ſupport of the liberties of mankind, ſhe will never attempt to enſlave her own children. Or, ſhould ſhe——the imagination is diſtreſſing! ſhould ſhe at ſome diſtant period——the inſtability of human things is ſuch! forgive, O ye pious anceſtors of Britain--ye guardians of their liberties and ours---O PITT, and all ye patriots of the preſent time; forgive the thought, and I will utter it——Should Britain at ſome diſtant period---become a tyrant, and forge chains for America—far diſtant muſt that period be--Would America ſubmit to her tyranny?—I need not expect an anſwer.—Slavery, my dear mother, we cannot think of: we deteſt it. If this be a crime, remember we ſuck'd it with your milk. We boaſt of our freedom, and we have your example for it. We talk the language we have always heard you ſpeak. Britons will never be ſlaves. This is your own language, and your children have learnt it of you—We muſt be free, and leave the fair inheritance to our children. Do you blame us, can you blame us, for imitating the noble example of your fathers and ours! What mean thoſe ſeas of blood which they ſhed to tranſmit the bleſſing of freedom to you and to us! Will you part with that freedom? no, you will ever maintain it. Would you deprive us of it? you will not attempt it, till you ſhall be infatuated by the artful & malicious inſinuation of your enemies and ours. For God's ſake, be cautious of being deceived by them: They are deſigning men, artful enough to deceive the very elect: All we want is to ſtand before you upon a footing with them: We are ready to anſwer what they alledge againſt us: Be you the judge & judge righteous judgment: Then will you ceaſe to meditate ſeverities againſt thoſe, whoſe affection for you it is natural, and if it be not your own fault, will be as laſting as your exiſtence.

Printed by THOMAS GREEN, in HARTFORD.

From the BOSTON EVENING-POST.

Boſton, September 14.

To [illegible] FLEETS.

PERHAPS ſome of your correſpondents will be kind enough to inform us in ſome future paper what this article of intelligence once and again repeated in the public prints means, "The great object of Parliament ſeems to be, to employ every conſtitutional meaſure to ſecure the dependence of the Colonies, on the Crown of Great-Britain." If this ſentence is to be taken in its plain and obvious ſenſe, and has any real foundation, 'tis great pity that [illegible] aſſembly ſhould ſuffer ſuch an impoſition, as to be perſuaded they need ſpend one thought on that Cervantic ſubject. There never was a time ſince the firſt European ſet foot on the continent, wherein the colonies, from one end to the other, more chearfully and affectionately acknowledged their dependence on the crown of Great-Britain. Never were a People more in love with their King, and the conſtitution by which he has ſolemnly engaged to govern them. George [illegible] of America, Mr. Pitt, Mr. Conway, Col. Barre, and every gentleman without exception, who had honeſty enough to adviſe the preſervation of the Britiſh empire from inevitable deſtruction, are revered as tutelar deities.——Lord Colvil, who was once miſ-judged an enemy, received all the ſatiſfaction a generous mind could wiſh, and ſo would Mr. G——le, if his future conduct ſhould manifeſt that he repented him of the calamity his meaſures brought upon this people.——

But Americans it ſeems are not only to acknowledge their dependence on the crown as they always have, and hope forever will, but muſt (if ſome gentlemen have their will) ſwear allegiance to the Britiſh parliament, and recognize their unlimited right both of legiſlation & taxation. This motion indeed ſeems new to Americans who have been taught from their infancy to conceive that the ſupreme power of Great-Britain, in all her wide dominions, reſided equally in the three ſtates, King, Lords, and People, by a conſtitution as fairly ſettled, as perfectly limitted, as explicitly declared, and ſolemnly recognized, as any thing could be done by mankind; and that on the unſhaken baſis of natural juſtice and common ſafety; being not only the conſtitution of Britain, but of human nature in general, of which no man can of right be deprived (remaining virtuous) even by his own conſent.—Some politicians indeed tell us of deriving theſe and thoſe rights and privileges from the Crown, and in ſome caſes it is allowed that the people, as a collective body have put ſome things into the hands of their ſovereign to be by him diſtributed to individuals, as lands, waters, &c. yet if theſe be wantonly laviſhed by bad miniſters, on undeſerving perſons, we find people murmuring as if ſenſibly injured, which ſhews, that even Majeſty is held a reſponſible truſtee of the rights of the people, and that the confidence repoſed, ariſes from a preſumption, that the King can have no intereſt ſeparate from his ſubjects.——

In Britain and Ireland the Peers ſeem ſo many hereditary petty princes, each concerned for his own intereſt and territory, and therefore juſtly admitted to a voice in any national act that may affect them; and ſhall an American, be his property what it will, have no voice in acts that affect both perſon and property to the Foundation? Has not every parliament on the continent, an houſe of Lords as well as thoſe of Britain and Ireland? and if Lords in Britain be the King's hereditary counſellors, thoſe who are at the ſpecial election of the crown may be ſuppoſed more dependent, ſo that the crown may be ſaid to have [illegible] negatives in affairs of the colonies; and the Commons of the united Kingdoms of England and Scotland, ſeem to inſiſt on forcing away the other——How ſtrange an attempt! One part of the People would raviſh from the other, a right without which they confeſs life itſelf would be a misfortune. The people of Britain and Ireland, who [illegible] their ſovereign, [illegible] their noble Peers and can addreſs either with their grievances when they pleaſe, will not truſt an hair of their heads or farthing of their eſtates to their diſpoſal, and yet talk of treating America like rebels, unleſs they ſurrender the whole to the mercy of gentlemen with whom they have no ſpecial connection, and can as little controul, as the ſtars in their courſes!—Are we brethren thus to be baſtardized and alienated from the common wealth of human nature? Are not the Americans people, and ſhall ſuch a body of people be deſtroyed, unleſs they tamely yield up a right which yourſelves would maintain againſt every power on earth, to the laſt drop of your blood? Conſider, if miſchief befal us, our blood will be required at your hands, as we can by no means recede one atom. Theſe ſchemes may appear light to you, but muſt be death to us if ye inſiſt on forcing them; and how long ye will ſurvive our downfal may be worth your conſideration. Tho' many deſigning men have repreſented us as a raſh, unſtable mob, there be thouſands among us and yourſelves, who know we are a deliberate, determined people, to whom death, with all its terrors would be a pleaſing alternative when ſet againſt ſlavery. The Bill of rights is our ſpecial ſecurity that we ſhall be governed by no law to which we do not conſent in our own perſons or repreſentatives by us elected for that purpoſe; and never ſhall we part with the goodly inheritance while we poſſeſs a drop of the blood derived from the heroes who committed to us the ineſtimable legacy.——

WE are aſſured, notwithſtanding all the inſinuations to the contrary, the right hon. the E---of B---does not at all, either directly or indirectly, intermeddle in public affairs, and that he has no hand, in any reſpect whatſoever, in the intended miniſterial changes, nor did he ſo much as ſee his M——y ſince they were ſet on foot; neither has he been at court during the whole negociation.

July 16. We hear that the galleries and ſeats in the houſe of Commons will be taken down, and conſiderable alterations made therein, againſt the meeting of next ſeſſion of parliament.

Wedneſday being the firſt of July, was paid down at Mrs Rich's houſe in the Great Piazza, Covent-Garden, the ſum of ſixty thouſand pounds for the purchaſe of the Theatre Royal in Covent Garden; and at the ſame time were executed the Deeds of Conveyance of the Patents, Theatre, Scenes, Cloaths, &c. to Meſſrs. We are informed that there is a proſecution now carrying on againſt a man of faſhion, for an attempt upon his own Brother's wife.

'Tis ſaid that after the General Election a bill will be bro't into parliament to prevent any debtor from being impriſoned more then one year.

The Induſtry, of Liverpool, Capt. Erſkine, late Commander, is arrived at that Port from Africa. On the 25th of March laſt, an Inſurrection happened on board among the Slaves on the Windward Coaſt of Africa; ſome of them having got off their Irons, they immediately fell on the Capt. and four others, whom they killed; the ſecond Mate and Cooper ſaved their Lives by concealing themſelves in the Hold; the Negroes preſerved one of the Men as a Pilot, to make the ſhore, which having gained, they all fled except 4, which the Mate and Cooper perceiving, they purſued them and recovered about 12 out of 137.

We are aſſured that it is yet an undecided point whether the preſent parliament may not meet with its diſſolution before another meeting.

We hear that the Counteſs of Bute will ſhortly be created a Dutcheſs.

We hear that ſome great perſonages are ſo alarmed at the news of a certain celebrated

Exile's writing the new hiſtory of England, that ſome ſhrewd politicians begun to think, with no ſmall degree of confidence, that they will procure a pardon for him on condition of his not continuing the ſaid hiſtory further than the reign of his late Majeſty George II. Others are of opinion, that if he does not obtain a pardon he will certainly receive a very conſiderable ſum of money on the ſame condition—So great is their fear of having their fame tranſmitted to poſterity by a writer whoſe parts and abilities will inſure immortality to his work.

When the Rev. Mr. Occum, the Indian miſſionary, who came over to Edgland lately, to be ordained, & to collect ſubſcriptions for the Indian charity ſchool, took his leave of the Indians, at the council-houſe in Oneida, on his departure from America, the chief ſpeaker addreſſed Mr. Occum in theſe words; “Father, we are glad you have come among us with God's news; and we think we are thankful to God, and give you thanks, and good men who aſſiſted you up here. We will by the help of God, endeavor to keep the fire which you brought and kindled among us; and will take our old cuſtoms, ways, and ſins, and put them behind our backs, and never look on them again; but will look ſtraight forward, and run after the chriſtian religion. Whenever we ſhall erect ſchools among us, we beg the aſſiſtance of good people your way. We intreat the great men to protect us on our lands, that we may not be encroached on by any people.

“We requeſt that the great men would forbid traders bringing any more rum among us; for we find it is not good; it deſtroys our bodies and ſouls. This belt [a religious belt of wampum which the Speaker holds in his hand] ſhall bind us together firm in friendſhip for ever.

Extract of a letter from Liſbon, dated June 12

“An expedition is fitting out here with all poſſible deligence, to conſiſt of two men of war of the line, a frigate, and four of the Fernambuca company's ſhips to carry proviſions, together with others, which it is ſaid, are preparing at Porto. Their deſtination is kept ſecret; but it is the general opinion that they are deſtined for the Rio Grande in Brazil, to operate jointly with the Spaniards in the expulſion of the Jeſuits from Paraguay. The deſtination given out is, that they are to gariſon the Weſtern iſlands, where it is ſaid, there have been ſome diſturbances; and this has occaſioned a ſurmiſe that the court fears ſome attempt on the part of England to make them comply with their treaties.

A few days ſince, the maid ſervant of one Mr. Wilſon, with his child in her arms, went to view ſome ſheep waſhed in the Tweed from Kelſobridge; when forgetful of her truſt, by a ſudden motion, the child ſprung out of her arms from the lodging and dropt down into the water. The young woman in order to ſave the Child, inſtantly flung herſelf over after it, & both periſhed in the Tweed.

We hear the Baſis of the new miniſtry is founded on a coalition between the Duke of Bedford Duke, of Newcaſtle, Marquis of Rockingham, and the Hon Mr. George Grenvile who are to have the forming thereof but none of the above gentlemen (except the Marquis of Rockingham) will have any poſt in the adminiſtration.—The terms are to be carried to a great perſonage this day for his approbation.

Earl T——— refuſed to join the late intended coalition, as being haſty, crude, undegeſted, and impermanent.

The game of bob cherry ſtill continues among the miniſtry; there are many choppers, but few catchers.

We can with great certainty aſſure the public that the new miniſtry are not ſettled notwithſtanding what has been mentioned in the public papers; and to ſpeak in the Stock Brokers phraſe, This morning nothing done.

A Letter received at Liſbon, from the Bay of All Saints mentions, that two Dutch ſloops and a Schooner, laden with powder and ſhot, ſmall arms, ordnance, ſtores, &c. were boarded by a Partugueſe man of war near the Rio de la Plata, the commander of which finding the above cargoes were for the uſe of the Jeſuits of Paraguay, had confiſcated the whole for the uſe of the King of Portugal.

LONDON, July 11.

Capt. Brown in a Ship from the Bay of Honduras, bound to Rotterdam, ſaw a three Deck Ship aſhore on the Martyrs, June 3d but could not learn who he was; he alſo brings the News of a violent Earthquake being at Truxillo, on the Spaniſh-Main.

July 12th, the Mary, Capt. Stewart, from New-York, is arrived at Corke, alſo the Induſtry; Capt Shepardſon is arrived at Genoa, from the ſaid Port.

Lord Clive has brought over and preſented to his Majeſty, as a Preſent from the Nobob, a fine Sword ſet with Diamonds, worth £. 10,000 a Pearl Necklace for her Majeſty, worth £. 150,000; alſo a large Diamond worth £. 100,000, and ſundry other valuable curioſities;—His Lordſhip made his Phyſician a Preſent of £. 4000, for his great Care of him in the Voyage; and gave twenty Guineas to the Man that firſt ſaw the Britiſh Land. His Lordſhip alſo paid his Compliments to the Court of Directors at the Eaſt-India Houſe, and was received in the moſt cordial and polite Manner; afterwards he ſet out with his Lady, to their Seat on Blackheath. It is ſaid his Fortune, with his late Acquiſitions, is now worth £. 80,000, per Annum, which is more than any Man poſſeſſes in England. The elegant Crown made by Mr. Cox, a Jeweller, and ſent as a Preſent by his Lordſhip to the Nabob, from the India Company, was vaſtly approved of, and the Value of it was £. 14,000,—The Nabob has ſent them in return, a Preſent worth £. 75,[illegible] It is ſaid the India Company [illegible] to give the Government, £. 400,000 per Annum, for three Years, or half [illegible] profit in Trade for that Time, which [illegible] ſhall be moſt agreeable.

The Votes that came by the Packet of the Aſſembly of New-York, gave very great Satiſfaction, and the People in general were glad to hear they had ſo far agreed to furniſh the Troops as was intended by Parliament, many of which are to be tranſported back again to Ireland.

Several Diſpatches are ſent to the Colonies in anſwer to many received, and the Merchants in the North-America Trade are come to a Reſolution to ſhip Goods as uſual; alſo Rice is imported Duty free from America, between May and December, 1767. The Iſland of Dominica ſolicits for a greater and more extenſive Trade for Engliſh Manufactories.

A plan is laid before the Government for ſending to Eaſt-Florida, Felons of either Sex, covicted for tranſportation, as at this Time many are under that Sentence.

By an Account lately taken, it appears that there are near 18,000 Papiſts, moſt of them poor miſerable People, about St. Giles's Pariſh, and that Neighbourhood; many of their Prieſts lurk about that and other parts of the Town, whoſe chief ſupport is by marrying them for a few Shillings.—Circular Letters are iſſuing out to the Clergy of every Dioceſs enjoyning them to ſend a Liſt of all Papiſts within their reſpective Pariſhes, which Liſts are to be given into the Houſe of Lords, the next enſuing Seſſions.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Bute has ſent all his Deer from his Park in Bedfordſhire, to other Parts and has ſtock't the ſame with Calves, in order to produce a breed of fine Oxen: alſo another Gentleman in Hertfordſhire, has followed the above laudable Example, introduced with a view of reducing the preſent exorbitant Price of Beef, for the Benefit of the Poor.

His Majeſty is going to take a View of all the Dock-Yards in England, this Summer, as ſeveral fine men of War are on the Stocks, in moſt of the Yards, alſo many of the old Ships are for Sale, and more new ones to be built.

Since the acquital of the ſchooner Active on the 16th of June laſt, ſeveral courts of vice-admiralty have been held here, upon cauſes of as great weight and expectation, before the hon. Egerton Leigh, Eſq; ſole judge; at an adjournment whereof, on Tueſday the firſt inſtant, the Schooner Wambaw, with 50,000 ſhingles on board, ſhipped inſtead of ballaſt from Broughton iſland in the river Alatamaha, in Georgia, belonging to Henry Laurens, Eſq; of this town, was condemned; the ſchooner Broughton-Iſland Packet, with wood for ballaſt, from the ſame place, alſo belonging to Mr. Laurens, acquitted; and the collector of his majeſty's cuſtoms for this port, alſo acquitted, of the charge of having illegally taken fees upon indigo certificates, it appearing, upon the evidence, to the judge, that the fees upon which the penalties and diſabilities inflicted by act of parliament were ſued for, had been taken upon certificates granted after clearing out of the veſſel in which the indigo was ſhipped.

The Collector of his Majeſty's cuſtoms for this port having determined to return to England, has appointed Roger Peter Handaſyde Hatley, Eſq; deputy collector, and has accordingly been ſworn into the ſaid Office.

From Georgia we learn, that the people on ſhore, and on ſhip-board there are very ſickly; and that a Veſſel from Guinea is arrived there with 200 healthy ſlaves, and had not loſt one during the whole voyage from the coaſt.

Capt. Stevenſon, from Liſbon, in 51 Days, informs, that a few days before he ſailed, they had a ſmall ſhock of an Earthquake, but happily it did no damage: That a cutter was arrived there from Senegal, with an officer, who was going expreſs to England with diſpatches from the governor of that place; and that a ſchooner belonging to New-York, commanded by Capt. Moore, of this port, is loſt on Senegal Bar.

NEW-YORK, Oct. 1.

The following extraordinary Atteſtation of the Coroner of Bergen County, was communicated by a Gentleman of ſuch Credit as leaves not the leaſt Doubt of its being genuine.

ON the Twenty-Second Day of September, in the Year of our Lord, 1767, I JOHANNES DEMAREST, Coroner of the County of Bergen and Province of New-Jerſey, was preſent at a View of the Body of one Nicholas Tuers, then lying dead, together with the Jury, which I ſummoned to inquire of the Death of the ſaid Nicholas Tuers. At that Time a Negro Man, named Harry, belonging to Hendrick Chriſtians, Zabriſkie, was ſuſpected of having murdered the ſaid Tuers, but there was no Proof of it, and the Negro denied it; I aſked him if he was not afraid to touch Tuers? He ſaid No, he had not hurt him, and immediately came up to the Corpſe then lying in the Coffin; and then Staats Storm, one of the Jurors, ſaid, "I am not afraid of him, and ſtroked the dead mans Face with his Hand," which made no Alteration in the dead Perſon, and (as I did not put any Faith in any of thoſe Trials) my Back was turned towards the dead Body, when the Jury ordered the Negro to touch the dead Man's Face with his Hand, and then I heard a Cry in the Room of the People, ſaying, "He is the Man," and I was deſired to come to the dead Body; and was told that the ſaid Negro Harry, had put his hand on Tuer's Face & that the Blood immediately ran out at the Noſe of the dead Man Tuers. I ſaw the Blood on his Face, & ordered the Negro to rub his Hand again on Tuers's Face, he did ſo, and immediately the Blood again ran out of ſaid Tuers's Noſe at both Noſtrils, near a common Table Spoonful at each Noſtril, as well as I could judge—Whereupon the People all charged him of being the Murderer, but he denied it for a few Minutes, & then confeſſed that he had murdered the ſaid Nicholas Tuers, by firſt ſtriking him on the Head with an Ax, and then driving a Wooden Pin in his Ear; though afterwards he ſaid he ſtruck the ſecond Time with his Ax, and then held him faſt till he had done ſtrugglig,——when that was done, he awaked ſome of the Family and ſaid Tuers was dying (he believed.)

Wedneſday laſt Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, of Staten-Iſland, was found dead, on the Road, leading from the Court Houſe, and 'tis ſuppoſed he either went off in a Fit, or killed himſelf by a fall from his Horſe.

Saliſbury, Oct. 21, 1767.

Mr. GREEN,

Pleaſe to give the following a Place in your Next, and you will oblige every Friend to Juſtice, and in Particular, your humble Servant,

THE body of our laws in this colony, taken together, are wholſome and good, and perhaps as ſound a body as is to be found in any government; but ſome might be alter'd much for the better, in my opinion: and if ſome were wholly repealed, would be as well. I will juſt briefly touch upon two or three, and ſhew the injuſtice of one, the inconſiſtency of another, and the inconveniency of a third, &c.

And in the firſt place, the laws againſt exceſſive uſury and oppreſſion forbidding a man's taking more than ſix per cent. for the loan of money, &c. is very good; and it were to be wiſhed, that oppreſſion were no where eſtabliſhed, as well as forbid, by our laws. But is not the law for calling out the inhabitants indiſcriminately, to work on the high ways, oppreſſive & unjuſt? Where is the juſtice, that a common tradeſman, who has a large family of young children to maintain, and two or three apprentices, that don't ordinarily half earn their living, ſhould do more towards mending the roads, than the opulent farmer, with one or two negroes, and two or three teams? The tradeſman perhaps has not a hoof in the world, nor ever been able to keep one; but he muſt do 12, or at leaſt 8 days work in a year, which reckon as the law ſtates it, is twenty ſeven, or at leaſt eighteen ſhillings; which is perhaps more than all his other rates in a year, altho' he may give into the public liſt, three or four heads. And where is the juſtice of a ſeafaring man's being call'd to mend the highway, when perhaps he don't ſet his foot upon our ſhore once in a whole year? They are a ſet of men as ſerviceable to the public as any whatever, and they get their bread in the utmoſt hazard of their lives. For they that go down to the ſea in ſhips, that do buſineſs in great waters; theſe ſee the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep: For he commandeth and raiſeth the ſtormy wind, which lifteth up the waves thereof.—They mount up to heaven, they go down again to the depths; they reel to and fro, and ſtaggar like a drunken man, and are at their wits end, Pſalm 107. 23. 24. 25. 26 and 27.

A neighbour of mine, who was a ſeafaring man was warn'd in his abſence to work at high ways, and his name returned for not working, and execution granted againſt him, & his fine diſtrain'd; and it appeared that he died at ſea ſix weeks before warning was left for him. And for my part I can't ſee why magiſtrates and juſtices of the peace ſhould be exempt from doing their part this way, unleſs it be becauſe they don't uſe the road, or becauſe their office is ſo publicly ſerviceable, as to be wholly unprofitable to themſelves, or becauſe the a—m—y is made up of that reſpectable body. Nor can I ſee why allowed phyſicians, who uſe and wear the road as much as any ſet of men perhaps whatever (teamſters excepted) ſhould be exempt. 'Tis pretty certain, they make eſtates as faſt as any men; and why they ſhould not do their part, to defray all public charges, I can't find any juſt reaſon for: nor why one miller to each griſt mill, ſhould be excuſed from doing their duty this way: for when they have grinding enough, the profits allow'd by law will ſufficiently pay their fine; and when they have none, they can work as well as other men. I know one family of four ſtout men as any in the town, where they live without exception, a father and three ſons, who are all excuſed by this law, becauſe the father, by the profits of his mill, was able to help each of his ſons to a mill for themſelves. Upon the whole, if the roads were mended by a rate, which would be the only juſt rule of proportion—for then every one would do according to his ability, or liſt, they would be mended with half the coſt, and to much better purpoſe. Let us therefore undo the heavy burdens, and let the oppreſſed go free.

I will in the next place touch upon the act for the puniſhment of fornication; and will endeavour to point out the inconſiſtency of that act, compared with ſome other laws of the colony, and the holy ſcriptures; and alſo the miſconduct of ſome officers, conſequent thereupon.

I was very lately at L—h—dc——yc—t, where my eyes affected my heart, to ſee two likely looking young women arraign'd at that bar, for the commiſſion of that ſin. I ſtaid to hear their indictment and ſentence. What affected me was, that it was ſome years before that they had been guilty, and had been reſtor'd to charity in a goſpel way, having made that ſatisfaction to God and his people, which the goſpel requires. But ſome of the grand jurors of that county, not thinking this ſufficient, preſents them to a juſtice of the peace, notwithſtanding they have to all appearance, walk'd in all the commandments of the Lord blameleſs. Now I think the grand jurors, in this caſe wrong—groſely ſo, if they view the oath they have taken, in the light I think they ought to, as I do (having taken it more than once) and as I think every rational and conſiderate mind muſt do. It runs thus——"You do ſwear by the name of the ever living God, that you will diligently enquire after, and true preſentment make, of all breaches of law that come to your knowledge, according to your charge (☞ unleſs ſome religious tie of conſcience, ſurely bottomed upon the word of God bind you to ſecrecy") or keep you ſilent (as it may fairly be rendered.) Now what does the word of God ſay, as to the preſent caſe? Whoſo covereth his ſin, ſhall not proſper, but they that confeſs and forſake, ſhall find mercy. Now they have confeſs'd, and to all appearance forſaken; but what mercy have they found with the grand jurors, the juſtice, or the c——y c——t? ſurely none; for the law, in its utmoſt rigor and extent, was executed upon them. Surely I would not have proſecuted ſuch for all the world; and yet I don't ſee how the c—t could have acted otherwiſe than they did, when the criminals were brought before them. Now, the inconſiſtency of this law, compared with the ſcripture, has been ſhewn above; for the act itſelf ſee Colony Law Book, page 78. And the inconſiſtency of it appears, compared with another law, entitled "An act concerning Delinquents." See Colony Law Book, page 42, one paragraph I will here recite——'tis as follows, viz. "It is further enacted, by the authority aforeſaid, that when any perſon or perſons ſhall be brought before any aſſiſtant, or juſtice of the peace, for any matter of a criminal nature, ſuch authority is hereby fully empowered to hear and determine the ſame, where the penalty doth not exceed the ſum of forty ſhillings."

Now, if I had been a ſingle miniſter of the law, and ſuch information or preſentment had been brought in to me, by ſuch grand jurors, and I had thought it my duty to puniſh ſuch offenders, notwithſtanding ſuch humble church confeſſion, and a virtuous, blameleſs life ever ſince, I would ſurely have taken advantage of the above recited paragraph, and not expoſed them any further; but now they muſt be expos'd before a king's c——y c—t, and made to pay a thirty three ſhillings fine, beſides other coſts, and their names & crimes upon laſting record, for the vileſt and moſt malicious to make uſe of at pleaſure, altho' they might hereafter be reckon'd among the women that behave moſt virtuouſly. I ſay, rather than have brought forward ſuch preſentments to the c——y c——t, I would have let them lay by me till doom's-day——But this may ſuffice.——Upon the whole, I think a humble confeſſion before God and his people, ought forever to be looked upon as ſufficient ſatisfaction to church & ſtate.—I would not here be underſtood to ſay or do any thing to encourage this, or any other ſcandalous ſin; I only plead for mercy for the penitent.

I would in the next place, juſt ſay a word or two upon the act for regulating the aſſize of caſk, &c. which act recommends, but does not enforce the uſe of gunter's rule for gauging. Now all allow it to be the moſt honeſt way of gauging, as it comes neareſt to the gallon meaſure. And all honeſt perſons will make uſe of this rule—thoſe who are not ſo will not——whereby great injuſtice is ſtill practiſed, which might be prevented, if a penalty of five pounds were annexed to the act, to be paid as a fine for all who preſume to gauge by the rod.

But laſtly, I would juſt hint a word or two, upon the method of carrying the votes of the ſeveral towns, into the aſſembly, for the choice of our ſuperior rulers. The common method has been for the town clerk, or conſtable of each town, to ſeal them up in ſo many ſeveral ſmall packets, and deliver them looſe to the deputy, or any other man they think proper to intruſt, to carry them in to the aſſembly; and there they are held by ſome, who perhaps are honeſt enough to hand out all the papers as they are call'd for, and perhaps not; perhaps will only hand out for ſuch men as they chooſe ſhould be elected, and the others may eaſily be thrown away as uſeleſs. I was led into this thought by ſomething of this nature I ſaw myſelf, at the laſt election, and had reaſon to think that by wicked prejudice, it had been practiſed by others. A worthy magiſtrate was called for, and a man who ſtood near me, held the votes for his town, dropt that paper on the floor, and in huſtling over the reſt, could not find it; but I pick'd it up off the floor, and gave it to him, telling him he was either very wicked or very careleſs, and conſequently unfit to be truſted with matters of ſuch importance. Now I can't ſee why it won't be beſt for the town clerks or conſtables, in the preſence of the freemen, to be obliged to ſeal up all the votes, firſt ſeparately, and then the whole votes of each town in one entire packet, and let them be ſent by ſome very truſty hand to the aſſembly, and delivered to the counters on the counting table, entirely whole, and let the counters keep them altogether in their care; then all in the nomination would ſtand an equal chance. And I can't ſee why it is not perfectly juſt and right for him that has the greateſt number of votes, to ſtand firſt in the nomination, whether he be an aſſiſtant or not; for this ſeems to be the minds of the freemen (by their votes) that it ſhould be ſo. But 'tis time to conclude my ſcroll---ſo ſubſcribe myſelf a friend to Great Variety of SCHOOL BOOKS, and of pretty little ENTERTAINING and INSTRUCTIVE BOOKS for Children, finely gilt, and all of them with Pictures.

SERMONS TO YOUNG WOMEN. By JAMES FORDICE, D.D. An eminent diſſenting Miniſter in London, 2 Vols. (Price 8s. 8d. Lawful Money, or 3l. 5s. Old Tenor) neatly bound.

Though this author is a profeſſed advocate for that Sex, which leads the world, he does not however addreſs them in the uſual ſtrains of flattery and adoration but in the ſober & impartial ſtile of friendſhip. He entertains the higheſt idea of their importance & deſtination and does not conſider them in that debaſing light in which they are too often conſidered, as formed only to be domeſtic drudges, and the ſlaves of our pleaſures; but as intended to be reaſonable and agreeable companions, faithful and affectionate friends, the SWEETNERS and the CHARM OF HUMAN LIFE. There are no compoſitions of this kind in the Engliſh language in which are to be found greater delicacy of ſentiment, correctneſs of imagination, elegance of taſte, or that contain ſuch genuine pictures of life and manners. HAPPY THE MOTHERS WHO FOLLOW HIS MAXIMS IN FORMING THE TASTE AND MANNERS OF THEIR DAUGHTERS! HAPPY THRICE HAPPY THE DAUGHTERS WHO ARE BLESSED WITH SUCH MOTHERS.

The ſermons of this author (who has long been admired as the beſt preacher among the clergy in North Britain) are remarkable for the moſt engaging ſimplicity and elegance of the expreſſion, which is at the ſame time conciſe, nervous, pathetic and correct.

Diſſertations on Subjects relating to the Genius and the Evidences of Chriſtianity, by Profeſſor Gerard.

Of this Author, who has now entered the liſts in ſupport of chriſtianity, nothing more need be ſaid, than that he hath lately, in his eſſay on Taſte, illuſtrated a ſubject on which the greateſt modern writers had employed their pens, viz. Voltaire, D'Alembert & Monteſquieu.

STACKHOUSE's new Hiſtory of the HOLY BIBLE, from the Beginning of the World to the Eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity. With Anſwers to moſt of the controverted Queſtions. Diſſertations upon the moſt remarkable paſſages, and a connection of profane hiſtory all along. To which is added, NOTES, explaining difficult texts, rectifying miſtranſlations, and reconciling ſeeming contradictions. A new edition, in 6 vol. 8vo. illuſtrated with thirty-ſix curious plates and maps elegantly engraved.

The laudable intention of this learned and worthy author, is to methodize, explain and illuſtrate the hiſtorical part of the Holy Bible, ſo as to remove the difficulties in reading it, and to maintain the truth and authority of thoſe ſacred records, and the evidences and excellencies of the chriſtian diſpenſation. He likewiſe diſplays in the moſt maſterly manner, the perfection and excellency, the antiquity, ſtile, and other properties of the Old & New Teſtament. In ſhort, this admirable performance is not only a plain and eaſy narrative of the hiſtorical parts of the Holy Bible, but by ſtrength of reaſon and argument will ſilence the Cavils and objections which have hitherto given ſhelter to profaneneſs & infidelity; will reclaim the heart of the unbeliever, and ſtop the noiſy mouth of the ſcoffer; will inſtruct the ignorant, confirm the weak and wavering, and not only ſatisfy the curious and impartial enquirer, but adminiſter comfort to every real chriſtian. The great character that this judicious work has already acquired, & the general good reception that it has met with from the learned and thinking part of mankind, render it unneceſſary to ſay any thing more in its recommendation.

Vol. II. Buſiris Revenge, and Brother's Tragedies. Vol. III. The Complaint, or Night Thoughts. Vol. IV. Centaur not Fabulous, in ſix Letters to a Friend, on the Life in Vogue.

WARSAW, [illegible]

THE report [illegible] the Marſhal-General is [illegible]; but this event will have place as ſoon as ſome particular Marſhals, who are expected at Radom, arrived there. In the mean time a body of Ruſſian troops, with a large train of artillery is cantoned around the place, in order to preſerve the public tranquility, and protect the deputies of the confederacy.——

Two of thoſe belonging to Lithuania, arrived here within theſe few days, one of whom is young prince Radzivil, Marſhal of the confederacy of Bzeſſoer. They have preſented Prince Repnin, envoy from the Court of Ruſſia, with the acts of the General confederacy ſuperbly bound in velvet, and at the ſame time addreſſed to him a diſcourſe, in which they recommended the confederates ſtill more to the protection of the Empreſs.

Poliſh. Pruſſia, July 3. The confederations of Diſſidents have received moſt gracious anſwers to the Letters which they wrote to the Kings of Sweden, Denmark, and Pruſſia, and their majeſties have aſſured them of their protection.

Paris, (in France) July 17. The day before yeſterday a report prevailed, that the Court has ſent orders to the Kings troops in Corſica to quit that iſle immediately, and return to France; an order iſſued, it is ſaid, out of reſentment to the government of Genoa for having refuſed the Spaniſh veſſels permiſſion to land the Jeſuits in that Iſland.

Boulogne, (in France) July 20. They write from Spain that the miniſtry were taken up with affairs of the utmoſt importance that the Marquis de Oſſun, Ambaſſador from France, having received an expreſs from his Court, immediately communicated his diſpatches to the King, they add, that his Catholic Majeſty had ſent his commiſſary of war and marine to Baſtia, in Corſica, in order to eſtabliſh magazines there for the ſubſiſtance of the Jeſuits.

Leghorn, (a Port Town of Italy) July 10. We learn from Corſica, that the baniſhed Jeſuits from Spain have at length been admitted into that Iſland; and that according to a convention made with General Paoli, theſe fathers will replace the French troops in the places ſtill held by the Genoeſe.

Florence (the Capital of Tuſcany, in Italy) June 20. Letters from Rome, ſay that the Cardinals are greatly divided in their opinions with reſpect to the manner in which the Pope ought to treat the Jeſuits.

Liſbon, (the Capital of the Kingdom of Portugal) June 30. The 27th of this month two ſhips of war, with three tranſports, furniſhed by the Fernambucco company ſailed from hence for Lagos, in order to take on board there two regiments of foot, which are marched to that place from Alentejo. General Bohm is to be their commander in chief, and Col. [illegible], a Swede, is to be at the head of the engineers. The report which prevailed, that this expedition is intended to drive the Jeſuits out of Paraguay ſtill continues; and as the two other veſſels belonging to Fernambucco remain here, it is imagined they will land their other troops, by way of [illegible] to the [illegible].

LONDON,

July 18. Yeſterday morning an experiment of a new machine for the preſervation of lives at fires, was put in practice from the two pair of ſtairs window, at the fountain tavern, Ludgate-hill. A large hempen ſack or bag, capable of holding two grown perſons or four children, is faſtened tight to a ſtrong rope, the bottom of which was fixed to a poſt on the oppoſite ſide of the way, & the top to a pulley at the upper end of the window; when by means of another rope, about thirty ſeven perſons were let down into the ſtreet without running the leaſt hazard, in leſs than five minutes: the moment the perſons are taken out, the ſack is drawn up again inſtantly.

We hear that a noble Earl has formed a plan for ſettling a new adminiſtration on ſuch footing as will be unexceptionable to the public.

We hear that his royal Highneſs the Duke of York, before his return to England, intends to pay a viſit to the celebrated Paoli, chief of the Corſicans.

By private letters received from merchants in Liſbon, by their correſpondents here, there is advice that freſh cauſes of diſpute, or pretendly ſo have been for ſome time ſo frequent, that notwithſtanding all endeavours the court of Liſbon have uſed to bring about a final iſſue thereto, they have proved ineffectual, and that in conſequence thereof no leſs than a ſpeedy open rupture is ſhortly expected.

July 21. They write from Corſica, that Paoli has ſummoned a general aſſembly of the ſtates of that iſland, for the 28th of this month, on affairs of the greateſt importance,

Extract of a Letter from London, dated August 6, 1767.

"The general affairs of America here bear a very diſagreeable aſpect; the preſent miniſtry are like to continue ſome time longer——ſome particular changes will happen, and I fear the principal ſtructure will not be of long duration, but probably there will be another ſeſſion of parliament before a conſiderable alteration is made.—The oppoſition to America ſeems to increaſe—Every ſtep is taken to render the taxation of the colonies a popular meaſure, and it is contended that they ſhould be obliged explicitly to acknowledge that right.—I know not what to adviſe on this occaſion but that the friends of America on both ſides the water, ſhould exert their utmoſt endeavours to leſſen the preſent unpopularity of the America cauſe; conciliate the affections of the people here towards you; increaſe by all poſſible means the number of your friends, and be careful not to weaken their hands and ſtrengthen thoſe of your enemies by raſh proceedings, the miſchiefs of which are inconceivable."

NEW-YORK, October [illegible].

Capt. Miller arrived here from New-London, ſailed from Monte Chriſto [illegible] of Sept. laſt and two Days after had his Maſt ſplit to pieces by Lightning, which at the ſame Time ſtruck all his Men down on the Deck but happily none were killed. He then returned to the Mount, and having fiſh'd and ſecured his Maſt, ſailed again the 9th. He left at the Mount the Captains Inglis, Wallace, Campbel and Richardſon, all of this Place with ſeveral other Nothern Men, but ſays the Trade is exceeding dull there, & Cargoes are procured with the greateſt Difficulty.

Monday laſt the Coroners Inqueſt ſat on the Body of Mr. Allan Cumeron of this City, late Shopkeeper, who was found to have died that Morning of ſome violent Bruiſes and a fractur'd Skull, which he had received late on Saturday Night, the 10th Inſtant, at the Houſe of Kate Crow, a place of noted ill Fame, by the Hands of Wm. Haley, Mariner, and John Hamilton, Plaiſterer:—The Verdict was found, Manſlaughter, and the two aggreſſors were committed to Jail.

Yeſterday unexpectedly arrived here Capt. Bruce from London having had but 4 weeks paſſage: We have receᵈ two papers by him, the 16th and 17th September: The preceding papers for a month are in the Capts. Freeman, Marſhall, Folger and Barnard, who ſailed before Capt. Bruce for this port:——We can give no accounts of what occurr'd the beginning of September, reſpecting the miniſtry: but we hear the commiſſioners of the board of cuſtoms for the continent of North America are ſettled; and thoſe gentlemen in England that are appointed had taken their paſſage in Capt. Watt who was to ſail in a few days after Capt Bruce.

We hear there is a London gazette in town of the 7th of September which contains the appointment of the following gentlemen to be commiſſioners of the board of cuſtoms to be eſtabliſhed in America, viz. John Hulton, Eſq; Hon. John Temple, Eſq; William Burch, Eſq; Charles Paxton, Eſq; and John Robinſon, Eſq; alſo that——Stewart, Eſq; ſurveyor general of the middle diſtrict, was appointed caſhier and paymaſter, & James Porter, Eſq; comptroller on the caſhier.

Laſt Thurſday morning about twenty minutes before 11, a ſmall ſhock of an earthquake was felt by ſeveral people in this town.—We hear the ſame was felt in moſt of the country towns: as far as Portſmouth in New Hampſhire.

His Excellency Governor Bernard has received a letter from the right hon. the Earl of Shelburn, one of his Majeſty's principal ſecretaries of ſtate, incloſing an order of his Majeſty in privy council, by which his Majeſty has been pleaſed to diſallow and reject an act paſſed by the great and general court or aſſembly of this province, in December 1766, intitled, An Act for granting Compenſation to the Sufferers, and of free and general Pardon, Indemnity, and Oblivion to the Offenders in the late Times.

We hear that the Beginning of Sept. died the Rt. Hon Charles Townſhend Chancellor of his Majeſty's Exchequer.

NEW-HAVEN, October 23.

Laſt Sunday Se'nnight the Dwelling Houſe of Benjamin Cook in, Eſq; of Southold, on Long Iſland, was conſumed by fire, with moſt of the Furniture; the Loſs computed at £. 400 Currency.

We hear from Fairfield, that one Stewart of that Town, who had been for ſome Time diſordered in his Mind, a few Days ago hanged himſelf in a Hen-Houſe, but being timely diſcovered, he was cut down, and his Life ſaved.

We hear, that Thurſday the 19th of next Month is ordered by AUTHORITY, to be obſerved as a Day of public Thankſgiving thro'out this Colony.

The Nomination for the next Election of Counſellors in this Colony, we hear, contains the ſame Gentlemen that were nominated laſt Year.

Laſt Thurſday died at Wallingford, in an advanced Age, Mrs. Whittelſey, Relict of the Rev'd Mr. Whittelſey of that Town.

HARTFORD, Oct. 26.

We hear from Woodſtock, that at the Training of the Military Company, on the 15th Inſt. Mr. Eliſha Lyon, eldeſt Son of Capt. Nehemiah Lyon of that Place, was unfortunately ſhot thro' the Head, by the Diſcharge of a Muſket which was loaded with Shot, as the Company were exerciſing, and immediately expired.—He was a Perſon of about 24 Years of Age, of a fair Character; and his Death is much lamented by his Acquaintance.

Laſt Saturday Se'nnight the Dwelling-Houſe, Barn, and Horſe-Houſe, belonging to Mr. Eliakim Demming of Farmington, Inn-holder, was entirely conſumed by Fire.——The Fire was communicated to a Quantity of dry Indian Corn, in the Huſks, then in the Houſe.—A briſk Gale of Wind, and the Doors open, increaſed the Flame.—The Houſe ſoon catched, and was burnt to the Ground, with all in it, except Mrs. Demming, and two ſmall Children, who narrowly eſcaped. The Flames ſoon extended themſelves to the Barn, which contained (beſides being well ſtored with Neceſſaries for the Tavern, the approaching Seaſon) upwards of 200 Buſhels of Wheat, and a large Quantity of Indian Corn, the Whole of which, together with the Horſe-Houſe, was deſtroyed by the devouring Flames!—This may ſerve as a Caution to Perſons, not to huſk their Corn in their Houſes, with Fire in the ſame Room.

The ſame Day the Houſe of Mr. William Sprague of Lebanon, was conſumed by Fire, together with great Part of his Houſhold Furniture, and a large Quantity of Engliſh Grain, &c. The Houſe, it ſeems, was ſet on Fire by ſome Sparks falling on the Roof, which immediately enkindled into a Flame.—but it is thought it might have been eaſily extinguiſhed, had the Houſe been furniſhed with a Ladder, whereby to have reached the Fire on the Out Side; but being deſtitute of that neceſſary Article, Endeavours were uſed to extinguiſh it, by breaking thro' the Roof, by which Means the Fire was ſcatter'd on the Roof, and the Flame ſoon encreaſed to ſuch a Degree as rendered all the Endeavours that were uſed to extinguiſh it, ineffectual.

LONDON, July 21.

We hear ſome late unjuſtifiable proceedings of the French and Spaniards, in the Weſt Indies, have occaſioned ſome repreſentations to be made by our ambaſſadors, at their reſpective courts; the anſwers to which have been tranſmitted to his Majeſty's Secretaries of State, and are ſaid to be very favourable towards a ſpeedy redreſs of thoſe grievances.

July 23 They adviſe from Marſeilles, that among the French ſubjects lately releaſed from captivity in the Morocco dominions was one Claude deBart, a native of Provence aged 109 who had been in ſlavery upwards of 70 years.

They write from Madeira, that ſome packets of great conſequence were lately ſeized there by the Portugueſe governor, on board a veſſel that touched at that Iſland, bound to South America; by which it was ſaid, farther lights have been obtained concerning the intrigues and ſtrength of the Jeſuits in that part of the world.

We hear that orders are given for thoroughly inſpecting and repairing all the capital ſhips of war in this kingdom, and to report the ſtate and condition of them to the Lords of the Admiralty.

It is now ſaid that the Duke of Grafton and Lord Gower are to be Secretaries of State; and that the Marquis of Rockingham is to be at the Head of the Treaſury.

Lord Camden it is ſaid, will be appointed Preſident of the Council; and the Hon. Mr. York Lord High Chancellor.

July 25 According to the laſt Letters from Tetuan, the French ambaſſador paid 300,000 dollars for the ranſom of the French ſlaves at that place, and delivered a preſent, of 20.000l. value, to the Emperor of Morocco, with whom he has concluded a peace for twenty years.

The Spaniſh ambaſſador at the ſame court, made alſo a valuable preſent, paid down 100,000l. and delivered up 320 Mooriſh ſlaves, who were priſoners in Spain, on concluding the peace with the Emperor.

The Venetian ambaſſador paid down 50,000 chequins, and a large preſent, value of 10 000l. on concluding a peace with the Emperor.

Two Daniſh ſhips are arrived at Salee, from Conſtantinople laden with ammunition, & large metal guns, ſent as a preſent from the Grand Signior to the Emperor.

Laſt Saturday died at Carmichael, in Scotland, John Carmichael, earl of Hyndford, Lord Carmichael and Baronet, a Lord of the Privy Council, Commiſſioner of the Police, and Vice admiral of Scotland, alſo one of the 16 Peers, and a Knight of the Ancient Order of the Thiſtle.

Suppoſed to be written By himſelf. (Price 6s.)

The Vicar unites in himſelf the three greateſt characters upon earth; he is a Prieſt, an Huſbandman, and the Father of a Family. He is drawn as ready to teach, and ready to obey; as ſimple in affluence, and majeſtic in adverſity. Every reader muſt be delighted with him for his ſincerity, his hoſpitality, his fervent and overflowing affection, his divine propenſity to forgiveneſs and reconciliation, his unaffected magnanimity in deep affliction, and his exemplary moderation when raiſed to affluence and joy. The Family of Wakefield in which a kindred likeneſs prevails of minds as well as of perſons, and the other characters introduced are well marked and properly ſupported, and there are interſperſed much rational entertainment, genuine ſtrokes of nature and humour, and pathetic pictures of domeſtic happineſs and domeſtic diſtreſs drawn from life, and directed to the heart.

This excellent novel does great honor to the author, Dr. Goldſmith, for its moral tendency; and for recommending and enforcing in the moſt exemplary manner, the great obligations of univerſal Benevolence: the moſt amiable quality that can poſſibly diſtinguiſh & adorn human nature.

Abſtract of an Act for reſtraining and prohibiting the Governor, Council, and Houſe of Repreſentatives of the Province of New-York, until Proviſion ſhall have been made for furniſhing the King's Troops with all the Neceſſaries required by the Law, from paſſing, or aſſenting to any Act, Vote, or Reſolution, for any other Purpoſe.

THE Preamble to this Act ſets forth, That the Province of New-York having, in direct Diſobedience of the Authority of the Britiſh Legiſlature, by the Acts of 5, 6, and 7 Geo. III. refuſed to make Proviſion for the Neceſſaries required by thoſe Acts, it is therefore, hereby enacted,

That from and after the firſt Day of October, 1767, the Governor and Council of New-York, are prohibited to paſs or aſſent to any Act of Aſſembly, or any Vote or Reſolution of the Houſe of Repreſentatives; and the ſaid Houſe likewiſe prohibited to paſs, or make any Vote or Reſolution, except for Adjournment, until Proviſion be made by them for furniſhing the King's Troops with all the Neceſſaries required by the recited Acts; and all Acts of Aſſembly, &c. contrary to the Tenor hereof, after October 1, 1767, are declared void, except as to the Choice and Approbation of a Speaker of the Houſe.

Abſtract of an Act to enable his Majeſty to put the Cuſtoms, and other Duties in the Britiſh Dominions in America, and the Execution of the Laws relating to Trade there, under the Management of Commiſſioners to be appointed for that Purpoſe, and to be reſident in the ſaid Dominions.

AS the officers appointed for the collection of the rates & duties in America, are obliged by 25 Car. II. to apply to the commiſſioners of the cuſtoms in England for their ſpecial inſtructions and directions, upon every particular doubt & difficulty which ariſes, in relation to the payment of the ſaid rates and duties; whereby all perſons, concerned in the commerce and trade of the ſaid Colonies and Plantations, are greatly obſtructed and delayed in the carrying on and tranſacting of their buſineſs: and, as the appointing of Commiſſioners to be reſident in ſome convenient part of his Majeſty's dominions of America, and to be inveſted with ſuch powers as are now exerciſed by the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms in England, by virtue of the laws in being, would relieve the ſaid merchants and traders from the ſaid inconveniences, and tend to the encouragement of commerce, and to the better ſecuring of the ſaid rates and duties, by the more ſpeedy and effectual collection thereof:

It is therefore hereby enacted, that his Majeſty be authoriſed to put the Cuſtoms, and other duties in the Britiſh colonies in America, under the management of Commiſſioners to be reſident there, with the ſame powers for carrying into execution the laws relating to the revenues and trade of the ſaid colonies, as are exerciſed by the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms in England: The Crown alſo is empowered, in ſuch Commiſſions to make proviſion for the execution of the ſaid laws there.

All deputations and other authorities, granted by the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms of England, before the paſſing of this act, or granted before any Commiſſion ſhall iſſue in purſuance of this act, are to be in force there, till revoked by the Treaſury.

Of Norwalk, in the County of Fairfield,

TAKES this Method to acquaint the Public, and particularly ſuch as are deſirous of taking the Small Pox, by Way of Inoculation, that having had conſiderable Experience in that Branch of Practice, and carried on the ſame the laſt Seaſon, with great Succeſs; has lately erected a convenient Hoſpital for that Purpoſe, juſt within the juriſdiction Line of the Province of New-York, about nine Miles diſtant from Norwalk Harbour, where he intends to carry on ſaid Branch of Practice, from the firſt of October until the firſt of May next. And that all ſuch as are diſpoſed to favor him with their Cuſtom, may depend upon being well provided with all proper and neceſſary Accommodations, Proviſions, &c. and the beſt Attendance, at the moderate Expence of Four Pounds, Lawful Money, for each Patient. That, after the firſt Set or Claſs, he purpoſes to give no Occaſion for waiting to go in by particular Setts, but to admit Perſons ſingly, juſt as it ſuits them; as he has another good Houſe provided near ſaid Hoſpital, where his Family are to live, and where all that come (after the firſt Sett go into the Hoſpital) are to remain with his Family, until they are ſufficiently prepared and inoculated, and until it be apparent that they have taken the Infection. 43 the3m

THE CONNECTICUT COURANT.

Printed by THOMAS GREEN, in HARTFORD.

To the Printers in the Colony of Connecticut.
GENTLEMEN,

Be pleaſed to inſert in your Papers, the following obſervations on the ſubject of inoculation for the Small Pox, which are offered to the Conſideration of the Public, which will oblige many of your Readers, and among Others, your humble Servant,

G. W.

THE practiſe of inoculating for the ſmall pox, was firſt brought into Europe from Georgia, Circaſſia, &c. and is now ſucceſsfully practiſed in Great Britain and Ireland. In America, it was firſt practiſed in Boſton, by Dr. Boylſton, A D. 1720, the lawfulneſs of the practiſe may juſtly be argued from the ſurpriſing ſucceſs attending it, if it could not be ſupported from other conſiderations, as we may not ſuppoſe the ſovereign Lord of Life, would crown with his bleſſing a practiſe founded in wickedneſs, at the loweſt computation one in 5 die with the ſmall pox the natural way, while at a medium not more than one in a hundred, in the preſent method by inoculation, which is ſufficient grounds at leaſt to examine, whether any legiſlature have a right wholly to prohibit the practiſe of inoculation, under any reſtrictions and regulations whatever, this I truſt I may do, notwithſtanding the law of this colony wholly prohibiting it, provided I offer my ſentiments with modeſty, before I have no deſign of reflecting on the legiſlature, but at all times to ſtrengthen their hands, however I may not think them right in every act of legiſlation, if I am miſtaken, I hope ſome able pen will put me right.

I will then obſerve in the firſt place, what I truſt no one will preſume to deny, viz. that ſelf preſervation is the firſt principle or law of nature, which God has implanted not only in man, but in the loweſt ſpecies of the brutal part of the creation, to preſerve that continuance of exiſtence which God has given them.

In the next place conſiſtent with this firſt principle or law of nature, is the requirement of the ſixth commandment in the decalogue, if our aſſembly of divines have given us the true and genuine meaning and extent of it, when they tell us the ſixth commandment requireth all lawful means to preſerve our own life, and the life of others.

The reverend and pious Mr. Burkitt, in his inſtructions in the principles of the chriſtian religion, tells us to the ſame purpoſe.

Q. What doth the ſixth commandment require?

A. All lawful means to preſerve my own life and health, and the life and health of my neighbour.

Q. What means has God appointed for the preſervation of our life and health?

A. A ſober moderate uſe of meat, drink, phyſick, ſleep labour and recreation.

Q. What ſins are forbidden in the ſixth commandment?

A. The deſtroying my own life, by any act of violence, by intemperence and exceſs, or by neglecting any means of its preſervation, and alſo the hazarding the life of my neighbour, openly or ſecretly, by lawful means, doubtleſs muſt be underſtood all means that are not in themſelves ſinful——or that are not inconſiſtant with an external moral obligation.——

Thoſe who oppoſe inoculation perhaps will ſay, inoculation while it ſtands interdicted by a law of the colony, is not a lawful means of preſerving life, and that humane laws are binding on the conſciences of chriſtians, I readily will grant, humane laws are binding on the conſciences of chriſtians, wherever humane laws do not ſtand in direct oppoſition to the divine laws.

I will fairly ſtate the caſe, I have 15 in my family who never had the ſmall pox, a ſtroling vagrant who has that diſorder upon him at a ſeaſon when it is moſt eaſily communicated, comes into my houſe, and my whole family are all equally expoſed to receive the infection, within a few hours I am convinced of my danger, I conſult my phyſician who ſays to me, if your family are immediately inoculated it will anticipate the infection in the natural way and it is a 100 to 1, if any of your family die, but if you leave the diſtemper to itſelf, in the moſt favourable manner, you muſt expect that 3 out of the 15 muſt go down to the barrs of the Pitt, what muſt I do in that difficult and diſtreſſing ſituation, muſt I ſubmit to the law of the colony in that caſe, or muſt I follow the dictates of nature, for my own preſervation, and therein fulfil what the ſix commandment requires. I do not mean to caſt any reflection on the legiſlature of the colony, but calmly to conſider whether any legiſlature may conſiſtent with the requirements of the ſixth commandment, or with the primary law of nature, prohibit the practiſe of inoculation, under any reſtrictions and regulations whatever—for my own part, I will ſpeak my mind openly and honeſtly, I think they cannot, unleſs it can be certainly proved that inoculation cannot be practiſed, without expoſing a whole community, for I readily grant a whole community are not to be put in fear, or be expoſed to an infectious diſeaſe, under the greateſt diſadvantages, when in the whole courſe of their lives, they would never be expos'd to it, if this is the caſe, I readily give it up, and that it ought not to be practiſed, but has tryal of this been made, has the legiſlature of the colony ever permitted inoculation, and at the ſame time enacted that no perſon who has not had the diſtemper, ſhall approach within half a mile of the place where the infection is,——or that either the phyſician who attends the hoſpital, or any nurſes or waiters, leave the hoſpital without due cleanſing, before they preſume to mix with other company, or have they laid the perſons inoculated, under any reſtrictions, not to depart the hoſpital, until they have obtained a certificate, from the attending phyſician, that they are duly cleans'd, and all this under ſevere penalties and forfeitures, nothing of this has been done, but that matter was left to the care of the ſelect men &c. of the towns, where it was practis'd, if this was all, I may venture to ſay, no effectual care was taken to render inoculation ſafe in the colony, and until ſomething like this is done, nothing is done to any purpoſe, but perhaps thoſe who oppoſe inoculation will ſay the government do nothing to hinder thoſe perſons who muſt neceſſarily go abroad, from being inoculated, provided they will go out of the government, to obtain it, and remain out of the government 20 days after they leave the hoſpital or place infected, this they will tell you is licenſe enough, and you may go to New-York, and there take care of your ſafety, and obſerve the primary laws of nature, or the ſixth commandment in their full latitude, provided you expoſe the inhabitants of New York and New Jerſey, 20 days to the infection before you venture home, to communicate the diſeaſe to any one in the colony of Connecticut, this I take to be in reality the full force and extent of the argument, if any argument it contains—for to ſay thoſe who deſire inoculation may go to New-York and have it, and this is licence enough, is in reality ſaying they may not have it at all, for if we wholly prohibit the practice in this colony, and have no right or authority to permit or order it to be practiſed elſewhere, we have done nothing at all, but the ſafety of the government is not ſo well ſecured as it might be, if the cleanſing of perſons, after inoculation is not regulated by our own laws, and by perſons within the colony, who would be ſubject to the authority of it. It is a thing well known that perſons after inoculation are impatient of reſtraint, they have had the infection very light and eaſy, and then imagine the danger attending the diſeaſe, is all a Bug Bear they want to return to their friends and acquaintance and in reality do not obſerve proper cleanſing, I believe not one in twenty have remain'd out of the colony half the time limited by law, their phyſician is under no danger of forfeiture, or ſubject to the frowns of the legiſlature, readily comply's with the importunity of their patients, and by this means the diſtemper has frequently been bro't into the colony and many perſons expos'd, all which might be prevented if under our own regulation in the colony. Notwithſtanding the repeated violation of this law in almoſt every inſtance where perſons have gone out of the colony for inoculation, or even where they have been inoculated in the government, as many have ſince the law has been in being, there has not been one proſecution, for the breach of it, accept in the county of New London where the action was ſo laid, (many think of deſign) as that it fail'd, and that likewiſe in a caſe where great numbers were inoculated, the truth I judge to be this, that great part of mankind, both informing and executive officers, judge that the law is either not well calculated, or that it is an abridgment of the natural rights of mankind, or care would be taken duly to execute it, but to leave the caſe to ſtand upon the footing it now doth, the colony is in reality more expos'd than to permit two or three Hoſpitals in the colony, and regulate them by well concerted laws, and I ſincerely wiſh, the Legiſlature of the government would take effectual care either to execute the law now in force, or permit one or two hoſpitals to be ſet up in the colony, and regulate them by our own laws, that our ſeamen and friends who go abroad may have the diſtemper without leaving the colony to obtain it, and draining the colony of large ſums of money annually, and ſpreading the diſeaſe on their return home, and if it is found impracticable upon tryal having well regulated laws to ſecure it, that the government cannot be ſafe and the infection prevented from ſpreading we had better ſubmit to have the Maſters & Seaman of our ſhipping, ſeiz'd with the diſeaſe abroad, their voyages borke by delays, and the owners fortunes rendered deſperate than that the diſtemper ſhould be ſpread in our towns and they made deſolate thereby, but untill ſuch tryals have been made I ſhall not be convinced of the impracticability of it, and until then I humbly requeſt, that the legiſlature would be pleas'd to direct that the preſent law be put in force, or one better calculated, and ſubſtituted in its room,———for it is not fitting a law ſhould be in full force, to be a terror to thoſe who eſteem the laws of their country binding upon their conſcience, while others violate the law, and expoſe the whole government to the ravages of a diſeaſe, ſo fatal in its conſequences.

SERMONS TO YOUNG WOMEN. By JAMES FORDICE D D. An eminent diſſenting Miniſter in London, 2 Vols. (Price 8s 8d. Lawful Money, or 3l. 5s. Old Tenor) neatly bound.

Though this author is a profeſſed advocate for that Sex, which leads the world, he does not however addreſs them in the uſual ſtrains of flattery and adoration but in the ſober & impartial ſtile of friendſhip He entertains the higheſt idea of their importance & deſtination and does not conſider them in that debaſing light in which they are too often conſidered, as formed only to be domeſtic drudges, and the ſlaves of our pleaſures; but as intended to be reaſonable and agreable companions, faithful and affectionate friends, the SWEETNERS and the CHARM OF HUMAN LIFE. There are no compoſitions of this kind in the Engliſh language in which are to be found greater delicacy of ſentiment, correctneſs of imagination, elegance of taſte, or that contain ſuch genuine pictures of life and manners HAPPY THE MOTHERS WHO FOLLOW HIS MAXIMS IN FORMING THE TASTE AND MANNERS OF THEIR DAUGHTERS! HAPPY THRICE HAPPY THE DAUGHTERS WHO ARE BLESSED WITH SUCH MOTHERS

The ſermons of this author (who has long been admired as the beſt preacher among the clergy in North Britain) are remarkable for the moſt engaging ſimplicity and elegance of the expreſſion, which is at the ſame time conciſe, nervous, pathetic and correct.

Diſſertations on Subjects relating to the Genius and the Evidences of Chriſtianity, by Profeſſor Gerard.

Of this Author, who has now entered the liſts in ſupport of chriſtianity, nothing more need be ſaid, than that he hath lately, in his eſſay on Taſte, illuſtrated a ſubject on which the greateſt modern writers had employed their pens, viz Voltaire, D'Alembert & Monteſquieu.

STACKHOUSE's new Hiſtory of the HOLY BIBLE, from the Beginning of the World to the Eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity. With Anſwers to moſt of the controverted Queſtions. Diſſertations upon the moſt remarkable paſſages, and a connection of profane hiſtory all along. To which is added, NOTES, explaining difficult texts, rectifying miſ tranſlations, and reconciling ſeeming contradictions. A new edition, in 6 vol. 8vo. illuſtrated with thirty ſix curious plates and maps elegantly engraved.

The laudable intention of this learned and worthy author, is to methodize, explain and illuſtrate the hiſtorical part of the Holy Bible, ſo as to remove the difficulties in reading it, and to maintain the truth and authority of thoſe ſacred records, and the evidences and excellencies of the chriſtian diſpenſation. He likewiſe diſplays in the moſt maſterly manner, the perfection and excellency, the antiquity, ſtyle, and other properties of the Old & New Teſtament. In ſhort, this admirable performance is not only a plain and eaſy narrative of the hiſtorical parts of the Holy Bible, but by ſtrength of reaſon and argument will ſilence the Cavils and objections which have hitherto given ſhelter to profaneneſs & infidelity; will reclaim the heart of the unbeliever, and ſtop the noiſy mouth of the ſcoffer; will inſtruct the ignorant, confirm the weak and wavering, and not only ſatisfy the curious and impartial enquirer, but adminiſter comfort to every real chriſtian. The great character that this judicious work has already acquired, & the general good reception that it has met with from the learned and thinking part of mankind, render it unneceſſary to ſay any thing more in its recommendation.

The Vicar unites in himſelf the three greateſt characters upon earth; he is a Prieſt, an Huſbandman, and the Father of a Faimly. He is drawn as ready to teach, and ready to obey; as ſimple in affluence, and majeſtic in adverſity. Every reader muſt be delighted with him for his ſincerity, his hoſpitality, his fervent and overflowing affection, his divine propenſity to forgiveneſs and reconciliation, his unaffected magnanimity in deep affliction, and his exemplary moderation when raiſed to affluence and joy. The Family of Wakefield in which a kindred likeneſs prevails of minds as well as of perſons, and the other characters introduced are well marked and properly ſupported, and there are interſperſed much rational entertainment, genuine ſtrokes of nature and humour, and pathetic pictures of domeſtic happineſs and domeſtic diſtreſs drawn from life, and directed to the heart.

This excellent novel does great honor to the author, Dr. Goldſmith, for its moral tendency; and for recommending and enforcing in the moſt exemplary manner, the great obligations of univerſal Benevolence*: the moſt amiable quality that can poſſibly diſtinguiſh & adorn* human nature.

MONDAY, November 16, 1767. NUMBER 151.

Printed by THOMAS GREEN, in HARTFORD.

BOSTON, November 2.

At a meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the town of Boſton, legally aſſembled at Faneuil Hall, on Wedneſday the 28th of October 1767.

The hon. James Otis, Eſq; moderator.

A written addreſs to the inhabitants, ſubſcribed Philo Patriæ, recommending oeconomy and manufactures, was, by their order read—

THE town then took into conſideration the petition of a number of inhabitants, "That ſome effectual meaſures might be agreed upon to promote induſtry, oeconomy, and manufactures; thereby to prevent the unneceſſary importation of european commodities, which threaten the country with poverty and ruin:" Whereupon in a very large and full meeting, the following votes and reſolutions were paſſed unanimouſly.

Whereas the exceſſive uſe of foreign ſuperfluities is the chief cauſe of the preſent diſtreſſed ſtate of this town, as it is thereby drained of its money; which misfortune is likely to be increaſed by the late additional burthens and impoſitions on the trade of the province, which threaten the country with poverty and ruin:

Therefore, voted, That this town will take all prudent and legal meaſures, to encourage the produce & manufactures of this province, and to leſſen the uſe of ſuperfluities and particularly the following enumerated articles imported from abroad, viz. Loaf ſugar, cordage, anchors, coaches, chaiſes, and carriages of all ſorts, horſe furniture, men and womens hatts, men and womens apparel ready made, houſe furniture, gloves, mens and womens ſhoes, ſole leather, ſheathing and deck nails, gold and ſilver and thread lace of all ſorts, gold and ſilver buttons, wrought plate of all ſorts, diamond, ſtone and paſte ware, ſnuff, muſtard, clocks and watches, ſilverſmiths and jewellers ware, broad cloths that coſt above 10s. per yard, muffs, furrs and tippets, and all ſorts of millenary ware, ſtarch, women and childrens ſtays, fire engines, china ware, ſilk and cotton velvets, gauze, pewterers hollow ware, linſeed oyl, glue, lawns, cambricks, ſilks of all kinds for garments, malt liquor and cheeſe.—And that a ſubſcription for this end be and hereby is recommended to the ſeveral inhabitants and houſholders of the town; and that John Rowe, Eſq; &c. be a committee to prepare a form of ſubſcription, to report the ſame as ſoon as poſſible; and alſo to procure ſubſcriptions to the ſame.

And whereas it is the opinion of this Town that divers new manufactures may be ſet up in America, to its great advantage, & ſome others carried to a greater extent, particularly thoſe of Glaſs and Paper.

Therefore Voted, That this Town will by all prudent Ways and Means, encourage the Uſe and Conſumption of Glaſs and Paper, made in any of the Britiſh American Colonies; and more eſpecially in this Province. [Then the Meeting adjourn'd till 3 o'Clock Afternoon.]

III o'clock Poſt Meridian.

Whereas this province labours under a heavy debt, incurred in the courſe of the late war; and the inhabitants by this means muſt be for ſome time ſubject to very burthenſome taxes:——And as our trade has for ſome years been on the decline, and is now particularly under great embarraſſments, and burthened with heavy impoſitions, and our medium very ſcarce, and the balance of trade greatly againſt this country.

'We therefore the ſubſcribers, being ſenſible that it is abſolutely neceſſary, in order to extricate us out of theſe embarraſſed and diſtreſſed circumſtances, to promote induſtry, oeconomy and manufactures among ourſelves, and by this means prevent the unneceſſary importation of european commodities, the exceſſive uſe of which threatens the country with poverty and ruin—Do promiſe and engage, to and with each other, that we will encourage the uſe and conſumption of all articles manufactured in any of the Britiſh American colonies, and more eſpecially in this province; and that we will not, from and after the 31ſt of December next enſuing, purchaſe any of the following articles, imported from abroad, viz. Loaf ſugar, and all the other articles enumerated above.——

And we further agree ſtrictly to adhere to the late regulation reſpecting funerals, and will not uſe any gloves but what are manufactured here, nor procure any new garments upon ſuch an occaſion, but what ſhall be abſolutely neceſſary.

The above report having been conſidered, the queſtion was put, Whether the ſame ſhall be accepted? Voted unanimouſly in the affirmative.—And that ſaid committee be deſired to uſe their beſt endeavours to get the ſubſcription papers filled up as ſoon as may be. Alſo, voted unanimouſly, That the foregoing vote and form of a ſubſcription relative to the enumerated articles, be immediately publiſhed; and that the ſelectmen be directed to diſtribute a proper number of them among the freeholders of this town; and to forward a copy of the ſame to the ſelectmen of every town in the province; and alſo to the principal city or town officers of the chief towns in the ſeveral colonies on the continent, as they may think proper.

That clauſe in the warrant, "That the mind and reſolution of the town may be taken with reſpect to the expediency of a humble requeſt to his excellency the governour, that he will convene the general aſſembly as ſoon as may be," was read and conſidered: Whereupon, Voted unanimouſly, That the repreſentatives of the town having already made humble application to his excellency the governour for the purpoſe above mentioned, the town do approve of their conduct therein; hereby declaring their ſenſe of the importance of the meaſure, and expreſſing their hopes that his excellency will be pleaſed to favor it, by convening the general aſſembly as ſoon as conveniently may be.

The clauſe in the warrant, viz. "To conſider of ſome meaſures for employing the poor of the town of Boſton, by [illegible] the linnen manufacture, and in ſuch other ways as ſhall be thought moſt beneficial, was read—Whereupon Voted, that John [illegible], Eſq; &c. be a committee for the purpoſe aforeſaid, to report as ſoon as may be.——

Atteſt,
William Cooper, Town Clerk.

Then the meeting was adjourn'd to the 20th day of November inſtant.

At the above meeting ſeveral ſamples of ſtarch, called Poland Starch, and of the common ſort of ſtarch: Hair powder of the beſt ſort, glue, and ſnuff like Kippen's, ſo called, all manufactured in this town by Meſſrs. Hewes, Baker and Gilliſpie, were produced in town-meeting, and much approved of.

Mr. John Baker who manufactures the Poland ſtarch ſo called, being preſent, declared his readineſs to contract with the inhabitants for 2000 barrels at the prime coſt of that article in London.

Mr. Gilliſpie the manufacturer of Scotch ſnuff ſo called, offered to furniſh the inhabitants with what may be wanted, at the firſt coſt of that article in North-Britain.

The town were alſo informed that our paper manufacturers had given aſſurance, that in caſe they can be ſupplied with the [illegible] away in our great towns, they could ſupply the province with whatever ſorts of paper they have occaſion for, in ſufficient quantity, with ſome left for the other colonies.

We are confidently told, that in the Town of Lynn upwards of Forty Thouſand Pair of Womens Shoes have been made in one Year, equal in Goodneſs to any imported from Abroad—It is tho't that in a few Years they will be ſupply'd with Callimancoe and other Stuffs manufactured in this Province.

It is judged that the Spirit of Frugality and Oeconomy prevails in our Country Towns as the Demand for European Superfluities is of late very greatly diminiſhed.

We muſt after all our Efforts, depend greatly upon the female Sex for the Introduction of Oeconomy among us: and thoſe who have the Pleaſure of an Acquaintance with them, aſſure us that their utmoſt Aid will not be wanting.

In an Addreſs to the Ladies from HENRY FLYNT, after alluding to a few Inſtances, among many of divine Heroiſm in that Sex, which hath often ſaved a Country, he cloſes as follows.—"All I think at preſent that can be reaſonably expected or deſired of you, is to conſent to lay aſide all ſuperfluous Ornaments for a Seaſon—after which they ſhall be ſurely returned to you again with Intereſt.—You ſhall be cloathed in Purple and Scarlet, and fine Linnen of our own, and with other glorious Apparel; which, if poſſible, ſhall add a Luſtre to your native Charms."

In a large Circle of very agreeable Ladies in this Town, it was unanimouſly agreed to lay aſide the Uſe of Ribbons, &c. &c. &c. for which there has been ſo great a Reſort to Millinery in times paſt.—It is hoped that this Reſolution will be followed by others of the Sex throughout the Province——How agreeable will they appear in their native Beauty ſtript of thoſe Ornaments, from the prevailing Motive of Love to their Country.

We are aſſured from good Authority, that many of the Ladies of this Town have ſaid, that in the Liſt of Articles not to be purchaſed, TEA ought by no Means to have been omitted; and that they are reſolved to omit the Uſe of it for the future.

There is a certain Herb, lately found in this Province, which begins already to take Place in the Room of Green and Bohea Tea, which is ſaid to be of a very ſalutary Nature, as well as a more agreeable Flavour, ——It is called Labrador.

The virtues of the plant or ſhrub from which this delicate Tea is gathered, were firſt diſcovered by the Aborigines, and from the Canadians learned them. Before the ceſſion of Canada to Great Britain, we knew little or nothing of this moſt excellent herb: but ſince that we have been taught to find it growing on every hill and dale, between the Lat. 40. and 60. It is to be found all over New England in great Plenty, & that of the beſt quality, particularly on the banks of Penobſcot, Kennebeck, Nichewannock, and Merrimac. Immenſe quantities may be found on the mountains near the great lakes.

IN this time of great diſtreſs and grievous complaining among tradeſman, about dullneſs of trade, and uncommon ſcarcity of money, it would be extremely beneficent if the wealthy and money'd men of all denominations, would call for their tradeſman's bills, and pay thoſe ſums which to them are trifling and inconſiderable, but to the poor induſtrious tradeſman, the needy mechanic, and all men of narrow circumſtances, are of great conſequence; eſpecially conſidering, that in the courſe of trade & buſineſs, a little remains here, a little there, and many of theſe littles collected together, would amount to ſuch a ſum as would ſet the needy man in a free and eaſy ſituation, enable him to pay his way, and ſo the money would circulate from hand to hand untill it ſoon reverted to the ſame benevolent hands that had kindly put it in motion: the little payments coming ſpontaneouſly from the great would do the poor man infinite ſervice.

PROBUS.

NEWPORT, November 2.

One Day laſt Week, a young man named Jeremiah Brown, of South Kingſton, as he was driving his Team, was accidentally catched by the Head, between one of the Wheels of his Cart and a Tree, and was cruſhed in ſuch a Manner as immediately put an end to his Life.

We hear that a gentleman in this Colony remarkable for induſtry, manufactured in his own Family, within the year paſt, 6Hundred and Fifty Yards of Cloth, of different kinds.

The General Aſſembly of this Colony met at South Kingſton on Wedneſday laſt and on Saturday adjourned to the laſt Monday in February next. At this Seſſion, the Lower houſe Voted, that the Speaker be requeſted to write to his Majeſty's Secretary of State, & to the Lords of the Treaſury, reſpecting the Sufferers by the Riot in this Town in Auguſt, 1765, and to tranſmit to their Lordſhips Copies of the ſeveral Reſolutions of the Houſe with Regard to granting Compenſation to the ſaid ſufferers.

NEW-LONDON, Nov. 6.

A Schooner with ſix Perſons on board ſailed from Stonington the 24th of laſt Month, bound to Boſton, and on the Friday following ſhe drove on ſhore in a Gale of Wind, at Duxbury, without any Perſon on board; the next Day two perſons, (one of which ſuppoſed to be the Maſter,) Thomas Griffing, and James Minor, drove on ſhore.——There was 3000 Wt. of choice cheeſe ſhipped on board all made by Mr. John Iriſh of Stonington, who went in the veſſel; but it's tho't that he and one or two others were left at Nantucket, where the Schooner was to touch.

A Letter from N. York to a Gentleman in this Town, contains an account of the Death of Mr. Joſeph Ewing, Maſter, and Mr.—— Conner, Doctor of the Cygnet Man of War, at South Carolina.

From the LONDON CHRONICLE.

A Correſpondent has ſent the following anecdote, which he ſays may be depended on for fact.——A noble Lord in the county of  lately falling in Love with one of his tenant's daughters, he took every opportunity of accompliſhing his determined purpoſe of ruining her; but "ſo coy a dame was ſhe to him," not all his vows of never ceaſing love, nor all the vaſt profuſion of toys and preſents that he profered her nor the alluring propoſition of a ſettlement, that would have inſured her ſtate and equipage for life," could win her to his bed."——Her virtue ſerved but as fuel to his fire. What was to be done? Diſcloſe his unconquerable and unconquering paſſion to her father——hum!—yea, now there are hopes indeed; a father's poverty may be ſuppoſed a father's love; a laviſh bribe may annihilate at once a parent's duty.——He ſucceeded to his wiſh. The terms indeed were high—a Thouſand Pounds! but "All for love, or the world well loſt," The father received the wages of his conſent and aid, and (true to his promiſe) introduced his Lordſhip into his daughter's chamber at the dead of night, with a ſolemn promiſe that no aſſiſtance ſhould be conſequent of any cries of diſtreſs. Cries indeed, for ſome time were made; but what did they avail? "The cruel ſpoiler triumphed, cropt the fair roſe, and rifled all it's ſweetneſs;"—but at length the morning came," when behold! who did the noble enamorato find himſelf embracing? No other than his "wedded wife", whom the juſtly artful and reſenting father had privately acquainted with" the ſtory of her huſband's love." What followed this diſcovery?——Diſappointment—rage—diſtraction—deſperation—ſullenneſs—ſhame—contrition—interceſſion—reconcilement—pardon. The reſcued victim then was led, bluſhing, by her honored, honorable parent, to the preſence of the noble, and now happy couple: When her Ladyſhip (praiſing her virtue, and folding her in her arms) generouſly doubled to the lovely girl the ſum that had been paid by his Lordſhip to her father, as the intended purchaſe of her honor.

LONDON, Auguſt 9.

A letter from Chepſtow mentions an act of infamous cruelty committed by a farmer in the pariſh of Tiddenham laſt Tueſday, that deſerves to be recorded with Mrs. Brownrigg's. This avaricious wretch coming to overlook his reapers found two poor women gleaning the field, one of whom had an infant in her arms; when without the leaſt provocation he fell upon them, and beat them unmercifully that the ſkulls of the poor woman and the child appear to be both fractured, and they now are under the care of two eminent ſurgeons at Chepſtow, who diſpair of their recovery. Our correſpondent adds, that this vile fellow was the other day of the loweſt rank of ſervants, but had the good luck to marry his miſtreſs: and is now likely to verify the old proverb, Set a beggar on horſeback and he will ride to the devil.

"The Phœnix frigate, Capt. Lambert, arrived at Spithead this morning from Jamaica, having on board the two porters, who ſome time ago went off with 2000l. the property of ſome Merchants of London, an order having been lodged, together with a warrant from the Lord Mayor, properly backed in the hands of one Mr. Bucknell, a merchant of this Town; they are expected to be brought on ſhore immediately. Anecdote is handed about here in relation to thoſe unhappy fellows, as follows; That one of them ſettled immediately at Kingſton in Jamaica agreed for the purchaſe of a houſe and land & paid 300l. in part payment, while the other pretending not to find a place to his mind, agreed with the maſter of a ſloop to carry him to ſome other ſettlement; he was apprehended the night before his intended departure, and being queſtioned where the money was, ſaid, that it was on board, the portmanteau was ſearched but nothing found, & the priſoner ſtill inſiſting that he had ſent it on board; the Merchant whith the aſſiſtance of the peace officers ſearched the ſloop, and found the money hid away by the Maſter, who had played at rob thief, the ſloop was ſtopt, and the maſter ſecured."

One William Lownders, an old labouring man, was killed by falling from a hay-mow at Farmer Fazerkely's, of Throſtle-neſt, about two miles from Mancheſter, and the remains of the poor old man being laid out upon a Table in the kitchen, 'til a coroner could take an enquiry of his death the next day, ſome hardened wretch took an opportunity in the night of opening the window, pulled the corpſe oppoſite to it, and ſtole out of the breeches pocket a few Shillings, which the poor man had received a day or two before, and alſo ſtole the farmers ſheet which covered the body, and got of undiſcovered.

Yeſterday a Journeyman Plaiſterer's wife in Faſhion ſtreet, Spitalfields, cut the throat of her daughter, a child of about four years of age, who died ſoon afterwards. The woman has abſconded.

Extract of a letter from Lyons, dated July 20.

"A trial will ſoon come on in this city for a crime of the moſt horrid nature. A young woman, very beautiful, of honeſt parents though not rich, became the object of the criminal deſires of three young men. Each had ſeperately attempted to ſeduce her but without ſucceſs; the better to accompliſh their deſigns they joined together, and had recourſe to the ſtratagems of a procureſs; this women, under ſome pretence, drew the girl to her houſe, and immediately informed the three libertines thereof, whereat they haſtened and gained by force what they could not obtain by conſent; but quickly the fear of puniſhment ſeized them and the reſult of their deliberation was to kill the young woman. They cut her into pieces, and threw them into the Rhone."

"Some days paſſed without the father and mother being able to diſcover what was become of their daughter; but the river having ſucceſſively thrown on ſhore the members of a mangled dead body, it was concluded, that the girl had been aſſaſſinated. It was at length diſcovered, that ſhe had been at the houſe of the procureſs, who was thereupon taken into cuſtody and examined, when ſhe confeſſed the crime and the perpetrators of it, and ſentence is expected ſoon to be paſſed."

Orders are given for a general ſurvey to be made of all the antient fortreſſes in Scotland, and a report to be made of the ſtate thereof.

QUEBEC, October 15.

Wedneſday, the 30th of September, was tried in the Supreme Court of Judicature, at Montreal, an Action, in which Capt. Diſney late town Major of Montreal, was plaintiff, and Thomas Walker, Eſq; late a juſtice of the Peace for the Diſtrict of Montreal, was Defendant. The Action was brought for having maliciouſly, and without any probable Cauſe, procured the Plaintiff to be impriſoned and detained in Priſon 119 Days, upon a Charge of having been concerned in the felonious Aſſault committed upon the defendant in December, 1764, and having maliciouſly, & without any probable Cauſe, procured the Plaintiff to be indicted and tried for the ſaid Felony, at the laſt Seſſion of the Supreme Court holden at Montreal, in the Months of February and March laſt and given Evidence againſt the Plaintiff in ſupport of the ſaid Indictment; And the Damages were laid at £. 2000 of lawful Money of this Province. The Defendant ſtated in a long ſpecial Plea, the grounds upon which he had carried on the Proſecution againſt the Plaintiff, which amounted to a very ſtrong probable cauſe. The Trial laſted about five Hours & the whole Conduct of the Defendant in Carrying on the late criminal Proſecution was very narrowly inquired into: And the Jury after withdrawing about five Minutes, gave a Virdict for the Defendant. The Conduct of a Gentleman of Character, now abſent from this Province, with reſpect to a propoſal made by him about the Month of January laſt, to one of the Gentleman then in Cuſtody on Account of the ſaid felonious Aſſault on Mr. Walker, was likewiſe fully examined on this Occaſion and fully juſtified to the general Satisfaction of the Public.

PHILADELPHIA, November 5.

The negro who ſome time ago killed his maſter, Mr. Daniel Hart, at Hopewell, was found on the 22d of October laſt. It ſeems he took a rope from off one of his maſter's horſes the night after he committed the murder, with which he hanged himſelf. His body was burnt the next day.

Monday laſt arrived here the brig Grampus, Capt. Robeſon, from Rotterdam, who bro't in with him, the crew of the Schooner William, Capt. Francis Browne, which he took up at ſea; they report as follows, that they ſailed from New-Haven the 11th of October, with lumber and cattle for Martinico, when lying too in the night of the 15th, the ſchooner over ſet, by which accident one boy was drowned, the remainder of the crew ſeven in number got on her ſide, where they remained till next day, when ſhe, having fill'd, the cattle being over, and the mainmaſt gone, righted, but was full of water, ſo that they were forced to live on the bowſprit and ſhrouds of the foremaſt; the firſt two days they had neither meat nor drink, they afterwards lived on ſome beef, two dolphins and a ſhark, which they caught with a crooked nail, all which they were obliged to eat raw, they alſo had ſome water, which with the greateſt difficulty they got out of the fore ſcuttle, the capt. being obliged to dive ſeveral times for it; On the ſeventh in lat. 36 long 68 Capt. Robenſon came to their aſſiſtance, and with the greateſt difficulty, his boat being very leaky, took them off; they had that day, by the waſhing of the ſea, loſt both their beef and water, and being almoſt ſpent, they expected to periſh.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 12.

By Letters from Turk Iſlands, we learn, that ſoon after Governor [illegible] arrived there, a Frame of Government had been agreed on whereby the Governor choſe ſix Gentlemen as Councellors or Aſſiſtants to him, and the People eight, as Repreſentatives to them, who have lately agreed to lay ſuch heavy Taxes on the reſt of the Inhabitants, that many of the Settlers are determined to leave the Place.——A conſequence the Letter Writers juſtly obſerves, that will always follow where too many idlers live in proportion to the labourers.

"I received a Piece of Linen from the Society: it being brown, I deſired my Linen Draper to get it bleach'd; he told me, that during 45 Years that he had been a draper he had never ſeen ſuch an excellent Piece of Linen: that as he had got a fortune out of North America, it gave him Pleaſure to hear it was manufactured there, but as Linen Draper he was ſorry for it——It has been 6 Weeks on the Graſs, and the Bleacher ſays it muſt be in his Hands 6 more before it will be well whiten'd; ſays that he never ſaw a Piece equal to it, and deſired to know of what Fabrick it was. Such are the Praiſes of your manufactures; I hope ſoon to ſee the Day, that we ſhall import great Quantities of Linen from New York, into this Kingdom, as well as from Ireland and Scotland, and that Germany ſhall be excluded."

By Capt. Luther from North Carolina, we learn, that the [illegible] on the 16th of October laſt, was very violent in thoſe parts, and that out of 14 veſſels that were then laying windbound, only ſeven rode it out: A brig from Antigua was forced aſhore & bilged; a ſloop from the Weſt Indies ſunk at her anchors, but the people were ſaved; Capt. Drake in a Virginia ſloop, was drove aſhore and beat to pieces and the Captain drowned, and two of the men were drifted on the round houſe upwards of 14 miles, in as many hours, in continual diſtreſs till they got aſhore; Capt. Ruſſel in a Carolina ſloop, was drove aſhore, but will be got off again; one New-England ſloop was drove above two miles over the ſhoals, and tis thought will not be got off again, and the 7th was drove aſhore and bilged. Capt. Luther heard of a great deal of devaſtation in other Places, but did not learn the particulars.

We hear from Newport, that on Friday or Saturday laſt, a young woman poiſoned herſelf and the maſter of the houſe, with whom ſhe lived. The former died on Saturday, and the life of the latter was deſpaired of the ſame evening. The particulars of this melancholy account, we have not yet learned; but the report we have is, that the woman was with child by the gentleman, who, ſhe underſtood was to be publiſhed to another perſon on Sunday, to avenge which conduct, ſhe had recourſe to this dreadful expedient.

LONDON, September 11.

THE following political conjectures, occurred in a converſation this week, at a coffee-houſe near St. James's:—That the marriage of the Prince Stadtholder with a Princeſs of Pruſſia would be a fine barrier to the Dutch; and that in caſe of a rupture with England, the King of Pruſſia would immediately ſeize Hanover. Nay, it was even expected that the King of Pruſſia was ſo offended at his demand of three years ſubſidy not being accepted of by England: who put him off with one only, and made peace without his conſent, that he will take the firſt pretence of joining the family compact, who will then permit him to ſeize Hanover as a recompence.

That a war with France, Spain and Holland muſt ſoon happen; and that the French have 60 [illegible] more than they ought to have, beſides a great number of frigates, and would take the firſt opportunity of retaliating upon England, by ſeizing their fleets when the ſeas were covered with them in coming home.

That as an inducement for the King of Pruſſia to join the family compact, France was to allow a toleration of religion throughout her dominions, which would be the greateſt blow England could receive.

Sept. 16. According to advices juſt received at Vienna from Italy, we have a confirmation that the Iſland of Cephalonia, belonging to the Republic of Venice, has been extremely agitated by ſome ſhocks of the earth. The country has ſuffered much, and one half of the capital city is deſtroyed.

There are now ſeven new ſhips building in different yards, for the Eaſt-India Company's ſervice, five of which have been taken up, and ordered to be finiſhed with all expedition.

They write from Glaſgow, that a ſmart ſhock of an earthquake had lately been felt at the Iſle of Arren, on the Firth of Clyde; and that all the ſea fowls had abandoned the place.

The laſt letters from Conſtantinople, which are of the firſt of this month, bring advice, that the plague reigns there in almoſt all the quarters of the city, and that it has manifeſted itſelf in the ſuburbs of Pera and Galata.

By the beſt Accounts from abroad, we are aſſured that the great Object now in Agitation between the Courts of Paris, Madrid and Liſbon, turns on the beſt Manner of totally excluding the Papal Juriſdiction out of their reſpective Dominions, and engaging other Roman Catholic Powers to do the ſame.

By a Gentleman from Ireland we learn, that the Generality of the People there are ſo fired with the love of Liberty, that unleſs the Bill for limiting the Duration of their Parliament to ſeven Years, which has already been [illegible] brought into the Houſe and rejected, ſhall paſs into a Law the enſuing Seſſion, it is the Opinion of thoſe who are beſt acquainted with the Temper and Diſpoſition of the People, that the whole Kingdom will be in a Ferment, and Mobs be more frequent and outrageous than they have been ſince the Revolution; but it is hoped the Prudence and Moderation of their preſent Lord Lieutenant, and of the Legiſlature in general, will prevent all this, by gratifying them in what they have in vain ſo long ſolicited for.

It is ſaid the Portugueſe Court have given a very inſolent Anſwer to our Remonſtrances; the Purport of which is ſaid to be, that if we do not like our preſent Situation of trading with them, we may take what Remedy we pleaſe, for they ſhall buy where they can cheapeſt; and as to their Wines, we cannot do without them, for no other Wines will adulterate with our made Wines.

We hear from Exeter, that ſeveral Artificers in the Woollen Manufactures in the Weſt Country, continue to be engaged for Boſton, Philadelphia and New-York.

[illegible]day morning a fire broke out at Mr. Hyde's a Stocking-Trimmer, in St. Thomas Apoſtle, which has entirely deſtroyed that houſe, and greatly damaged thoſe adjoining. The flames had got to ſuch a head before the family were alarmed, that Mrs. Hide was obliged to throw her child, of a year old, out of a two-pair of ſtairs window, which was caught in a blanket unhurt; but in following herſelf the ſame way (being with child) ſhe miſſed the blanket, and was killed on the ſpot. Mr. Hyde likewiſe jumped out of the window and broke one of his thighs and fractured his ſkull. An elderly blind woman, who laid with the maid and who firſt alarmed the family, is miſſing. This accident is ſuppoſed to have been occaſioned by a ſtove, which is made uſe of in their way of buſineſs.

We hear from York, that there [illegible] boy and girl of a ſurpriſing ſize, they are twins, and but 18 year of their age, notwithſtanding which, the brother meaſures about ſeven feet three inches, and the ſiſter ſeven feet two inches.

It is the Opinion of ſome ſhrewd Politicians, that if a Bill ſhould be brought into Parliament the enſuing Seſſions to grant Repreſentatives therein to the Colonies, the Court will be ſo far from hindering it to paſs, that on the contrary it will promote it as much as poſſible, in order to ſtop their Mouths, and that they may no longer plead that as an Excuſe for their refuſing to be taxed by the Mother Country.

This day the printers of the News papers and Scotch Magazines in this city, were brought to the bar of the Right hon. the Lords of council & ſeſſion, for inſerting in their News papers and Magazines extracts from Dorando, a Spaniſh tale, with other letters and Eſſays: When their lordſhips, after a full and mature conſideration of this very important & intereſting queſtion, were pleaſed to diſmiſs them from the bar with a genteel reprimand, pronounced with great dignity by the lord preſident himſelf.

July 25. *A moſt extraordinary Affair, we hear, happened ſome Time ago in Dublin: A Surgeon's Son, with Four other young Fellows, being Capitally convicted for a highway Robbery, and ordered for Execution, the Surgeon went the Evening before they were to ſuffer, to take Leave of his unfortunate Boy, and carried a preparation in his Pocket, which he left with the Lad to prevent the Infamy of a public Death; the Son took it after the Father's Departure, and it juſt began to operate as a Reprieve was brought for him & his Companions; he expired however in a ſhort time and the reſt were pardoned. LONDON, Auguſt 1.

We hear that the ſquabbles about who ſhall be in the miniſtry (which, if honeſtly and conſcientiouſly executed, is the moſt arduous ſituation a man can be in, and ought to be honored by all ranks, inſtead of being abuſed) will ſoon be at an end, as we ſhall have ſomething of more conſequence to employ our attention.—The marriage of the Stadtholder with a Princeſs of Pruſſia is looked on with a jealous eye; nay it is even [illegible], and which is ſaid to be grounded on the private declaration of a perſon now in a great office of power, through whoſe hands every ſecret intelligence muſt paſs, that it will not be a great while before we ſhall ſee a rupture with our old friends the Dutch.

It is certain that a very great famine reigns throughout the dominions of the Holy See, and that his holineſs and his miniſters are taking every ſtep to avert the fatal conſequences thereof.

By the death of admiral Cotes, who was in the 66th year of his age, and worth upwards of 150 000l. a jointure of 10 000l. beſides a large annuity, devolves to his Lady, now in her 21ſt year; and an immenſe fortune to his nephew, the rev'd Mr. Shirly Cotes, rector of Wigan in Lancaſhire, ſon of his next brother.

We hear, that during a late conference between a great perſonage, juſt arrived from abroad, and another greater at home, the latter had the condeſcenſion to ſtand the whole time, out of pure complaiſance to his viſitant, who according to the rules of ceremony, could not ſit in his preſence.

Conſiderable wagers are laid, that there are more Scotch gentlemen to repreſent the cities, counties and boroughs of England, in the next Parliament, than have been known ſince the union.

Auguſt 6. On Saturday laſt a tumultuous mob aſſembled at Crockerton, near Warminſter, Wilts, and pulled down and deſtroyed a mill, called a Jig mill, which was lately erected by a wealthy clothier for raiſing nap on cloth. This mill performed in one hour what forty men could not do in ſix hours; after the mob had demoliſhed the mill and its apparatus, they diſperſed without doing further miſchief.

Letters by Yeſterday's French mail ſay, that wheat is riſen there from 42s. to 58s. our quarter and that they have had ſuch heavy rains that they were in great dread of a bad harveſt, and being in want of grain; that the populace began to be outrageous at the exportation of corn, inſomuch that no perſon durſt preſume to ſpeak of exporting any more. The weather is now changed, and ſeems more favourable, which alleviates their dreadful apprehenſions of being in the utmoſt diſtreſs.

Wedneſday's letters from Cornwall ſay, that higher prices have already been offered to the electors of the Corniſh boroughs for ſeats in parliament, at the next election, than have been known for near forty years paſt.

Some letters from Lisbon ſay, that there is to be a publick Auto de Fee there ſome time in September next, when ſome Jeſuits, priſoners from the Azores, accuſed of crimes againſt religion, were expected to undergo the fate of the late father Malegrida.

By a gentleman arrived from France we hear, that the French are in great concern on account of the ſhilling in a pound duty being taken off of tea in England.

Auguſt 12. The moſt ſanguine hopes are now entertained by the merchants concerned in the Portugal trade, that Mr. Littleton's commiſſion to his moſt Faithful Majeſty, will ſpeedily be attended with many and great commerical advantages to the Britiſh factories at Liſbon, and Oporto.

The Lords of the admiralty have been pleaſed to appoint Robert Auchmuty, Eſq; to be judge of the vice-admiralties of Maſſachuſett's and New Hampſhire; in the room of Chambers Ruſſel, Eſq; deceaſed.

Letters from Genoa, adviſe, that the procedure of the Court of Verſailles, in recalling great part of their auxilary troops from Corſica, had ſtruck the ſenate with conſternation; and they had reſolved to ſend over General Matra with a body of Republican troops to occupy their place.

They write from Dublin, that three companies of foot on the Iriſh eſtabliſhment are ordered to be in readineſs to embark for the coaſt of Africa.

PHILADELPHIA, October 29.

All the Sea Veſſels arrived here agree, that they had off this Coaſt, a gale of Wind at N. E. which began about 6 o'clock, P. M. on Thurſday the 15th Inſt. which laſted 48 Hours, 30 of which it blew moſt exceſſive hard, ſo that many of them expected to founder; ſeveral of them have received Damage and it is to be feared, there are ſome Veſſels which were coming on the Coaſt, that will never be heard of.

Capt. Miller from Cadiz, but laſt from Madeira, informs us, that the day before he left Cadiz, a New-England veſſel arrived there, who informed, that he had ſpoke a French ſnow, who told him that he ſaw two Algerines engage a Spaniſh regiſter ſhip, with 5 000,000 dollars on board, and after three hours engagement took her. Capt. Miller on his paſſage to Madeira, the 5th of October, was boarded by an Algerine, who after riffling his cabbin of what he tho't proper went off; on which [illegible] ler was not permitted to land or trade at Madeira.

PORTSMOUTH, November 6.

The Portſmouth Packet was caſt away laſt Wedneſday ſe'nnight, coming round from Boſton with Goods on board to the value of £ 4000 Sterl. belonging to the Merchants here The People ſaved, and the Veſſel its ſaid will be got off.

BOSTON, November 9.

Saturday laſt we were favoured with a ſight of the China Tea-plant in Foliage, being cultivated by Capt. Harriſon of this Town; ſome of the dryed Leaves being by Mrs. Harriſon preſented with the Shrub, in flavor exactly reſembling the common Green-Tea. The Shrub is annual, ſowing its own Seed in this Climate, and wants nothing but the method of Cure to render it uſeful thro' the Continent.

We hear the Subſcription Paper for encreaſing our own Manufactures, and laying aſide certain enumerated Articles, fills up ſurprizingly; and that ſaid Meaſure is ſo well approved of in the Country, that Town Meetings are now calling in order to agree upon ſimular Meaſures.—The public Papers and private Advices acquaint us, That Rhode-Iſland, Connecticut, New-York, New Jerſey, Philadelphia, &c. are ſteadily purſuing Meaſures for leſſening their Foreign-Imports, by encouraging Frugality, and their own Manufactures.—It cannot be diſguiſed that the Colonies are greatly in Debt, ſo that whatever is drawn from us by way of Duty, muſt be thoſe Monies which would go to Britain, to pay, and to procure more Goods. Neceſſity is laid upon us, to be induſtrious and frugal, and Woe be unto us, if we are extravagant.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.

By Capt. Creighton, from Liſbon, we learn that Lord Littleton arrived there the beginning of September from England; that the Engliſh factory entertained great Expectations from his embaſſy that he had had 2 or 3 audiences, but the reſult of them had not tranſpired; that three men of war & a number of tranſports, with three regiments on board, had ſailed from the Brazils, it was ſuppoſed, as by the laſt veſſels from thence they had received ſome diſagreable advices of a revolt; and that the report of a revolt at Terceira was without foundation.

NEW-YORK, November 19.

Extract of a private Letter from London, dated Sept. 15

The King and Council have adopted the Scheme of ſettling a Colony on the Ohio; and the Lords of Trade are forming the Plan:—The French have eſtabliſhed two free Ports in the Weſt-Indies, St. Lucia and St. Nichola, which occaſions much Speculation here in England, as it is thought it will be the Means of introducing many French Manufactures, into the Engliſh Colonies; for the Arret that Eſtabliſhes thoſe free Ports, allows a free Exportation of all European Manufactures, as well as of Rum & Molaſſes.—

We hear that a Merchant in this Town reſhip'd back to London, (in Capt. Cotting, one of the laſt Veſſels which ſailed from hence for that place) upwards of £. 200 ſterl. worth of SILKS, they being an article for which, at preſent, there is but very little Demand in theſe Parts.

Extract of a Letter from Pittſburg, dated October 10.

It is fear'd here, that an Indian War will break out in the Spring, this apprehenſion is grounded on an Hoſtility committed by a party of Indians, on their Return to their Settlements among the Six Nations, from an unſucceſsful War in which they had been engaged with the Cherokees. They met with two of our Batteaus richly laden with Goods for the Illinois Company which they plunder'd, and murdered ten of our People. This Specimen of their Diſpoſition toward us, is conſider'd as a Prelude to further Miſchief.

BOSTON, November 19.

We hear that ſome Days ago, the Honorable Henry Hulton, John Temple, William Burch, and Charles Paxton, Eſquires, Commiſſioners of his Majeſty's Cuſtoms in America, took the Oath of Office; and laſt Tueſday they held a Board of Cuſtoms at Mr. Deblois's great Room in Hanover-Street.

Mr. DRAPER.

By ſome of the News Papers the Town and Country appear to be greatly alarmed with the Illconvenience and additional Expence of the Board of Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms, in America—I think you would do but Juſtice to undeceive the Public—therefore ſhall furniſh you with ſuch Information as I have collected.

Before the Eſtabliſhment of the preſent Board there was four Surveyor-Generals on the Continent, at the Expence of 1000l. Sterling each per Annum, excluſive of the Office attending the American Affairs under the Commiſſioners in London, which was 1500l more; amounting in the whole to 5500l. without their having Power finally to determine any Matter, until it was firſt laid before the Board at London, and waiting their Directions, which Delay has always been complained of as a Grievance: To remedy which and for the more immediate Convenience & Benefit of the Trade in general, the Legiſlative Authority of Great Britain, thought fit to appoint a Board of Cuſtoms in America, at the Expence of 4,500 Sterling, all Officers and Clerks included, every Farthing of which will be ſpent in this Town, excluſive of the Expences that will naturally ariſe from thoſe Officers, and others that may attend the Board. Other Provinces have had an Idea of the Advantages that would ariſe from the Eſtabliſhment of the Board; and its being fixed with them: Philadelphia and Virginia made great Intereſt; the latter would have given 10 000 to have had it determined in their Favour.

Extract of a Letter from London, September 13 1767.

"The Council have adopted the Plan of making a Settlement in the Illinois Country, or upon the Ohio, and refer'd it to the Board of Trade to form a Plan for carrying it into Execution; ſo that General Lyman is now in a good Way.

ZEBULON HOSKINS, of Windſor, hereby informs the Publick, that for the ſpace of four years he was grievouſly afflicted with the GRAVEL, to ſuch a degree as to cauſe him to make water a hundred times in twenty-four hours, but could void but very little at a time—ſometimes but a few drops, attended with the moſt diſtreſſing pain, and after the uſe of many things, to no benefit; he was accidentally informed by a travelling Gentleman, that a tea made of ruſhes, viz. ſuch as the women ſcowr their pails with, had been found by experience to be a ſovereign remedy for that diſeaſe; he therefore immediately applied the medicine, and it had the deſired effect—he drank plentifully of it, made it his conſtant drink, and in about eight or ten days his pain abated, and he voided abundance of gravel—he kept on in the uſe of it for about two months, when he found he was perfectly cured, and has remained well, now, for about two years; except, when once he wet himſelf, and took a great cold, which brought on the diſeaſe again, but the ſame medicine removed it immediately.

LONDON, September 21.

Thurſday evening were interred in a handſome manner, in Old-ſtreet Church-yard, the remains of the late ingenious Malachi Poſtlethwayte, Eſq; Author of the Univerſal Dictionary. The coffin was filled with unſlacked lime, and interred ſeven feet deep in the grave, purſuant to his own requeſt.

Yeſterday Lord Viſcount Townſhend took Leave of his Majeſty at St. James's on his Departure for Ireland next Week.

The following Particulars of the Behaviour of Mrs. Brownrigg, on the Morning of her Execution, may be relied on as authentic.——The Ordinary of Newgate attended her a little after Five, when ſhe was brought into the Preſs-Yard, ſeemed reſigned and joined in Prayer. Afterwards ſhe, together with her Huſband and Son, received the Holy Sacrament in the Chapel; After which ſhe prayed with great Fervency, crying, "Lord deliver "me from Blood Guiltineſs. I "have nothing to plead or recom-"mend me to thee but my Miſery; "but thy beloved Son died for "Sinners, therefore on his Merits "I rely and depend for Pardon." She was now quite reſigned, and prayed with her Huſband and Son upwards of two Hours, when ſhe took Leave of them, which exhibited a Scene to affecting to be deſcribed, and which drew Tears from all preſent. On her Huſband's aſſuring her that he would take care to maintain their two younger Children when he ſhould be releaſed from Confinement, ſhe begged him to ſeek a Releaſe from the Priſon of Sin; and as for her Children, GOD was all-ſufficient, and hoped he would not ſuffer them to be uſed as ſhe had treated the unhappy Girls put under her Care. Her Son fell on his Knees, and begged his Mother's Bleſſing; on which ſhe fell on his Face and kiſſed him, while her Huſband fell on his Knees, on the other Side, praying to God to have Mercy on her Soul: Which occaſioned her to ſay, "Dear James, "I beg God, for Chriſt's Sake, "will be reconciled, and that he "will not leave nor forſake me in "the Hour of Death, and in the "Day of Judgment." She took her laſt Farewell of them, and was ſoon after carried to the Place of Execution. The Exclamations of the People in her Way thither, were ſhocking and unchriſtian; One ſaid, he hoped the Ordinary would pray for her Damnation, not her Salvation. Others, that they hoped ſhe would go to Hell, and were ſure that the Devil would fetch her Soul. At Tyburn ſhe compoſedly aſſiſted in Prayer; and deſired the Ordinary to acquaint the Spectators, that ſhe acknowledged her Guilt and the Juſtice of her Sentence, and her laſt Words were, "Lord Jeſus, receive my Spirit!" ——She repeatedly before her Death, declared her Husband innocent of ill-treating the Girls, and that the Son never did ſo but by her Order.

THE following altercation lately happened between a Brewer's Lady, and a Female Quaker.——Brewer's Lady, Pray Madam, do you know who you talk to in this manner?——Quaker.——I knew thee when thou didſt ſell beer by the pot, and thou didſt know me and thy neighbours; but now thou ſelleſt beer by the butt, thou knoweſt neither thy old acquaintance nor thy ſelf.

We are told that there is a woman in a village in Glamorganſhire, South-Wales, whoſe huſband ſome time ago, with the little fortune he got with her, bought a farm; he had hardly cloſed the purchaſe, when death cloſed his eyes; however, not intimidated with this, the widow married a ſecond huſband, who ſowed it; he likewiſe died, and ſhe married a third, who reaped it; but death ſoon ſnatched him away: ſhe then married a fourth, who thraſhed it; but he alſo followed the fate of his predeceſſors; and ſhe is now married to a fifth huſband, with whom ſhe is now enjoying the produce of it. ——All this happened in leſs than eighteen months.

Friday morning a Chimney took fire at a houſe in Petty France, Weſtminſter, when a poor little Chimney Sweeper's Boy was forced by his humane Maſter, to get up it, to extinguiſh the fire, which he did, and came down ſo miſerably burnt that he was ſent to the Infirmary without hopes of recovery.

Laſt week died the wife of one Godwin, a labouring man, at Little Shelford in this county. The ſorrowful widower, unable to bear the thoughts of a ſingle ſtate, ſet off the next morning, and was married to a woman at Linton. At their return, in the evening, to Shelford, the dead wife was removed from his bed into a coffin, to give way to the new married couple to celebrate their nuptials. The coffin continued in the room all night.

Extract of a Letter from Dublin, Sept. 10.

A ſhort time ſince, a ſailor, a native of this city, who had been abroad three years came home, and finding his wife ſitting with another man by the fire, he asked her where ſhe had the Child then on her knee? She replied, dear Jack, I thought you had been dead, and am married again. Very well, ſays Jack, but I married you firſt, and I'll have you while I am on ſhore, and he may be your husband while I am at ſea; and as to the children, I will pay half the charges of maintaining them. They ſoon agreed; and the ſecond husband, who kept a public houſe, became drawer to his wiſe, in hopes that Jack will ſoon ſail, when he is to commence Landlord again.

Sept. 15. A few days ago a farmer's daughter near Trowbridge, in Wiltſhire, who had for upwards of two years been grievouſly tormented by ſwallowing a needle which was beyond the reach of ſurgery to extract, was happily delivered of her pain, the needle having worked its way quite through the skin of her neck.

Sept. 23. They write from Madeira, that a gold mine has lately been diſcovered in the iſland of Teneriffe, which was ſaid to be very rich, and ſamples of the ſame had been ſent to Liſbon, for the king's [illegible] to advantage.

The laſt letters from Conſtantinople, which are of the firſt of this month, bring advice, that the plague reigns there in almoſt all the quarters of the city, and that it has manifeſted itſelf in the ſuburbs of Pera and Galatia.

It is ſaid, that a gentleman lately belonging to the Royal Navy, has invented a cannon ſhell, of a new conſtruction, for naval ſervice, to anſwer the purpoſe of a bomb; a proof of which has been lately made with a 40 pounder, and it has been found, in every reſpect to anſwer.

GOSPORT, Sept. 5. A journeyman Shoemaker of this town having fallen violently in love with a negro girl, of a very genteel perſon, about 16 years of age, (lately brought by a lady from America) made application to her miſtreſs for conſent to marry her, but being informed by the lady that the girl coſt her 30l. in the country, and that ſhe could not part with her under that ſum, the young fellow ſet out immediately for the weſt country where he had a ſmall eſtate worth 100l. which he converted into caſh, and came up laſt week in queſt of his african goddeſs, when, to his no ſmall ſurprize, he found ſhe was [illegible] with her miſtreſs to London; [illegible] rather invigorated him in his purſuit, and he inſtantly followed her to town with a firm reſolution if poſſible to find her, and pay the ranſom deſired by her miſtreſs and dub her Queen of the Criſpinalian tribe.

DUBLIN, (Ireland) Sept. 5. It is with the higheſt pleaſure we can aſure the publick, that the harveſt is better, and in greater plenty, than hath been known for many years paſt; the corn in general is fuller, the hay better, and the potatoes far exceeding in ſize and goodneſs any that have been known in this Kingdom.

A letter from Briſtol ſays, "The people in this neighbourhood have been much afflicted with the ague, and have found an infallible remedy, viz. Half a quartern of green Uſquebaugh, with a table-ſpoonful of lemon juice, when the fit comes on."

We hear the overſeers of ſeveral pariſhes have come to the reſolution of making a ſtrict enquiry into the condition and uſage of their ſeveral poor children, who have been bound out apprentices, and that the ſame will be repeated from time to time, in order to prevent any cruel and inhuman uſage being inflicted on thoſe helpleſs innocents.

An Addition of Honeſt Men,

Cork, July 21. Laſt Wedneſday ſe'nnight a ſervant girl, who had been for ſome days ill of the Small Pox, attended with a fever, to all appearance died, and on Thurſday morning was interred in a Burying ground in this City. Some hours after ſhe was buried, a noiſe was heard in the grave, which was thereupon immediately dug up, and the Body taken out. The girl was alive when the Coffin was open'd, but expired in a few moments after: Her body was much bruiſed & ſcratched, [illegible] ſhe was taken up.

Williamſburgh, (Virginia) October 8.

We hear from Hillſborough in North-Carolina, that on the 15th of September laſt the regiment of militia of Orange county were reviewed at that place, by his excellency governor Tryon, when there appeared under arms 1923 men, excluſive of a troop of light horſe. His excellency was pleaſed, after the battalion and troops had paſſed in review, and gone through their firings, accompanied with ſeveral diſcharges of ſome pieces of his majeſty's artilery, to expreſs great ſatiſfaction at the martial appearance, and regular behaviour of the men and officers of the corps. In the evening a bonfire was erected, at which his majeſty's health, proſperity to the governor and province, & other loyal and publick ſpirited toaſts, were drank, at each of which there was a diſcharge of the artilery, and the whole concluded with every demonſtration of alacrity and joy.

There is ſcarce any hiſtory, either antient or modern, which affords an account of ſuch a rapid and ſudden increaſe of inhabitants in a back frontier country, as that of North-Carolina. To juſtify the truth of this obſervation, we need only to inform our readers, that twenty years ago there were not twenty taxable perſons within the limits of the abovementioned County of Orange; in which there now are four thouſand taxable. The increaſe of inhabitants, and flouriſhing ſtate of the other adjoining back counties, are no leſs ſurpriſing and aſtoniſhing.

Tueſday laſt near 20Negroes received the Diſcipline of the Whip, at the public Poſt, having been detected the Thurſday Night before, in a junketting Frolick, deſigned at a poor white Man'sHouſe in the Out-Ward of thisCity, where two Pigs ready for the Fire, and 2 Gallons of Wine awaited them; and though the Proofs were not poſitive, they were ſuch as left the Deſign out of Doubt. It is ſuch houſes that ruins Servants, as the Receiver is as bad as the Thief.

The Ketch Mercury, Capt. Kennedy, with 5 other Men and a boy ſailed from thisPort, bound forGibraltar, the 6th ofOctober laſt loaded with Lumber and ſome Flour. —On the 8th they perceived her to make ſo much Water, as to keep oneHand continually at the Pump, and by the 14th both Pumps going could ſcarce keep her free. Finding the Water increaſe ſo much, they hove overboard ſome of her Lumber, to try to find her Leak, when they found her Sternpoſt quite looſe, and ſo rotton as to render it more dangerous to endeavour to mend it.—By the 16th it took all hands to the Pump, and the next Day the Wind blowing a meer fret at N. E. they put away before the Wind, in Hopes that might eaſe the Veſſel, but to no purpoſe, ſhe continuing to make Water at the rate of five Feet an Hour. The Men thereupon took out more of the Lumber, to ſearch if there were no other Leaks, when they diſcovered one of her Breaſt-Hooks & twoKnees forward broke, & theStem looſly playing with the Water. The Company were now quite tired out, and their onlyHopes were to reach ſomePart of thisContinent, if they could keep her above Water ſo long. Animated with theſe hopes, they continued to lighten her all in their Power, till the 31ſt ofOctober, when there being a very hard Gale of Wind, with a heavy Sea, and lying too, by a Roll to Windward, her Lee-Shrouds were carried away, and the next Roll took the Mainmaſt and their beſt Pump. In this Diſtreſs, & all hands wearied out withPumping, they continued ſtriving and lightning her, with intention to take to theirBoat when they could keep her up no longer; and happily on the 2d of November, the very Inſtant they were about to quit the Veſſel, Capt. Lawrence hove in Sight, bearing right towards them, who kindly took them all up and brought them ſafe in here. They could ſave nothing, the Sea running very high, and the Ketch had 5 Feet Water in her Hold, when they left her.

By yours of the 2d Inſt. I ſee with what Earneſtneſs you ſolicit to cut Logwood in the Bay of Spirito Santo, and as it does not appear to me to be lawful, nor comprehended as you ſuppoſe, in the Treaty of Peace, you will abſtain from ſettling in that Place, having no pretence todo it, nor is it in my Power to permit it; although ſome from yourSettlement took theLiberty to endeavour to execute it:—What you will acquaint them, is, that if they perſiſt in it, I will take the neceſſary Steps.——

Extract of a Letter from Niagara, dated Sept. 29, 1767.

"Having no News which can be agreeable, I muſt even tell you of our Misfortunes in this upper Country. On the 24th Inſt. one of the Soldiers of the Company I belong to, gathered ſome Roots, which he thought were the Indian Potatoes, which he brought home, and after boiling them, ſhared them with ſix of his Companions, two of which were ſuddenly taken ill; theDoctor being ſent for, and hearing what they hae been eating, began to prepare Vomits for them but before he was able to return from the Hoſpital one of them died in the greateſt Agonies I ever ſaw: Finding the Root to be poiſonous, we began immediately to pour ſweet Oil down their Throats and giving them ſweet Milk, to make them throw up the Poiſon; however, another of them died ten Minutes after being taked ill. We kept the other five drinking ſweet Oil and Milk, and of Courſe puking, from half after 8 at Night to 3 in the Morning, when they were entirely worn out with Fatigue. There is another of them died the 27th Inſtant at Night and the 4th is ſtill in the utmoſt Danger; three of them are to all apperance, out of Danger. The unhappy Man who gathered the Root, was the 2d who died. Inſtead of the Indian Potatoes, it was that called the DeadlyCarrot they eat; It is about two Inches long, or rather oblong, the Indians uſe it to poiſon one another."

We hear from Hempſted, on Long-Iſland, that on Thurſday laſt ſeveral Men having been employ'd in digging a Well for one John Hall of that Place, they all went to Dinner, except two Men, who, when the Reſt return'd were found buried in the Well, by the falling in of the Earth, except that both the Arms of one, and one Arm of were not cover'd. All poſſible Diligence was uſed in removing the Earth, and about the Middle of the afternoon one was got out and at Sunſet the other, both alive. Whether they were hurt or no we have not yet heard.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 19.

We hear from Burlington, that the new conſtructed light travelling Waggon, contrived by Richard Wells, Eſq; on a full Trial, laſt Week, was found to anſwer its Deſign, to great Exactneſs. Among other improvements, his invention to Diſcharge the Horſes in caſe of their running away, it is particularly worth Attention. This is done at the Expence of about a Piſtole, by the Riders (in the Inſide of the Carriage) only pulling a String, when the Horſes go off and leave the Carriage ſtanding. An Invention that bids fair to be of great Uſe and ſafety to thoſe who ride in cloſe Carriages.

Extract of a Letter from London September 19, 1767.

"As to politics every Thing ſtill remains as it has done for ſome Time paſt, Lord Mansfield is made Chancellor of the Exchequer pro Tempore, till our great Men can agree among themſelves, or till ſome ſpirited, and honeſtMan, ſhall take the Lead (which I wiſh may be theCaſe) and, truſting theKing's Countenance and Support, who means nothing but the Happineſs of his People, make a proper Arragement of the Candidates for public Offices, and eſtabliſh a Miniſtry upon a ſolid and reſpectable Footing; a Situation highly neceſſary for this Country.— Perhaps, in a few Weeks, you may hear ſomething to the Purpoſe, but don't depend on it for I think we were never farther from a Settlement than at thisJuncture; I wiſh I may be found to have been miſtaken."

Extract of a letter from Dominica, dated Oct. 10.

"Two Gentlemen juſt returned from Martinico, bring a conformation of the reports in that Iſland and Gaudaloupe being to be ſhut againſt any Engliſh veſſel, after the 31ſt of December next, upon any pretence of buſineſs whatever, even lumber and live cattle. There is at preſent great demand for fiſh here; but the French being abundantly ſupplied with flour from Old France, makes that article in no demand: heavy Philadelphia flour was retailed by the Merchants here at 15 ſhillings a barrel, this week. Many veſſels from Philadelphia, and other parts of the continent, laden with proviſions, have touched here in the courſe of 20 days, and all proceed further to leeward.

CHARLESTOWN, S Carolina: Oct. 20.

Laſt Fryday evening put back his Majeſty's Ship Cygnet, commanded by Philip Durell, Eſq; who ſailed from hence for Great Britain, on Monday the 12th Inſt. but meeting with a violent Gale of wind, in which ſhe received conſiderable damage, having 16 feet long and 5 deep of her larboard quarter ſtove in, her dead lights and rudder caſe ſtove in, ſtove down her bulk heads, wounded 4 men, and drove every thing before it; they were obliged to throw overboard the Guns, carriages, ſheet anchor, and all looſe lumber that was on deck in order to eaſe the ſhip, which with great difficulty they happily accompliſhed.

SAVANNAH, (in Georgia) Sept. 30.

"The ſudden alarm of the Indians having killed a number of white people upon St. Mary's has put us in the utmoſt conſternation. All the people to the ſouthward of us have left their Plantations, and fled to the iſlands. How ſoon we may be obliged to do the ſame, I cannot ſay, but I am afraid it will not be long, unleſs we get ſome aſſiſtance, or hear ſome better accounts than thoſe we have received lately, and which you have no doubt heard of. I would fain hope the murders were committed by a party of the Indians who were ſeverely whipped there this ſpring, as the people who whipped them (Mills's family are particularly mentioned to have been killed) but ſtill I think they have done it too deliberately, as it happened ſoon after the buſk. What the conſequence will be God only knows.

NEW-YORK, Nov. 26

We hear from Albany, that on Thurſday laſt as two Labouring Men, and Mr. Henry Cuyler of that Place, were croſſing the River from thence to the oppoſite Shore, in a Canoe, it was by ſome Accident overſet, about the Middle of the River, by which the 2 Labourers were drown'd, and Mr. Cuyler narrowly eſcaped by ſwimming & getting on the Bottom of the Canoe, till taken off from the Shore.——Their Bodies were taken next Day.

On Monday laſt Catherine Branſen alias Ranſen, alias Smith, alias Hannah Harding, was Hang'd on the Gallows near the Freſh-Water, purſuant to her Sentence. She appear'd to be remarkably ignorant of religious and Spiritual Things, and in the utmoſt Terror and Agony at the near approach of Death.———Screaming out and ſpeaking in an incoherent Manner, as if affrighted almoſt out of her Senſes.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 21.

Upon the Recommendation of the Town Council, and others, in Conſequence of a Letter from the Select Men of Boſton to that Board, the Town Clerk's Warrant is iſſued for calling a Town Meeting on Wedneſday next, at One o'Clock in the Afternoon, for entering into ſome effectual Meaſures for promoting Œconomy and Manufactures. The Town, it is thought, will generally attend, and exert themſelves for bringing about the grand Purpoſes of their Meeting, as the Conſequences of the vaſt Imports of Superfluities on ſuch Goods as may be fabricated here, with the Effects of certain new Regulations, begin to be ſenſibly felt.

BOSTON, Nov. [illegible]

It appears by the public Prints of the other Governments that the Inhabitants in general approve of the Reſolutions of this Town for promoting Frugality, and encouraging Manufactures.

The Snow that fell in the Storm the Beginning of this Week has made heavy Travelling;——the Hartford poſt did not come in till this Morning.

The Towns of Dedham and Charleſtown, have unanimouſly come into the Meaſures to promote Frugality and Manufactures and the ſubſcription Papers are daily filling up.

In the Storm we had here laſt Wedneſday Night a Sloop from Monto Chriſti, bound to Marblehead with a conſiderable Quantity of Molaſſes and ſome Wine, was caſt away near that Place; the Veſſel, Cargo, and all the People periſh'd. The Sloop a few Days before put into the Vineyard for a Pilot when the Captain went on ſhore and came round by Land to this Place, and they took on board Mr. David Davis, who was loſt with the reſt of the People.

We hear from Marblehead, that a fiſherman arrived there laſt Friday night from the banks of Newfoundland; the maſter and people belonging to her give the following extraordinary account, viz. That on the banks of Newfoundland being at anchor, they were very much ſurpriſed to obſerve their veſſel run directly in the winds eye at a conſiderable rate, they hove the log-line and found ſhe went about ſeven knots, (not being able to purchaſe their anchor) and continued ſo to their great aſtoniſhment for 36 hours, without being able to account for this unuſual occurrence; when a large whale hove up, ſeemingly much tired, they then hove towards him, and got ſo nigh as to diſcern the whale had got their anchor in his jaws; they ſtill hove nigher, and threw their fiſhhook into the ring of the anchor, but being under fearful apprehenſions of danger, they cut their cable, and the whale went off with the anchor and part of the cable.——Several other fiſhermen being in ſight were greatly ſurpriſed to ſee this veſſel run direct to windward without any ſail, and hove up their anchors and came to ſail.

☞ If any of the whalemen ſhould happen to take the whale, they are deſired to return the anchor to the owner at Marblehead.

Lately died at Barrington in New-Hampſhire Government, Mr. Edward Evans, aged 100 Years: he perfectly remembered the Revolution in 1688, and was in the laſt Year of his Apprenticeſhip in this Town, when Sir Edmund Andros, was taken and ſent home priſoner.

We are aſſured that a number of Gentlemen have advanced conſiderable to a Clothier in Roxbury, who has engaged to deliver in three Month ten Suits of as fine Homeſpun Broad Cloth, as can be bought of Britiſh for 10s. per yard.

Old France, makes that article in no demand: heavy Philadelphia flour was retailed by the Merchants here at 15 ſhillings a barrel, this week. CHARLESTOWN, S Carolina: Oct. 20.

Laſt Fryday evening put back his Majeſty's Ship Cygnet, commanded by Philip Durell, Eſq; who ſailed from hence for Great Britain, on Monday the 12th Inſt. but meeting with a violent Gale of wind, in which ſhe received conſiderable damage, having 16 feet long and 5 deep of her larboard quarter ſtove in, her dead lights and rudder caſe ſtove in, ſtove down her bulk heads, wounded 4 men, and drove every thing before it; they were obliged to throw overboard the Guns, carriages, ſheet anchor, and all looſe lumber that was on deck in order to eaſe the ſhip, which with great difficulty they happily accompliſhed.

"The ſudden alarm of the Indians having killed a number of white people upon St. Mary's has put us in the utmoſt conſternation. All the people to the ſouthward of us have left their Plantations, and fled to the iſlands. How ſoon we may be obliged to do the ſame, I cannot ſay, but I am afraid it will not be long, unleſs we get ſome aſſiſtance, or hear ſome better accounts than thoſe we have received lately, and which you have no doubt heard of. I would fain hope the murders were committed by a party of the Indians who were ſeverely whipped there this ſpring, as the people who whipped them (Mills's family are particularly mentioned to have been killed) but ſtill I think they have done it too deliberately, as it happened ſoon after the huſk. What the conſequence will be God only knows.

NEW-HAVEN, Nov. 13.

On Thurſday, the 15th. Inſt. died of a long ſeated conſumption, Mr. JOHN NOYES of this town, in the 32d year of his age, whoſe fortitude in death, was but an appendant to his piety in life, through the grace of the goſpel.

His body tho' weak & ſlender from his Infancy, was yet the tenement of an honeſt undiſſembling heart, yielding that chearfulneſs, which ſprings from conſcious integrity.

He was early inſtructed in the grand and ſublime principles of religion, to which he ever paid a ſacred & practical regard, eſteeming "Wiſdom's ways to be pleaſantneſs and her paths to be peace." As he was deſigned for public ſervice, he was favour'd from early life, with the advantage of uſeful inſtruction, both in ſchools, & in private; and compleated the uſual degrees of Yale-College, in 1756, well furniſh'd with ſolid learning.

But he was mainly engaged after thoſe acquirements, which might beſt fit him for ſervice in Chriſt's vineyard—for his delight was in the law of the Lord. Nor was the end his public performances, unequal to the means, but he appear'd in the ſacred deſk, a workman that needed not to be aſhamed.

The holy ſcriptures were his delightful ſtudy, the ſubject of his daily meditation; from theſe he extracted his divinity— from theſe the maxims of his conduct—by theſe was he (no doubt) made wiſe to ſalvation. Unfluctuating in principle, yet no bigot, but of a charitable, catholic mind. He ever accounted it a favourable occurrence in divine Providence, that he was improved, in his laſt public ſervice, in ſuch a manner, as might under God, be the means of putting an end to an unhappy diſtinction among brethren in this place: ‡ That event always affected his catholic mind, with uncommon ſatisfaction, whenever he reflected on it——And, as he liv'd, ſo he died, ſedate and calm, under the diſſolution of nature, through patience, thro' reſignation, lively hope and divine affiance, vanquiſhing the King of Terrors, in the very article of Conqueſt.

His ſocial virtues however were not eclipſed, by the dignity of his death; For by them he bequeathed to all around him an ineſtimable legacy. In every relation of life he had well exemplified the chriſtian ſocial virtues; as a ſon, a huſband, a parent, brother, friend, maſter, neighbour, he practiſed with conſtancy, and in a moſt amiable manner, thoſe numberleſs chriſtian offices, which rendered him quite agreable, and very uſeful, even in private life. Nor did he forget, in the very cloſe of life, his ſocial connections, his deareſt friend and partner, and their tender offspring; but, at the time of his departure, with calmneſs and holy confidence, he commend them to mercy, protection and bleſſing of his faithful, covenant God, and the Father of the fatherleſs. With him he could ſafely leave them, to him he commended his own ſoul, and fell aſleep in Jeſus.

TAKES this Method to acquaint the Public, and particularly ſuch as are deſirous of taking the Small Pox, by Way of Inoculation, that having had conſiderable Experience in that Branch of Practice, and carried on the ſame the laſt Seaſon, with great Succeſs; has lately erected a convenient Hoſpital for that Purpoſe, juſt within the juriſdiction Line of the Province of New-York, about nine Miles diſtant from Norwalk Harbour, where he intends to carry on ſaid Branch of Practice, from the firſt of October until the firſt of May next. And that all ſuch as are diſpoſed to favor him with their Cuſtom, may depend upon being well provided with all proper and neceſſary Accommodations, Proviſions, &c. and the beſt Attendance, at the moderate Expence of Four Pounds, Lawful Money, for each Patient. That, after the firſt Set or Claſs, he purpoſes to give no Occaſion for waiting to go in by particular Setts, but to admit Perſons ſingly, juſt as it ſuits them; as he has another good Houſe provided near ſaid Hoſpital, where his Family are to live, and where all that come (after the firſt Sett go into the Hoſpital) are to remain with his Family, until they are ſufficiently prepared and inoculated, and until it be apparent that they have taken the Infection. 43

Norwalk, 14th Sept. 1767.

ZEBULON HOSKINS, of Windſor, hereby informs the Publick, that for the ſpace of four years he was grievouſly afflicted with the GRAVEL, to ſuch a degree as to cauſe him to make water a hundred times in twenty-four hours, but could void but very little at a time—ſometimes but a few drops, attended with the moſt diſtreſſing pain, and after the uſe of many things, to no benefit; he was accidentally informed by a travelling Gentleman, that a tea made of ruſhes, viz. ſuch as the women ſcour their pails with, had been found by experience to be a ſovereign remedy for that diſeaſe; he therefore immediately applied the medicine, and it had the deſired effect—he drank plentifully of it, made it his conſtant drink, and in about eight or ten days his pain abated, and he voided abundance of gravel— he kept on in the uſe of it for about two months, when he found he was perfectly cured, and has remained well, now, for about two years; except, when once he wet himſelf, and took a great cold, which brought on the diſeaſe again, but the ſame medicine removed it immediately.

MONDAY, December 7, 1767. NUMBER 154.

THE CONNECTICUT COURANT.

Printed by THOMAS GREEN, in HARTFORD.

From the Providence-Gazette Nov. 14. 1767.

I HAVE reflected a good deal of late upon the ſtate of affairs in this country, more particularly in our government, and find them in a condition that ſeems to threaten us with the laſt degree of diſtreſs. I find our commerce ſo fettered with penal laws that we are undone if we follow it, and our dealings with G. Britain ſo fatal to us, that I can eaſily foreſee ſuch a train of evils that will ſoon overtake us, if not prudently averted, as muſt afford a moſt gloomy reflection to thoſe that truly love their country; but I am relieved from my melancholly, when I diſcover that we are ſtill within the reach of an antidote that is a match for the deſeaſe.

When we conſider the tax upon our Weſt-India trade & upon ſeveral of the articles we have of Great Britain, it is eaſy to be diſcerned, that unleſs this trade is dropped, and unleſs we leave off importing ſuch taxed articles, our ruin is pretty near at hand. It is no leſs eaſy to be diſcovered what is to be done before we can be in a condition to do without them——We muſt endeavour to manufacture ſuch articles ourſelves. Nor do I think we ought to ſtop here;—we ought to make the coarſer part of our cloathing. This may be done very eaſily & ſuddenly. When we have gone thus far, we may begin to think of manufacturing alſo the finer part of our apparel.

I have read ſeveral pieces lately in the news papers, that are, in my opinion, too pregnant with a kind of zeal that may be very fatal to the repoſe of this country. The writers of them do but echo my own ſentiments, when they pronounce ſome late meaſures oppreſſive; and we differ only in the ſteps that are to be taken to defeat the conſequences. 'Tis certain that no point is to be gained by threats; and we are not ſufficiently aware, that every piece which blazes with inordinate zeal is induſtriouſly made uſe of againſt us, theſe meaſures for redreſs, ſuch as reſiſtance might be eaſily adopted by myſelf, if I could ſee no other way to ward off theſe miſchiefs; but who would lop of a limb, before other means are made to cure the wound?

It comes next to be conſidered, whether we have it not in our power to vindicate & maintain our freedom, in a way more conſiſtant with true policy, than to try the military force of Great Britain. Sound policy will often ſupply the place of ſtrength. Should an army be ſent here, how fatal muſt the conſequences be to the colonies, and to the grandeur of Great Britain! The idea of ſtreets ſwimming in blood, or, perhaps towns in a blaze, muſt ſtrike horror into the breaſt of a man who is a friend to the cool and ſilent hour. The way then to get redreſs for our wrongs, is to render ourſelves unprofitable to Great Britain, by induſtry. We muſt begin ſooner or later, the increaſe of the inhabitants of this country being ſo great as to put it out of the power of Great Britain to cloath us a century hence.

It is an argument in the mouth of almoſt every one, "that the whole profits of our lives centre in Britain, and that it is folly for them to tax us to gain to themſelves what they have already ſecured by a trade, the ballance of which is wholly in their favor." I am ſenſible of this, and therefore am for making ourſelves what we have been uſed to buy of them. They have cut us off from the ſource of our remittances, by taxing the Weſt India trade; but this trade will be no longer neceſſary, when we have no foreign goods to pay for. We ſhall be in no need of ſending melaſſes to New York, to raiſe money to pay for our outward bound cargoes; and the country people will no longer be tempted to rid themſelves of their money at the caſh ſhops, which goes immediately to Boſton, and from thence to Britain. We have nothing to bring it back with. We muſt either make our own cloaths, go naked, or augment our debt with Great Britain to a ſum which will in the end enſlave the country.

'Tis my opinion that we have too much trade. The fuedeal ſyſtem, while it was in its full vigor in Britain admitted of no extenſive commerce; but as ſoon as it was aboliſhed the Engliſh became a trading nation and are ſo to this day. 'Tis tho't by ſome, that even ſhe has over traded herſelf, and that "a commerce ſo extenſive, has made too many inlets for luxury and debauchery."—For my part I think that a point too nice to be determined by me; but it requires no ſuch depth of penetration to ſee that we are not under the ſame neceſſity of courting trade as Britain is, ſhe being an iſland, and ſcanty in land. We are rich within ourſelves, and ſhall ſee it, when neceſſity removes the films that at preſent cloud our ſight. Let the Land round our ſea coaſt be paſtured with ſheep: Let the interior parts of our country ſupply the whole with bread corn, flax &c. ———— The interior parts of every country is the grand ſource from which the whole derives its wealth; 'tis ſo in Italy. A little weſt india goods will ſupply the real wants of this country. They live with little in England, and ſo can we. The produce of theſe Weſt Indies debauches the country, and has already degenerated us into the bare ſhadows of our anceſtors. The practice of tea drinking has already given the ſpleen to one 8th part of the country, & I fear we ſhall ſoon find ourſelves in amaginatination, transformed into bears or ſea-calves.

Some have expreſſed great uneaſineſs at the duties lately impoſed upon windowglaſs, paper &c. For my part, I can ſee nothing to fear from part of the act. If we want window glaſs, there is ſand round Swantſicutt Pond; it only wants to be handled by artiſts in that way. If we want paper, we muſt ſave our rags and ſend them to the paper mills, by ſaving our rags, we ſhall ſave our piſtereens. As many articles as Great-Britain taxes, let us make ourſelves, and more if we can.

Our importers of European goods have ſaid, and I ſuppoſe will repeat it, that we want ſome ſuperfluities, which we cannot make among ourſelves.——Let us make our coarſe cloaths firſt, and if we have any money to ſpare, 'tis time then to think of ſuperfluities. In my humble opinion, there are ſeveral articles of cloathing that can be made as well here as any where. I mention linen. The man who deſires to wear a ſhirt finer than can be made, and indeed has been already made here, is unworthy of the country he lives in.

God knows, I wiſh to ſee this people in a condition to face any attempt to abridge them of their Liberties; but I ſee no proſpect of it at preſent. I laugh at a man that talks of facing cannon and red-coats, who cannot conquer his foppiſh empty notions of grandeur. What is true grandeur, but a noble patriotic reſolution of ſacrificing every other conſideration to the Love of our Country! And can he be a true lover of his country, & conſequently of true grandeur, who would ſooner be ſeen ſtrutting about the ſtreets, clad in foreign fripperies than to be nobly independant in the ruſſet grey!——Before we think of reſiſting the moſt powerful ſtate in Europe, let us levy war againſt luxury, the parent of imbecility. A man that loves liberty (I dont mean Licentiouſneſs) will hunger and thirſt for its ſake. And when I ſee ſuch an exalted reliſh for genuine Liberty amongſt us, I ſhall begin to think, that there are people in the country who love it well enough to fight for it, and not before. But there is no need of ſuch raſh precipitate meaſures. Let them tax glaſs and every other article we have of them, if they pleaſe; the conſequenee will be we ſhall be unable to pay for them, and then neceſſity the parent of Invention, will point out to us ways and means of cloathing ourſelves within ourſelves. When this happens, we ſhall ſoon find our trade as free as we would have it; and above all, we ſhall be independant in a conſtitutional way. Great Britain will be then convinced, too late that her natural thirſt for the whole profits of our lives can ſecure to her, in the end, but a trifling part of it.

I hope that new meaſures will produce no new diſorders amongſt us. We ſtill feel the dreadful effects of them. This kind of enthuſiaſm, which blows up theſe tumults, knows no bounds.—They clog the wheels of juſtice, debilitate and throw down the props and ſupports of good government. 'Tis eaſy to be ſeen, that Britain will tax or endeavour to tax us, as long as ſhe finds it profitable to her, and no longer: and the only way to render taxation unprofitable to them, is to make our own cloaths. The Molaſſes Trade will ceaſe to be the great object of our attention, when the cauſe that made it neceſſary is removed.

Let me obſerve further, that when Engliſh goods were ſold high, people in this town and the adjacent country, began to make cloaths for themſelves. It was no longer a diſgrace for one of our fair ſex to be catched at a ſpinning wheel. This was encouraged by ſome of this place, who were ſincere lovers of their country.—I need not mention who made the firſt Spinning Entertainment in this place; but ſince floods of Engliſh goods have been poured in upon us, this family oeconomy is at an end. Before this new deluge, money began to ſtir amongſt us; but piſtereens are as ſcarce now as dollars were then and a man that ſees all this, need not fear the imputation of witchcraft. 'Tis true goods are ſold ſomething cheaper than formerly, but if we examine them, we ſhall find them poor and miſerable, ſuch as could find no buyers in Great Britain; but they are it ſeems, good enough to be ſent here, to cheat this country with. The perſons can be named who went into the manufacturing towns of England, and ſpoke for goods of an inferior quality, on purpoſe to raiſe to themſelves fortunes on the ruin and downfall of their fellow countrymen. It grieves me to ſee people contending for their juſt rights, and at the ſame time faſtening the fetters themſelves. I am very far from looking tamely on, and falling a prey to the wanton ambition of our enemies, without a ſtruggle. I am for fighting,—but the weapons that I would make uſe of ſhould be ſecret guile. I would go to work, and open to ourſelves richer ſources of wealth than the Melaſſes Trade ever was, or could be, to us. I dont mean that this trade ſhould be intirely at an end, but that it is in too many hands. The late grand undertaking in the iron way, is what ought to catch the attention of every man: 'Tis next to blaſphemy to think of any thing that would defeat this undertaking. This trade is neceſſary for defraying the expence of carrying it on; and even european goods, bought with the earnings, could do us no harm.

The penny duty upon melaſſes will as effectually drain this colony of its hard caſh, as the importation of European goods. The whole balance of this trade, when critically examined, is againſt the country. The profits of a voyage are not made out of the Weſt India merchant, but out of ourſelves. Beſides, no inconſiderable part of the produce of this country periſhes between here and Surrinam. The prodigious number of horſes thrown overboard, in hard gales of wind, is ſo much loſs to the country, we having no return for them. The ſame hay and grazing that would be ſufficient for a horſe, would rear two horn cattle. How many thouſands of hoops are thrown overboard in a year! 'Tis true the farmer, who brings them to market, being paid his price, does not meet with an immediate loſs; but it is a loſs to the country notwithſtanding. 'Tis time we begin to prefer the good of our country to the pride and vanity of individuals. I am pleaſed to find the town of Boſton waking out of her trance, and thinking of retrieving her circumſtances by induſtry. May we fall into the ſame conſtitutional way of growing independent!

There are too many idle people in this country, who live upon the labour of others; and oeconomy, both public and private, from which all countries grow thrifty, is quite out of faſhion: It is remarkably ſo with us. At this time, when the deſperate, and almoſt irretrievable condition of our government, challenges it to ply all its conſtitutions to the public good, we find it wrecked and torn to pieces by party broils. Inſtead of a true patriotic zeal, to ſnatch an almoſt undone people from the jaws of miſery and want, there opens to us one continued and uninterrupted ſcene of perjury, peculation & plunder. 'Tis enough to make the ſoul of an honeſt man ſink within him, to view a people led blindfold to their deſtruction, by thoſe who are enemies to our conſtitution; it touches me in the tendereſt part, to ſee them made uſe of only to put money into the pockets of baſe miſcreants. Theſe miſchiefs do not ariſe from the higher officers. The truth is, the government is ſo feeble, that the head officers cannot exerciſe the controuling, and yet conſtitutional powers lodged in them.

Qui Conſulta Patrum qui Leges Jureque ſervat.

He that diſpences with laws under pretence of public utility, betrays the conſtitution like treaſon.

I know it is thought, by ſome, very difficult to diſtinguiſh deſigning men from true patriots, both expreſſing equal warmth in all their actions. For my part, I ſee no difficulty in it. While a man is ſtriving for the laws, we muſt abandon common ſenſe to ſuppoſe him to have any private views, diſconnected with the good of the conſtitution, for he muſt firſt get rid of common ſenſe himſelf, to endeavour to give force to laws which would inevitably defeat any ſuch deſign: Therefore we may ſafely conclude, that the only ſort of men fit to be truſted with any ſhare in the government, are ſuch as diſcover, on all occaſions, a veneration & zeal for the laws of it.

Theſe reflections and remarks, which happened to occur at a leiſure hour, I have thrown upon paper, and ventured to be expoſed to the public eye, without much regard to ſtile or manner. I have not he got the Cacoethes Scribendi, and therefore perhaps may, for the future, trouble the public no further upon this or any other object.

Yeſterday arrived here an expreſs from Marſeilles, with the news to the ſenate, that the Dey of Algiers, amazed at the ſudden intimation of war made to him by his Excellency Admiral Emo, on his firſt refuſing to give ſatisfaction for breaking the capitulation of peace concluded with the Republick, had immediately after the departure of the Venetian fleet from out of the harbour of Algiers, come to a reſolution to beg peace of the Venetians through the mediation of his Britannick Majeſty's Conſul reſiding in that place. The orders of the Senate to Admiral Emo before he firſt left Venice were, that in caſe the Dey ſhould not comply with his demands, ſhould declare war, keep cruſing with the eight ſhips under his command in thoſe ſeas of Barbary, and ſink and burn all Algerine veſſels. This new proof of that ancient ſpirit and firmneſs of the Republic of Venice, ſhews at the ſame time that nothing but force can bring thoſe Powers of Barbary to obſerve the capitulations of peace concluded with them.

Naples, Auguſt 8. Mount Veſuvius has been much agitated of late, continually throwing up great quantities of inflamed matter, with exploſions; and though it has been rather more quiet for theſe two days paſt, it is thought the firſt rains will increaſe the fermentation, and that it will diſcharge itſelf in a Lava. The aſhes and ſtones which it has thrown up, have added at leaſt ſixty feet to the height of the mountain ſince the end of June laſt.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30.

Saturday laſt Capt. Bulkley, arrived here in ſeven Weeks from Liſbon, by whom we have the following Intelligence, viz. That the Count de la Lippe, Generaliſſimo of his moſt Faithful Majeſty's Troops, had arrived there from England, whither he had been lately ſent on an important Negotiation to the Britiſh Court; the Reſult of which remained a Secret; But it evidently appeared, that the Portugueſe were extremely apprehenſive of a War between Great Britain and Portugal, as their Court did not ſeem inclined to pay the Sum of Money demanded by that of Great-Britain—or to adjuſt in a proper Manner, the Differences ſubſiſting between the two Courts—That Intelligence was received at Liſbon, that the Portugueſe had retaken from the Spaniards a Place in the Brazils, the Name of which the Capt. could not remember; but it is the ſame that the Spaniards made themſelves Maſters of in the late War—That a Regiſter Ship was daily expected at Liſbon, from the Brazils, with a large Quantity of Caſh on board—And that a Portugueſe Viceroy, from the Eaſt-Indies, was arrived at Liſbon, but was immediately arreſted and confined in a ſtrong Caſtle, without permitting his Friends or Relations to ſee him—The Reaſon of which was not publickly known.

At a Meeting of the Suſquehanna Company, held at Windham, by Adjournment, November 11, 1767.

WHEREAS this Company have received late intelligence from Great Britain that their Agent has ſometime ſince removed from London by means of which the Proſecution of their Petition has been delayed, but that there ſeems a favourable Opportunity to proſecute the ſame and nothing diſcouraging as to ſucceſs, if an Agent was there preſent to proſecute the Affair. Thereupon reſolved, that it is neceſſary to have an Agent appointed for that purpoſe, and that it will be neceſſary, over and above the Company's Money, that has or may be collected in, to raiſe at leaſt One Dollar, or a Dollar and a Half, upon a Right, in order to proſecute ſaid Affair; and that this Meeting be adjourned to the 6th Day of January next, at Windham; and that public Notice be given thereof by the Clerk of this Company, in all the public News Papers, that ſaid Company meat at that Time by themſelves or Conſtituents, prepared to conſider of, and comply with, ſaid Reſolve; and the DELAWARE COMPANIES are alſo deſired to meet at that Time and Place, for the Purpoſe aboveſaid.

NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

A Writer of a Piece in the laſt Portſmouth Paper ſign'd Americanus, ſays, "It is with Pleaſure we hear that the Inhabitants of Boſton at a full Town Meeting, have unanimouſly determined and reſolved to retrench their Expences and ſuperfluous Conſumptions of Britiſh Manufactures.——Such Reſolves will evnetually procure them a ballance of Trade, if they can ſteadily adhere to them for a few Years: But conſidering they have had timely Intimations that an American Exchequer would certainly be appointed, they ſhould have come to theſe Reſolutions before they had commiſſioned ſuch very large Orders for Goods, as have lately been imported into that Place, to the Value of at leaſt £. 150,000 Sterling, and more daily expected, ſufficient for a full conſumption of the whole Province of the Maſſachuſetts for three Years to come.—Tho' I am far from thinking theſe Regulations will not have a proper Influence and greatly affect the intended Revenues...

"A am fully of Opinion the Appointment of a Board of Cuſtoms for America, will have many happy Conſequences, and I firmly believe it is more Service, than to pay the ſame Duties into the Exchequer in London, which has hitherto always been the Caſe, and we are only ſtarted at a Bugbear, as we don't pay an additional Duty upon theſe cuſtomed Articles added to the prime Coſts; this is a prevailing erroneous Repreſentation, which ought to be checked; for theſe enumerated Articles of Cuſtoms are only charged here, with what was before paid in England into the Exchequer there, and applied to the national Civil Liſt—now we pay it here, and not in England, and is appropriated to ſupport, firſt of all, the provincial Civil Liſts, which muſt greatly eaſe us of Taxes.

"I would ſtrongly recommend the uſe and wear of our own Manufactures of Cloathing, &c. and to import, no neceſſary Articles till we can better afford them. We can make moſt of our own Cloaths out of our own Wool, which will endure longer than any imported, beſides it will be an Employment for our Children, Servants and Poor, who would be otherwiſe expoſed to Idleneſs and Want, and might then be made Uſeful to our Families and the whole Community.

The Conſumption of Paper is worthy all our cloſeſt Applications: and when we conſider that moſt Families make more Rags which are thrown away, as, if preſerved would pay for all the Paper made in a Year: This ought to be a ſtimulus or Excitement to every head of a Family from Principles of ſound Policy, to urge and compel the Preſervation of theſe ſeemingly uſeleſs Raments; and every Farmer by preſerving his ſwingle Tow, which he throws out of his Barn, may now contribute his Share in the general Reformation, as with that Article can be made all our coarſe Paper, ſuitable for Shops and Sugar-Bakers uſe.

Providence, Nov. 21.

One Day this Week a Number of Ladies, upon an Afternoon's Viſit, at a Friend's Houſe, appeared dreſſed principally in the Manufactures of this Colony, and without Ribbons. They were genteely treated by the Lady of the Houſe (who was in the ſame Habit) with ſuitable Refreſhment, although Tea was excluded. It is hoped this Example of Oeconomy will be followed.

Newport, November 30.

A Town Meeting was held at the Colony Houſe in this Town laſt Thurſday, when a Committee was appointed to draw up a Plan for the Promotion of Frugality, Induſtry, and Manufactures, and are to make a Report to the Town on Friday next, to which Day the Meeting ſtands adjourned.

New-London, December 4.

Laſt Friday a Letter from the Select-men of the Town of Boſton, was received by the Selectmen of this Town, in which was encloſed the Doings of the Town of Boſton, at a Meeting held on the 28th of October laſt, for encouraging the Uſe and Conſumption of Articles manufactured in the Colonies, &c.——A Letter to the ſame Purport was alſo received laſt Week, by the Select-men of Norwich.

In Conſequence of the above Application from Boſton, we hear, this Town is ſpeedily to meet and deliberate on the intereſting and important Matters contained in ſaid Application.

We hear that Nathaniel Huntington, Eſq; of the Pariſh of Scotland, in Windham, died laſt Wedneſday ſuddenly, complaining only of a Pain in his Shoulder, which ſuddenly moving into his Breaſt he expired immediately.

BOSTON, December 4.

Laſt Sunday we had here another violent Storm, attended with Snow, which 'tis feared has been deſtructive to the Veſſels on the Coaſt——We hear that Capt. McFarland, in a Sloop belonging to John Hancock, Eſq; which ſailed from hence for London the Day before, was caſt away at a Place called Welfleet, on Cape-Cod, and that the Veſſel and moſt of the Cargo would be loſt, but the People ſaved.—We alſo hear that a Snow from Jamaica for Marblehead, and a Schooner from Louisbourgh, were aſhore at the ſame Place, but would be got off again; alſo that a Sloop from the Weſt-Indies bound to Caſco Bay, was loſt on the back of the Cape, and the Captain and three of the People drowned.

Capt. Maxwell in a Sloop from North-Carolina for this Port loſt Veſſel and Cargo, the People ſaved.

Several other Veſſels, moſtly ſmall Craft, were alſo caſt away at the ſame Place.

We hear from ſeveral Towns in the Province, That the Inhabitants have had Town-Meetings, and have approv'd of the Reſolutions of this Town for promoting Frugality, and encouraging Manufactures, and have reſolv'd to follow the ſame.

We are informed that a Child of a Merchant of this Town which was carried out the laſt Week for Chriſt'ning, was wholly dreſs'd in the Manufactures of this Province——

New-York, December 3.

Capt. Gibbs, in 42 Days from the Muſquito-Shore, informs us, That on the 17th Inſt. off the Havana, he ſpoke with the Ship Nancy, Capt. Yates, from the Bay, bound for London, who had ſprung a Leak, but was refuſed Admittance with his Ship into the Harbour of the Havana, and was not permitted even to land out of his Boat; he acquainted Capt. Gibbs, that 10 Sail of the Line lay ready rigged in the Harbour, when he was there; and that he propoſed to bear away for South-Carolina, or ſome other Port on the Continent.

Laſt Tueſday, Capt. Collins, arrived here in 28 Days from Antigua, having met with much bad Weather on his Paſſage: Capt. Collins, ſays Markets are very low in all the Windward Iſlands, particularly Flour, which was retailed in Antigua at 16s. per C. and a Boſton Veſſel was taking on board about 1200 Barrels to carry to Boſton.—Capt. Vardil from this Port, finding he could not diſpoſe of any of his Cargo to Windward, was gone to Curacoa.

BOSTON, Nov. 26.

The Inhabitants of this Metropolis ſtill perſevere in their reſolution to diſcourage the uſe of foreign Superfluities as the only means of ſaving the Country from impending ruin—The Inhabitants met by Adjournment on Friday laſt; the Gentlemen appointed to obtain Subſcriptions reported, and it appeared that great Part of the Freeholders had ſubſcribed.—— The Subſcription Rolls are daily filling up at the Town Clerk's Office, where they were order'd to be lodged for that purpoſe.—At the ſame Meeting it was voted to give their Repreſentatives inſtructions reſpecting their Conduct at this Criſis.——

THE Subſcription Rolls, for encouraging Oeconomy, Induſtry, our own Manufactures, and the diſuſe of foreign Superfluities, are in the Town Clerk's Hands, open to all Perſons who have not yet ſubſcribed.

The Selectmen ſtrongly recommend this Meaſure to Perſons of all Ranks, as the moſt honorable and effectual way of giving a public Teſtimony of their Love to their Country, and of endeavouring to ſave it from Ruin. We eſpecially recommend at this Time, as malicious Perſons venture, in the public Prints, falſely to inſinuate that the abovementioned Subſcription is meerly a Party Buſineſs, and the Propoſal only of a Junto: notwithſtanding ſo many Gentlemen of Credit, Character and Reputation have already encouraged it by their Subſcriptions.

We deteſt Mobs and riotous Aſſemblies, therefore, our Fellow-Townſmen, give us Leave to perſuade you to keep your Tempers and ſtudy Moderation when you meet with incitements artfully thrown out to beguile you into illegal meaſures. Believe us—they are intended ſo highly to excite your Reſentment that you may thereby, before you can take a ſecond thought, be thrown into ſuch Expreſſions of it as may be improved by deſigning Perſons to Ends, that will tend to the Gratification of their own Avarice and your Ruin.

The Author of a Piece, in the laſt Monday Evening-Poſt, inconſiſtently ſigned True Patriot, ſeems to have ſuch an Aim as is above pointed out; as all who were preſent at the two laſt Meetings of the Town, muſt know that he has miſrepreſented Facts, and that in ſo irritating a Manner as every Reader muſt obſerve the Tendency thereof is to raiſe the Paſſions.

Let us all, Gentlemen, guard againſt every Thing of the above deſcribed Complection, and avoiding all Outrage or Lawleſs Proceeding, may we join as one Man in a prudent Conduct and cautious Behaviour, thereby convincing the World we mean, with Reſolution and a truly patriotic Spirit, to purſue our own true Intereſt in a laudable and inoffenſive way.

London, Sept. 9.

Saturday evening a well-dreſſed elderly man, paſſing along Great Ruſſel-ſtreet, obſerved a girl, of about eleven years of age, ſitting at a door, and bemoaning herſelf after a very piteous manner; he, from a principle of humanity, making inquiry after the reaſon of it, ſhe replied that ſhe had broke a bottle, which her miſtreſs had given her to fetch ſome oil in, and that ſhe dared not go home, ſhe ſhould be ſo cruelly beat, for that the perſon ſhe lived with was not a degree better than the woman of Newgate; the Gentleman gave her ſixpence with which ſhe went to a neighbouring ſhop, bought a bottle and had ſome oil put into it, but having watched which way her benefactor took ſhe was again at his heels preſently, and ſtill inceſſantly crying: the Gentleman turning about & perceiving the ſame girl, aſked her what ſhe cried for then? ſhe told him that ſhe ſhould certainly be murdered by her miſtreſs for ſtaying ſo long, unleſs he would be ſo good as to go with her, and intercede in her behalf: ſhe lived but a little way off, ſhe ſaid, and for her own caſe, ſhe was a poor helpleſs foundling, who had been apprenticed by the pariſh, and that ſhe was beat moſt unmercifully many times every day, without any provocation, and half ſtarved into the bargain. The Gentlemen, actuated by compaſſion, went along with her, when ſhe conducted him into a ruinous piece of building behind Tottenham-court-road where were two fellows (no doubt planted for the purpoſe) playing at chuck-farthing; but immediately leaving their game, they ſeized the Gentlemen, and robbed him of ſome few ſhillings, and ſome halfpence, a ſilk handkerchief, a ſnuff box, and a toothpick-caſe; after which they tied an old dirty rag about his eyes very tight, and bad him not offer to remove in leſs than 5 minutes, on pain of being ſhot through the head: to which being conformable, when he took it off, he ſaw no more of the adventurers, who were got clear off with the booty.

They write from Breſt, that two thouſand tons of ſhip timber had juſt arrived there in Swediſh tranſports, from the Baltick, for the uſe of the King's dock yards.

LONDON, Sept. 21.

Extract of a Letter from Paris, Aug. 29.

" A foreign Baron, ſtruck ſome days ſince at the Opera with the ſoft attitudes and wanton geſtures of Mademoiſelle Allard, wrote to her the following billet;

" Madam, I am a Foreigner, & of courſe little accuſtomed to French gallantry. I can make love only ſeriouſly. Your figure and ſeducing attitudes have pleaſed me to that degree, that I am determined to marry you. I offer you my hand if you will quit the Theatre, and cut capers only for me. I am a perſon of rank, have 20 thouſand crowns a year; for the reſt, am young, well made, and vigorous. Return me an anſwer directly.

The Baron of———."

' A ſervant out of livery, but very well dreſſed, carried this billet, with an injunction not to tell the name of his maſter,

' Mademoiſelle Allard replied:

" Sir, Your propoſals are ſo extraordinary, that I cannot but conſider them as a joke. Accordingly I have no other anſwer to make. I have the honour of being, &c.

ALLARD."

" Madam I had the honour of telling you, that I meant not gallant formalities. My propoſals are ſincere and frank. May you uſe the like freedom with me, & open your heart with the ſame confidence I ſhew you. Once more, it is marriage I propoſe, in good & lawful form. It gives me little concern that you have been a Miſtreſs provided you are not ſo when you are my wife; —— but avail yourſelf of my phrency; I ſhall not remain long perhaps in the ſame way of thinking. I cannot believe, that on this ſecond explanation you will be ſtill incredulous. Adieu, Queen of my heart; remember it is not a Baroneſs it ſighs after."

" I begin to believe, Sir, that what you write to me is very ſeriouſly, and that you think all that you ſay. You expreſs yourſelf without circumlocution, and I will now do the ſame. I ſhould like very well to be a Baroneſs, to enjoy 20,000 crowns a year, ſtill better to marry a man young, well made, and vigorous: but wedlock terrifies me, the profeſſion of a Miſtreſs pleaſes me, and yet I am honeſt: If I had given you a promiſe of fidelity, I ſhould have kept it to a degree of madneſs: But I would chooſe to be leſs rich to continue unmarried, and to change my lover when I pleaſe. There is a proper return for your frankneſs; & without being of your country, I think I can be ſincere. For the reſt, I am at preſent engaged to one whom I prefer to the ſovereignty of the world: Judge then if a Barony, eſpecially a foreign one can tempt me. Adieu, Sir, quit your phrenſy as ſoon as you pleaſe, and ſet a proper value on my refuſal.

" I am, &c."

' Mademoiſelle Allard received the day following, by the penny poſt, a billet in theſe terms:

" Madam when a man like me makes propoſals of the kind mine were, he is not diſpoſed to be refuſed. I forgot myſelf to that degree, that I would have married you; there wanted nothing to my reproach but your denial: That has reſtored me entirely to myſelf, and I now ſee what I have to do. Since I cannot be your huſband, I am reſolved to blow my own brains out, but firſt to blow out yours. Prepare yourſelf for that event."

' Mademoiſelle Allard, extremely alarmed, went to the Lieutenant of the Police. The latter comforted her, and bid her fear nothing. Strict ſearches are makeing after the Foreigner.'

SCOTLAND

Edinburgh Sept. 8. We hear from Clackmannan, that a murder was committed there the end of laſt week, by a Gentleman of that neighbourhood, who ſtabbed a young man, of the name of Richardſon, with a pen-knife. The father coming to the aſſiſtance of his ſon, was alſo ſtabbed in the belly, and died ſoon after. The ſon was mortally wounded, but not dead when the laſt accounts came away. The murderer was ſecured, and we are told is committed to Stirling Caſtle.

From the North we have an account of an uncommon phænomenon, which made its appearance a few days ago in Perthſhire. It was firſt obſerved on the water of Iſla, near Cupor Angus, where it was preceeded by a thick dark ſmoke, which ſoon diſperſed, and diſcovered a large luminous body, which at firſt ſight appeared like an houſe on fire; but which preſently after took a form ſomething pyramidical, and rolled forwards with impetuoſity, till it came to the water of Erick, which empties itſelf into Iſla, up which river it took its direction likewiſe with great rapidity, and diſappeared a little above Blairgowrie.

Extract of a Letter from Paris, dated Sept, 5.

" We are aſſured that the troop of Carabiniers, in their late march from Compeigne to Paris, laid the village under contribution, and behaved quite in a military manner, raiſing by force, and without payment, what ever they thought proper. Theſe diſorders have irritated ſeveral noblemen to whom their vaſſals have complained, and they joined together to carry on a proceſs againſt M. de Payanne, to obtain an indemnification for the devaſtation and plunder made by his carabiniers.

" One of them paſſing towards Montrogue (a village half a league from Paris) met a waſher woman and her daughter carrying ſome linen; he addreſſed the youngeſt, aſked her what ſhe had got, ſearched, and found ſome men's ſhirts, ſaid they would ſuit him very well and carried them off, in ſpite of the intreaties, and tears of the women. He went afterwards to a tavern, got drunk, and, in quality of a carabiner, marched off without paying. He met in his way one of the comrades, as drunk as himſelf, who aſked what he was about, and from whence he came, &c. The former confeſſed that he had ſome remorſe for juſt having committed a ſcandalous action and related the ſtory. The latter ſaid, with the contempt and tone of a carabiner, " what an infamous action is that it deſerves the rack—" You are right, (ſays the other) but I was not made for the rack; no, a carabiner, is not deſtined for that."—— What's to be done then?—I have a great mind to cut you in pieces." replied this angry comrade. You'll do well, ſlaſh away—hold here I am (and at the ſame time he pulled off his hat, and preſented himſelf to his comrade, who drew and lifted his ſabre) courage, my friend, hack me well, purify me in my blood." ——The other immediately fell on and cut him to pieces, without his uttering one cry or groan. The victim expired, and the ſacrificer walked cooly off."

From the Public Advertiſer, London, Aug. 21.

Glaring Abſurdities & Inconſiſtencies.

IN this country, and at this period, we offer forty pounds to apprehend a neceſſitous wretch, whom hunger has led to take 1s. from ſomebody on the highway; but if an inhuman monſter commits half a dozen murders, ten guineas we reckon a mighty reward for bringing her to juſtice.

Nothing but the cry of diſtreſs to be heard from every quarter of the kingdom, decay of trade, and dearneſs of proviſions; yet in every quarter of the kingdom nothing to be ſeen but diſſipation and extravigance.

Poor rogues, who gamble for halfpence, frequently ſent to Bridewell; but rich ones allowed to play for thouſands in every part of the metropolis. Nay, tho' gaming in General is contrary to law yet encouraged at Newmarket, by bounty from Government.

An army of writers every hour celebrating the Corſicans for the noble love of Liberty, and abuſing the poor Americans, becauſe they are unwilling to be ſlaves.

Juſtices ſending ſtreet-walkers inceſſently to Bridewell, yet licenſing common baudy houſes in every corner of the town.

Stateſmen diſmiſſed from employment on account of incapicity, yet honored with titles and emoluments for extraordinary ſervices.

Miniſters who have been granted large penſions to come into office, granted additional penſions to reſign, and all within the circle of a ſingle twelvemonth.

Clergymen of the Eſtabliſhed church every where exclaiming againſt the indefatigable induſtry of Popiſh prieſts in making proſelytes yet taking no pains whatſoever to keep their flocks in the orthodox faith.

Patriotic ſocieties offering rewards to bring turbot to the tables of the rich, but no premium offered to bring corn to the relief of the neceſſitous.

Men of abilities obliged to take degrees for the practice of medicine; while fellows who can neither read nor write are allowed to tamper with the lives of his Majeſty's ſubjects, under the immediate ſanction of authority.

The corporation of London continually paying large ſums of money to pull down good houſes, for the ſake of unneceſſary improvement; but obſtinately refuſing to pull down a ſtreet of tottering old ſheds that diſgrace their city, and endanger the lives of their inhabitants.

LONDON, July 23.

On Tueſday an inquiſition was taken at Guy's hoſpital, on the body of Elizabeth, the wife of Edward Haſcar, otherwiſe called Sarah Bartlett, (for by that name ſhe was brought to the hoſpital) when it appeared, by the evidence of Elizabeth Aldridge, ſervant to Patrick Dawſon, of Bermondſey-Street, Surgeon and Apothecary, (the only witneſs as to the fact) that the deceaſed was formerly houſekeeper to her maſter, and that uſed frequently to come to his houſe & cohabit with him; that laſt Thurſday evening, on his coming home, he aſked the witneſs whether the deceaſed had been there who informed him ſhe had not; he then expreſſed a great deſire to ſee her, and directed the witneſs to riſe early next morning and fetch her, which ſhe did, and on coming in, her maſter being in bed, the witneſs informed him the deceaſed was come; whereon he deſired them to come up ſtairs to him, and a boy was ſent for ſome brandy, which being drank, he ordered the witneſs to make ſome chocolate for their breakfaſt, and on the witneſs's quitting the room for that purpoſe, the deceaſed immediately followed her into the kitchen; that ſoon after her maſter came down, and he and the deceaſed breakfaſted together in the kitchen; that after breakfaſt Dawſon ſaluted the deceaſed, ſaying, My Dear, I love you; I have ſomething in particular to tell you; to which the deceaſed anſwered, the maid would go out of the kitchen, he replied that would not do. The deceaſed then propoſed to go into the parlour, and ſeveral other places but none would do beſides his bedchamber, to which, at length, ſhe conſented to go, and on their going up ſtairs, ſhe ſaid, It is not the firſt time I have truſted myſelf with you alone, by many, and expreſſed a great deſire of knowing the ſecret he was to communicate to her: that on their entering the bedchamber, the door was immediately faſtened, and they continued together very quiet about a quarter of an hour, when on a ſudden the deceaſed cried out ſeveral times, Murder! Murder! Betty! Betty! That the witneſs ran directly up ſtairs, & found the bedchamber door locked, and heard Dawſon ſay, Betty, you are too late; that ſhe burſt open the door, and ſaw the deceaſed lying on the floor in a gore of Blood, her maſter ſtanding near her with a bloody knife, in his right hand; and on the witneſs crying out, You wicked blood-thirſty man, what have you done! he moved the knife, aiming at her, as if he intended to ſtab her, and d——d her, ſaying, he would ſtab her too. That on the witneſs aſking the deceaſed, what occaſioned her maſter to uſe her ſo? ſhe informed her, that becauſe ſhe had refuſed to permit him to be criminally concerned with her, on a ſudden opened his bureau, and from thence took a knife, with which he ſtabbed her. The Surgeons, on examining the deceaſed's body, diſcovered three wounds in her belly, which they made no doubt were mortal, and confirmed the above witneſs in the deceaſed's declaration as to the occaſion. The deceaſed was ſent to Guy's hoſpital, and there died, the next morning; where ſhe alſo declared the reaſon of her ill-treatment, and acknowledged ſhe was above 5 months gone with child, but was uncertain who was the father of it. The Jury brought in their verdict, Wilful Murder.

The above Patrick Dawſon is not yet taken.

New-York, December 7.

We hear a ſmall Sloop belonging to Amboy, John Hampton, Maſter, was overſet in the Storm on the 17th of October laſt, off Chingoteague in Virginia, the Maſt, Sails and Rigging, all carried away and one man drowned. —The reſt continued on the Wreck a conſiderable Time, till ſhe drove aſhore in Acomack County; the Maſter has ſince returned home, and it is doubtful whether the Veſſel will be ever got off.

Two Lads being left together at a Houſe in the Town, during the Time of a funeral, one of them got a Gun which was loaded and ſhot the other dead.

And that all ſuch as are diſpoſed to favor him with their Cuſtom, may depend upon being well provided with all proper and neceſſary Accommodations, Proviſions, &c. and the beſt Attendance, at the moderate Expence of Four Pounds, Lawful Money, for each Patient. That, after the firſt Set or Claſs, he purpoſes to give no Occaſion for waiting to go in by particular Setts, but to admit Perſons ſingly, juſt as it ſuits them; as he has another good Houſe provided near ſaid Hoſpital, where his Family are to live, and where all that come (after the firſt Sett go into the Hoſpital) are to remain with his Family, until they are ſufficiently prepared and inoculated, and until it be apparent that they have taken them. the Infection. 43

NEWPORT, Dec. 7.

It is with the greateſt pleaſure we can inform our Brethren of the neighbouring colonies, that there is the faireſt proſpect that the Plan for promoting Frugality and Induſtry, and our own Manufactures will be attended here with every happy Effect; and that the People in general are at preſent actuated with a Spirit of diſcouraging, as much as poſſible, the further Importation of European Manufactures.—Many Perſons are determined to uſe their Influence in putting a Stop to the deſtructive and pernicious Effects attending the enormous Conſumption of foreign Teas, which muſt otherwiſe ſoon render us a poor, weak, and debilitated People.—The Hiperion or Labradore Tea is much eſteemed and by great Numbers vaſtly preferred to the poiſonous Bohea.

We have heard of many Gentlemen in Town, of Figure and Fortune, who are determined to cloath themſelves and Families, for the future, with the Manufactures of this Country.

BOSTON, December 10.

We are informed, That the Great and General Court or Aſſembly of this Province, which ſtands prorogued to Wedneſday the 30th Day of December Inſt. will then meet to do buſineſs.

We hear from Middleborough, that at a Meeting of the Inhabitants of that Town, they voted to come into the ſame Meaſures that the Town of Boſton had, reſpecting Frugality and Manufactures: A Committee had previouſly prepared a Draught of Regulations, which varied in ſome ſmall Articles from thoſe ſent from hence: But were objected to, leaſt the Deſign of the Town of Boſton, which they did not fully know, ſhould be fruſtrated.

Capt. NEW-YORK, December 10.

On Wedneſday the 23d of Nov. at his Houſe in Elizabeth Town, New Jerſey died Sir JOHN St. CLAIR, Baranet, Col of His Majeſty's——Regiment, and Quarter-maſter General of the Army in North America in which Station he has acted for 13 Years with Great Honour and Integrity. His Death was occaſioned by a Wound he received thro' the Lungs, on the Banks of the Monongahala, in July 1755 at Braddock's unfortunate Defeat, of which Wound he never recovered. He was between 50 & 60 Years of Age and has been near 40 Years in his Majeſty's Service.——He acted on all occaſions with a firmneſs of Spirit, Reſignation and Dignity becoming his Profeſſion and Character——His Remains were inter'd on Saturday the twenty ſixth, with all Military Honours. His Excellency General Gage, accompained by the Gentlemen of his Suite from Head Quarters, and the Officers from the adjacent Garriſons in New York and New-Jerſey, attended with the Solemnity.

Thurſday laſt Capt. Harris arrived here from New Orleans, in 23 days, by whom we have Advice that a Captain (ſuppoſed to be Rea) belonging to one of the Regiments ſtationed at Mobile or Penſacola, lately died on his paſſage from the Natches to the laſt mentioned Place: On the Paſſage Capt Harris ſpoke with the following Veſſels viz. The 14th of Nov. Lat twenty four and half, off the Dry Tortugas, with Captain Rogers in a Sloop from this Port, for Penſacola, with Troops, 34 Days out; the next day, off the Havannah, with Capt. Burner, in a Sloop from the Bay for this Port, 15 Days out, who informed him that he ſailed from thence in Company with Capt. Gilcriſt, and Lawrence of this Port, the former for Europe and the latter for the Weſt Indies; and the 30th of November he alſo ſpoke with Capt Martin, in a Schooner, from Coracoa, for this Port in Lat 36. 50. Lon. 72. 31.

By a Veſſel from Albany, we learn, that Snow fell in ſuch large Quantities, the the twenty ſecond and twenty ninth of laſt Month, that there was good Sledding, and it lay above nine Inches on a level quite down to the Highlands.

Laſt Sunday an excellent Charity Sermon was preached at Trinity Church, by the Rev. Mr. Englis for the Benefit of the poor Scholars, when a handſome Collection was made for their Support. And next Sunday in the Forenoon, a Charity Sermon will alſo be preached in St. George's Chapel, for the like laudable Purpoſe.

The ſame Day a Charity Sermon was preached in the Presbyterian Church in this City by the Rev Mr John Rodgers, Senior, Miniſter, when a handſome Collection was raiſed for the Uſe of the Poor.

We hear, that laſt week one of the ſtage waggons, croſſing the ferry at Kill Vankull, in a ſcow, ſome of the paſſengers ſeated themſelves in the waggon; but in approaching the ſhore, the waggon was by ſome means overturn'd, into the River, by which accident two women (Mrs. Morris, belonging to the play houſe, and her Maid,) were drowned.

Simſbury, 2d Dec. 1767.

A melancholly accident happened laſt week in the north weſt ſociety in this town.—The only ſon of Mr. Abel Phelps, a child of about five years of age, ſtept on one of the Buckets of a ſaw-mill water-wheel, when the mill was ſtanding ſtill; and the weight of the child turned the wheel, and the weight of the crank brought the feet, legs, and lower parts of the child, under, between the floom and wheel, and ſo preſſed the child acroſs the loins, that it lived but about two days, and died, to the great grief of its parents and friends.

From the PENNSYLVANIA CHRONICLE, of December 2.

LETTER I.

Beloved Countrymen,

I AM a Farmer, ſettled, after a Variety of Fortunes, near the Banks of the River Delaware in the Province of Pennſylvania. I received a liberal Education, and have been engaged in the buſy Scenes of Life; but am now convinced that a man may be as happy without Buſtle, as with it. My farm is ſmall my ſervants few, and good; I have a little Money at Intereſt; I wiſh for no more; my Employment in my own affairs is eaſy, and with a contented grateful Mind, undiſturbed by worldly hopes or fears, relating to myſelf, I am completing the Number of Days allotted to me by Divine Goodneſs.

Being Maſter of my Time, I ſpend a good Deal of it in a Library, which I think the moſt valuable Part of my ſmall Eſtate; and being acquainted with two or three Gentlemen of Abilities and Learning, who honour me with their Friendſhip, I have acquired, I believe, a greater Knowledge in Hiſtory, and the laws and Conſtitution of my Country, than is generally attained by Men of my Claſs, many of them not being ſo fortunate as I have been, in the Opportunities of getting information.

From my infancy I was taught to love Humanity and Liberty. Enquiry and Experience have ſince confirmed my Reverence for the Leſſons then given me, by convincing me more fully of their Truth and Excellence. Benevolence towards mankind, excites Wiſhes for their Welfare, and ſuch wiſhes endear the Means of fulfilling them. Theſe can be found in Liberty only: Therefore her ſacred cauſe ought to be eſpouſed by every man, on every occaſion, to the utmoſt of his power. As a charitable, but poor perſon does not withhold his mite, becauſe he cannot relieve all the diſtreſſes of the miſerable, ſo let not any honeſt man ſuppreſs his ſentiments concerning freedom, however ſmall their influence is likely to be. Perhaps he "may touch ſome wheel,*" that will have an effect greater than he expects.

Theſe being my ſentiments, I am encouraged to offer to you, my countrymen, my thoughts on ſome late Tranſactions, that appear to me to be of the utmoſt importance to you. Conſcious of my own defects I have waited ſome time, in expectation of ſeeing the ſubject treated by perſons much better qualified for the taſk; but being therein diſappointed, and apprehenſive that longer delays will be injurious, I venture at length to requeſt the attention of the public, praying only for one thing.—That is, that theſe lines may be read with the ſame zeal for the happineſs of Britiſh America, with which they were wrote.

With a good deal of ſurpriſe I have obſerved that little notice has been taken of an act of parliament, as injurious in its principle to the liberties of theſe colonies, as the ſtamp-act was: I mean the act for ſuſpending the legiſlation of New-York.

The aſſembly of that government complied with a former act of parliament, requiring certain proviſions to be made for the troops in America, every particular, I think, except the articles of ſalt, pepper and vinegar. In my opinion they acted imprudently, conſidering all circumſtances in not complying ſo far as would have given ſatisfaction, as ſeveral colonies did: but my diſlike of their conduct in that inſtance, has not blinded me ſo much, that I cannot plainly perceive, that they have been puniſhed in a manner pernicious to American freedom, and juſtly alarming to all the colonies.

If the britiſh parliament has a legal authority to order, that we ſhall furniſh a ſingle article for the troops here, and to compel obedience to that order; they have the ſame right to order us to ſupply thoſe troops with arms, cloaths, and every neceſſary, and to compel obedience to that order alſo; in ſhort to lay any burdens they pleaſe upon us. What is this but taxing us at a certain ſum and leaving to us only the manner of raiſing it? how is this mode more tolerable than the ſtamp act? would that act have appeared more pleaſing to Americans, if being ordered thereby to raiſe the ſum total of the taxes, the mighty privilege had been left to them, of ſaying how much ſhould be paid for an inſtrument of writing on paper, and how much for another on parchment.

An act of parliament commanding us to do a certain thing, if it has any validity, is a tax upon us for the expence that accrues in complying with it, and for this reaſon I believe every colony on the continent, that choſe to give a mark of their reſpect for Great Britain, in complying with the act relating to the troops, cautiouſly avoided the mention of that act leaſt their conduct ſhould be attributed to its ſuppoſed obligation.

The matter being thus ſtated, the aſſembly of New York either had, or had not a right, to refuſe ſubmiſſion to that act. If they had and I imagine no American will ſay, they had not, then the parliament had no right to compel them to execute it. If they had not that right, they had no right to puniſh them for not executing it, and therefore had no right to ſuſpend their legiſlation, which is a puniſhment. In fact if the people of New-York cannot be legally taxed but by their own repreſentatives, they cannot be legally deprived of the privileges of making laws, only for inſiſting on that excluſive privilege of taxation. If they may be legally deprived in ſuch a caſe of the privilege of making laws, why may they not, with equal reaſon, be deprived of every other privilege? Or why may not every colony be treated in the ſame manner, when any of them ſhould dare to deny their aſſent to any impoſitions that ſhall be directed? Or what ſignifies the repeal of the ſtamp act, if theſe colonies are to loſe their other privileges, by not tamely ſurrendering that of taxation?

There is one conſideration ariſing from this ſuſpenſion, which is not generally attended to but ſhews its importance very clearly. It was not neceſſary, that this ſuſpenſion ſhould be cauſed by an act of parliament. The crown might have reſtrained the governor of New York, even from calling the aſſembly together, by its prerogative in the royal governments. This ſtep, I ſuppoſe, would have been taken, if the conduct of the aſſembly of New York had been regarded as an act of diſobedience to the crown alone: But it is regarded as an act of "diſobedience to the authority of the BRITISH "LEGISLATURE" This gives the ſuſpenſion a conſequence vaſtly more affecting. It is a parliamentary aſſertion of the ſupreme authority of the Britiſh legiſlature over theſe colonies in the point of taxation; and is intended to COMPEL New York unto a ſubmiſſion to that authority. It ſeems therefore to me as much a violation of the liberty of the people of that province, and conſequently to all theſe colonies, as if the parliament had ſent a number of regiments to be quartered upon them, till they ſhould comply. For it is evident that the ſuſpenſion is meant as a compulſion; and the method of compelling is totally indifferent. It is indeed probable, that the ſight of red coats, and the beating drums would have been moſt alarming, becauſe people are generally more influenced by their eyes and ears than by their reaſon: But whoever ſeriouſly conſiders the matter, muſt perceive that a dreadful ſtroke is aimed at the liberty of theſe colonies. I ſay of theſe colonies: For the cauſe of one is the cauſe of all. If the parliament may lawfully deprive New York of any of its rights, it may deprive any or all the other colonies of their rights; and nothing can poſſibly ſo encourage ſuch attempts, as a mutual inattention to the intereſt of each other. To divide, and thus to deſtroy, is the firſt political maxim in attacking thoſe who are powerful by their union. He certainly is not a wiſe man, who folds his arms and repoſeth himſelf at home, ſeeing with unconcern the flames that have invaded his neighbour's houſe without any endeavours to extinguiſh them. When Mr. Hampden's ſhip money cauſe, for three ſhillings and four pence was tried, all the people of England, with anxious expectation, intereſted themſelves in the important deciſion; and when the ſlighteſt point touching the freedom of a ſingle colony is agitated, I earneſtly wiſh that all the reſt may with equal ardor ſupport their ſiſter. Very much may be ſaid on this ſubject, but I hope more at preſent is unneceſſary.

With concern I have obſerved that two aſſemblies of this province have ſat and adjourned, without taking any notice of this act. It may perhaps be aſked, what would have been proper for them to do? I am by no means fond of inflamatory meaſures. I deteſt them. I ſhould be ſorry that any thing ſhould be done which might juſtly diſpleaſe our ſovereign, or our mother country. But a firm, modeſt exertion of a free ſpirit ſhould never be wanting on public occaſions. It appears to me, that it would have been ſufficient for the aſſembly, to have ordered our agents to repreſent to the King's miniſters their ſenſe of the ſuſpending act, and to pray for its repeal. Thus we ſhould have borne our teſtimony againſt it; and might therefore reaſonably expect that on a like occaſion, we might receive the ſame aſſiſtance from the other colonies.

TO know the world: that is the queſtion!—— Now I am to give you the genuine ſenſe and ſignification of this phraſe.——To know the world, then, is to know how to get money; and when got, to know how to keep it; to know how to juggle with the jugglers of Change-Alley; to know how to raiſe a large fortune; and then (which is the height and depth of knowledge) to know how to talk and boaſt of it, and laſtly, having known how to amaſs together this large fortune, to know how to leave it, at death, to ſome profligate kinſman, that ſhall know how to ſpend it.——This, in every ſenſe of the term, is knowing the world."

But there is another way of knowing the world, which is a far genteeler and politer way.——This is what we call ſeeing life. Seeing life, accompliſhes the mind, purifies the morals, and refines the taſte. Whoever is poſſeſſed with real notions of gentility, & wiſhes to be the ſenſible and agreable companion, muſt neceſſarily ſee life; that is, you muſt keep all ſorts of company, from the nobleman to the beggar; and you muſt agree with every diſpoſition, and conform with every behavior, that is immediately inconſiſtent with the tenets of reaſon prudence and good manners; all ſober and well diſpoſed perſons you muſt laugh at and ridicule, as people wholly unfit to live in the world. You muſt very often drink very much, and when you have ſo done, you muſt appear very great; that is, you muſt ſwear a very good round hand, & ſing a very good bawdy ſong. You muſt be very expert and ready in giving an ingenious toaſt or ſentiment; by ingenious I mean, that it muſt be ſmart and witty; I mean that it muſt be ſmutty and fulſome—This is life——You muſt be a humoriſt; that is, you muſt mimic—— ſuch as have an impediment in their ſpeech; be exceſſive droll in your remarks upon thoſe who are diſfigured with any defects of nature; and look upon every perſon as a fool that has any regard for religion. And you muſt be a buck; that is, you muſt be impious in your morals, wanton in debaucheries, and horrid in your imprecations;——in every thing that has the leaſt alliance with obſcenity and lewdneſs, or in ſhort, with any kind of wickedneſs you muſt be learned; and in every thing elſe you may be as ignorant as you Pleaſe.——

Whenever you go to church (as you may now and then do when you have no where elſe to go) you muſt try every means to let the congregation ſee that it is not devotion, but curioſity brings you there: never look at the parſon, but at the fine girls——and ſtare at them. This is life.——

You muſt go to taverns, and coffeehouſes, and bawdy houſes, where you muſt commit every kind of tumult and diſorder, ſuch as jumping about the rooms, putting out the candles, ſpilling the liquors, breaking the glaſſes, kicking the waiters, &c. &c —— This is life, ſeeing life, and knowing the world.

He that is capable of telling a falſhood, deſerves not a place in ſociety.

THERE is hardly any vice which ſhews a greater depravation in the human mind, than that mentioned in the motto; or which is attended with more pernicious conſequences in ſociety. Whoever therefore is guilty of it, ought to be treated with the higheſt degree of abhorrence and contempt. He ought eſpecially to be baniſhed from that ſocial intercourſe of men, which the poiſon of this vice tends particularly to conteminate and deſtroy. The peace of families, the harmony of neighbours, and ſometimes the tranquility of a country, is diſturbed by thoſe, who do not heſitate to invent and propagate falſhoods. Suſpicion is often thrown upon the moſt innocent, and the reputations of the moſt worthy perſons injured by thoſe who ſpeak of others without any regard to truth. A liar is therefore as dangerous to the characters of men in ſociety, as an aſſaſſin is to their lives; they are equally a cauſe of conſtant apprehenſion, and often cannot be ſhunned by the niceſt circumſpection. Nor is the crime of the one much more venial than that of the other; as you had almoſt as well take away a man's life from him, as his peace and reputation. The liar therefore, as the aſſaſſin ſhould be treated with exemplary puniſhment; as unworthy the name of man, and the benefits of ſociety. If death ſhould be inflicted on the one, baniſhment ſhould reward the other. Awed by the fear of ſuch treatment, the malice which actuates ſome would be reſtrained, and the folly or inattention which miſguides others, would be effectually corrected. The peace of ſociety would no longer be diſturbed by groundleſs reports, the reputations of individuals would be ſhielded from calumnious miſrepreſentations, and innocence would repoſe itſelf without injury or alarm.

Open mine Eyes, that I may ſee the Wonders of thy Law.

"Jeſus came to fulfil the Law, and not to aboliſh the Law. But there are a new Fraternity of late ſprung up who call themſelves Jeſuits, which will deceive many, who are much after the Scribes and Phariſees Manner amongſt the Jews; they ſhall ſtrive to aboliſh the Truth, and ſhall come very near to do it; for theſe ſorts will turn themſelves into ſeveral Forms; with the Heathen, an Hetheniſt; with Atheiſts, an Atheiſt; with the Jews, a Jew; with the Reformers, a Reformed; purpoſely to know your Intentions, your Minds, your Hearts, and your Inclinations, and thereby bring you at laſt to be like the Fool, that ſaid in his Heart there was no God. Theſe ſhall ſpread over the whole World, ſhall be admitted into the Council of Princes, and they never the wiſer; charming of them, yea, making your Princes reveal their Hearts, and the Secrets therein, unto them, and yet they not perceive it; which will happen from falling from the Law of God, by neglect of fulfilling of the Law of God, and by winking at their Sins; yet, in the End, God, to juſtify his Law, ſhall ſuddenly cut off this Society, even by the Hands of thoſe who have moſt ſuccoured them, and made Uſe of them, ſo that at the End, they ſhall become odious to all Nations; they ſhall be worſe than Jews, having no reſting Place upon the Earth; and then ſhall a Jew have more favor than a Jeſuit. Now to arm you all, good Chriſtians, againſt theſe Things that are to come, leſt ye be led into Temptation, cry unto the Lord your God, and heartily pray that he would be ſo merciful unto you, as to open the Eyes of your Underſtanding, that you may behold the Wonders and Pleaſantneſs that is in the Law."

LETTER II.

Beloved Countrymen,

THERE is another act of parliament, which ſeems to be as deſtructive to the liberty of theſe colonies, as that inſerted in my laſt letter; that is, the act for granting the duties on paper and glaſs &c. It appears to me to be unconſtitutional: the parliament unqueſtionably poſſeſſes a legal authority to regulate the trade of Great Britain and all its colonies. Such an authority is eſſential to the relation between a mother-country and its colonies, and neceſſary for the common good of all. He who conſiders theſe provinces as ſtates diſtinct from the British empire, has very ſlender notions of juſtice or of their intereſts. We are but parts of a whole and therefore there muſt exiſt a power ſomewhere to preſide, and preſerve the connection in due order. This power is lodged in the parliament; and we are as much dependent on G. Britain, as a perfectly free people can be on another.

I have looked over every ſtatute relating to theſe colonies, from their firſt ſettlement to this time; and I find every one of them founded on this principle, till the Stamp-act adminiſtration. (a) All before, are calculated to preſerve or promote a mutually beneficial intercourſe between the ſeveral conſtituent parts of the empire; and though many of them impoſed duties on trade, yet thoſe duties were always impoſed with deſign to reſtrain the commerce of one part, that was injurious to another, and thus to promote the general welfare. The raiſing a revenue thereby was never intended. Thus the king, by his judges in his courts of juſtice, impoſes fines, which altogether, amount to a conſiderable ſum, and contribute to the ſupport of government: But this is merely a conſequence ariſing from reſtrictions, which only meant to keep peace and prevent confuſion ; and ſurely a man would argue very looſely, who ſhould conclude from hence, that the king has a right to levy money in general upon his ſubjects. Never did the Britiſh parliament, till the period abovementioned, think of impoſing duties in America for the purpoſe of raiſing a revenue. Mr. Grenville's ſagacity firſt introduced this language, in the preamble to the fourth George III. chap. 15th, which has theſe words——“ And whereas it is juſt and neceſſary, that a revenue be raiſed in your Majeſty's ſaid Dominions in America, for defraying the expences of defending, protecting and ſecuring, the ſame : We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal ſubjects, the commons of Great Britain, in parliament aſſembled, being deſirous to make ſome proviſion, in the preſent ſeſſion of parliament] towards raiſing the ſaid revenue in America, have reſolved to give and grant unto your Majeſty the ſeveral rates and duties herein after mentioned,” &c.

(a) For the ſatisfaction of the readers, recitals from former acts of parliament relating to theſe colonies are added. By comparing theſe with the modern acts, he will perceive their great difference in expreſſion and intention.

The 12th Charles II. chap. 18. which forms the foundation of the laws relating to our trade, by enacting that certain productions of the colonies ſhall be carried to England only, and that no goods ſhall be imported from the plantations but in ſhips belonging to England, Ireland, Wales, Berwick, or the Plantations, &c. begins thus, For the increaſe of ſhipping and encouragement of the navigation of this nation, wherein under the good providence and protection of GOD, the wealth, ſafety and ſtrength of this kingdom depends, is ſo much concerned, &c.

The 15th Charles II. chap, 7th, enforcing the ſame regulation, aſſigns theſe reaſons for it: "In regard his Majeſty's Plantations beyond the ſeas are inhabited and peopled by his ſubjects of this kingdom of England; for the maintaining a greater correſpondence and kindneſs between them, and keeping them in a firmer dependence upon it and renderding them yet more beneficial and advantageous unto it in the further employment & increaſe of the English ſhipping & ſeamen, vent of English woolen & other manufactures & commodities, rendering the navigation to and from the ſame more ſafe and cheap, and making this kingdom a ſtaple, not only of the commodities of thoſe plantations, but alſo of the commodities of other countries and places, for the ſupplying of them; and it being the uſage of other nations to keep their plantations trade to themſelves, &c.

The 25th Charles II. chap. 7th, made expreſly "for the better ſecuring the plantation trade," which impoſes duties on certain commodities exported from one colony to another, mentions this [illegible] for impoſing them, "Whereas by one act paſſed in the 12th year of your Majeſty's reign, entitled, An Act for the encouragement of ſhipping and navigation, and by ſeveral other laws paſſed ſince that time, it is permitted to ſhip, &c. ſugars, tobacco, &c. of the growth, &c. of any of your Majeſty's plantations in America, &c. from the places of their growth, &c. to any other of your Majeſty's plantations in thoſe parts, &c. and that without paying of cuſtoms for the ſame, either at the lading or unlading of the ſaid commodities, by means whereof the trade and navigation in thoſe commodities, from one plantation to another, is greatly increaſed: and the inhabitants of divers of thoſe colonies, not contenting themſelves with being ſupplied with thoſe commodities for their own uſe free from all cuſtoms (while the ſubjects of this your kingdom of England have paid great cuſtoms and impoſitions for what of them hath been ſpent here) but contrary to the expreſs letter of the aforeſaid laws, have brought into divers parts of Europe, great quantities thereof, and do alſo vend great quantities thereof to the ſhipping of other nations, who bring them into divers parts of Europe, to the great hurt and diminution of your Majeſty's cuſtoms, and of the trade and navigation of this your kingdom; for the prevention thereof," &c.

The 7th and 8th William III. chap 22, entitled "An act for preventing frauds, and regulating abuſes in the plantation trade," recites, that "Notwithſtanding divers acts, &c. great abuſes are daily committed, to the prejudice of the English navigation, and the loſs of great part of the plantation trade, to this kingdom, by the artifice and cunning of ill diſpoſed perſons; for remedy whereof, &c. And whereas in ſome of his Majeſty's American plantations, a doubt or miſconſtruction has ariſen upon the before mentioned acts made in the 25th year of the reign of king Charles II. whereby certain duties are laid upon the commodities therein enumerated (which by law may be tranſported from one plantation to another, for the ſupplying of each others wants) as if the ſame were by the payment of thoſe duties in one plantation diſcharged from giving the ſecurities intended by the aforeſaid acts made in the 12th, 22d and 23d years of the reign of king Charles II and conſequently be at liberty to go to any foreign market in Europe," &c.

The 6th Anne, chap. 37, reciting the "advancement of trade, &c. and encouragement of ſhips of war," &c. grants to the captors the property of all prizes carried into America, ſubject to ſuch cuſtoms and duties, &c. as if the ſame had been firſt imported into any part of Great Britain, and from thence exported, &c.

This was a gift to perſons acting under commiſſions from the crown, and therefore it was reaſonable that the terms preſcribed ſhould be complied with.—more eſpecially as the payment of ſuch duties was intended to give a preference to the productions of the British colonies over thoſe of other colonies. However, being found inconvenient to the colonies about 4 years afterwards, this act was, for that reaſon, ſo far repealed, that by another act "all prize goods imported into any part of Great Britain, from any of the plantations," were made liable "to ſuch duties only in Great Britain, as in caſe they had been of the growth and produce of the plantations," &c.

The 6th George II, chap. 13, which impoſes duties on foreign rum, ſugar and molaſſes, imported into the colonies, ſhews the reaſons thus,——"Whereas the welfare and proſperity of your Majeſty's ſugar colonies in America are of the greateſt importance to the trade, navigation and ſtrength of this kingdom, ; and whereas the planters of the ſaid ſugar colonies. have of late years fallen under ſuch great diſcouragements that they are unable to improve or carry on the ſugar trade upon an equal footing with the foreign ſugar colonies, without ſome advantage and relief be given to them from Great Britain: For remedy whereof, and for the good and welfare of your Majeſty's ſubjects, &c.

The 29th George II. chap. 26, and the 1ſt George III. chap. 9th, which contains the 6th George II. chap. 13th, declare, "That the ſaid act hath by experience been found uſeful and beneficial, &c.——

[These are all the moſt conſiderable ſtatutes relating to the commerce of the colonies; and it is thought to be utterly unneceſſary to add any obſervations to theſe extracts, to prove that they were all intended ſolely as regulations of trade.]

A few months after came the ſtamp act, which reciting this proceeds in the ſame ſtrange mode of expreſſion, thus——“ And whereas it is juſt and neceſſary, that proviſion be made for raiſing a further revenue within your Majeſty's dominions in America towards defraying the ſaid expences, we your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal ſubjects, the commons of Great Britain, &c. do give and grant,” &c. as before.

The laſt act granting duties upon paper &c. carefully purſues theſe modern precedents. The preamble is this : “ Whereas it is expedient that a revenue ſhould be raiſed in your Majeſty's dominions in America, for making a more certain and adequate proviſion for defraying the charge of adminiſtration of juſtice, and the ſupport of civil government, in ſuch provinces, where it ſhall be found neceſſary ; and towards the further defraying the expences of defending protecting and ſecuring the ſaid dominions, we your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal ſubjects the commons of Great Britain, &c. do give and grant, &c. as before.

Here we may obſerve an authority expreſly claimed to impoſe duties upon theſe colonies, not for the regulation of trade ; not for the reſervation or promotion of a mutually beneficial intercourſe between the ſeveral conſtituent parts of the empire, heretofore the ſole objects of parliamentary inſtitutions ; but for the ſingle purpoſe of levying money upon us.

This I call an innovation (b) ; and a moſt dangerous innovation. It may perhaps be objected, that Great Britain has a right to lay what duties ſhe pleaſes upon her exports (c), and it makes no difference to us, whether they are paid here or there. To this I anſwer——Theſe colonies require many things for their uſe, which the laws of G. Britain prohibit them from getting any where but from her. Such are paper and glaſs.

That we may legally be bound to pay any general duties on theſe commodities, relative to the regulation of trade, is granted ; but we being obliged by her laws to take them from Great Britain, any ſpecial duties impoſed on their exportation to us only with intention to raiſe a revenue from us only, are as much taxes upon us as thoſe impoſed by the ſtamp act.

What is the difference in ſubſtance and right, whether the ſame ſum is raiſed upon us by the rates mentioned in the ſtamp act, on the uſe of the paper, or by theſe duties on the importation of it ? It is nothing but the edition of a former book, with a new title page.

Suppoſe the duties were made payable in Great Britain ?

It ſignifies nothing to us whether they are to be paid here or there. Had the ſtamp act directed that all the paper ſhould be landed at Florida, and the duties paid there before it was brought to the Britiſh colonies would the act have raiſed leſs money upon us or have been leſs deſtructive of our rights ? By no means : For as we were under a neceſſity of uſing the paper, we ſhould have been under a neceſſity of paying the duties. Thus, in the preſent caſe, a like neceſſity will ſubject us, if this act continues in force, to the payment of the duties now impoſed.

Why was the ſtamp act ſo pernicious to freedom ? It did not enact that every man in the colonies ſhould buy a certain quantity of paper——No ! It only directed, that no inſtrument of writing ſhould be valid in law, if not made on ſtampt paper, &c.

The makers of that act knew full well, that the confuſions that would ariſe upon the diſuſe of writings would compel the colonies to uſe the ſtampt paper, and therefore to pay the taxes impoſed. For this reaſon the ſtamp act was ſaid to be a law that would execute itſelf. For the very ſame reaſon, the laſt act of parliament, if it is granted to have any force here, “ will execute itſelf,” and will be attended with the very ſame conſequences to American liberty.

Some perſons perhaps may ſay, this act lays us under no neceſſity to pay the duties impoſed, becauſe we may ourſelves manufacture the articles on which they are laid——whereas by the Stamp act no inſtrument of writing could be good, unleſs made on Britiſh paper, and that too ſtampt.

Such an objection amounts to no more than this ; that the injury reſulting to theſe colonies, from the total diſuſe of Britiſh paper and glaſs, will not be ſo afflicting as that which would have reſulted from the total diſuſe of writing among them ; for by that means even the Stamp act might have been eluded. Why then was it univerſally deteſted by them as ſlavery itſelf ? Becauſe it preſented to theſe devoted provinces nothing but a choice of calamities, each of which was unworthy of freemen to bear. But is no injury a violation of right but the greateſt injury ? If the eluding the payment of the duties impoſed by the Stamp act would have ſubjected us to a more dreadful inconvenience than the eluding the payment of thoſe impoſed by the late act, does it therefore follow that the laſt is no violation of our rights, though it is calculated for the ſame purpoſe the other was, that is, to raiſe money upon us without our conſent ?

This would be making right to conſiſt not in an exemption from injury, but from a certain degree of injury.

But the objectors may further ſay, that we ſhall ſuſtain no injury at all by the diſuſe of Britiſh paper and glaſs. We might not, if we could make as much as we want. But can any man, acquainted with America, believe this poſſible ? I am told there are but two or three glaſs houſes on this continent, and but very few paper mills ; and ſuppoſe more ſhould be erected, a long courſe of years muſt elapſe before they can be brought to perfection. This continent is a country of planters, farmers, and fiſhermen ; not of manufacturers. The difficulty of eſtabliſhing particular manufactures in ſuch a country are almoſt inſuperable. For one manufacture is connected with others in ſuch a manner, that it may be ſaid to be impoſſible to eſtabliſh one or two without eſtabliſhing ſeveral others. The experience of many nations may convince us of this truth.

Inexpreſſible therefore muſt be our diſtreſs in evading the late acts by the diſuſe of Britiſh paper and glaſs. Nor will this be the extent of our misfortune, if we admit the legality of that act.

Great Britain has prohibited the manufacturing iron and ſteel in theſe colonies ; without any objection being made to her right of doing it. The like right ſhe muſt have to prohibit any other manufacture among us. Thus ſhe is poſſeſſed of an undiſputed precedent on that point. This authority they will ſay is founded on the original intention of ſettling theſe colonies ; that is, that ſhe ſhould manufacture for them, and that they ſhould ſupply her with materials. The equity of this policy, ſhe will alſo ſay, has been univerſally acknowledged by the colonies, who never have made the leaſt objection to ſtatutes for that purpoſe, and will further appear by the mutual benefits flowing from this uſage, ever ſince the ſettlement of theſe colonies.

Our great advocate, Mr. Pitt, in his ſpeeches on the debates concerning the repeal of the Stamp act, acknowledged that Great Britain could reſtrain our manufactures. His words are theſe—“ This kingdom, as the ſupreme governing and legiſlative power has ALWAYS bound the colonies by her regulations and reſtrictions in trade, in navigation, in manufactures, in every thing except that of taking their money out of their pockets WITHOUT THEIR CONSENT.” Again, “ We may bind their trade, CONFINE their Manufactures, and exerciſe every Power whatſoever, except that of taking money out of their pockets WITHOUT their CONSENT.”

Here then let my countrymen rouſe themſelves, and behold the inevitable ruin hanging over their heads if they once admit that Great Britain may lay duties on her exportations to us, for the purpoſe of levying money on us only. She then will have nothing to do but to lay thoſe duties on the articles which ſhe prohibits us to manufacture, and the tragedy of American liberty is finiſhed. We have been prohibited from procuring manufactures, in all caſes, any where but from Great Britain (excepting linens which we are permitted to import directly from Ireland :) We have been prohibited, in ſome caſes, from manufacturing for ourſelves ; we are therefore exactly in the ſituation of a city beſieged, which is ſurrounded by the works of the beſiegers in every part but one. If that is cloſed up, no ſtep can be taken but to ſurrender at diſcretion. If Great Britain can order us to come to her for the neceſſaries we want, and can order us to pay what taxes ſhe pleaſes, before we take them away or when we have them here, we are as abject ſlaves as France and Poland can ſhew in wooden ſhoes and with uncombed hair. (d)

Perhaps the nature of the neceſſities of the dependent ſtates, cauſed by the policy of a governing one, for her own benefit, may be elucidated by a fact mentioned in hiſtory. When the Carthaginians were poſſeſſed of the iſland of Sardinia, they made a decree, that the Sardinians ſhould not get corn any other way than from the Carthaginians. Then by impoſing any duties they would, they drained from the miſerable Sardinians any ſums they pleaſed ; and whenever that oppreſſed people made the leaſt movement to aſſert their liberty, their tyrants ſtarved them to death or ſubmiſſion. This may be called the moſt perfect kind of political neceſſity.—

From what has been ſaid, I think, this uncontrovertible concluſion may be deduced——That when a ruling ſtate obliges a dependant ſtate to take certain commodities from her alone, it is implied in the nature of that obligation, and is eſſentially requiſite (to give it the leaſt degree of juſtice ; and is inſeparably united with it, in order to preſerve any ſhare of freedom to the dependant ſtate—That thoſe commodities ſhould never be loaded with duties for the ſole purpoſe of levying money on the dependant ſtate.

The place of paying the duties impoſed by the late act, appears to me therefore to be totally immaterial. The ſingle queſtion is whether the parliament can legally impoſe duties to be paid by the people of theſe colonies only, for the ſole purpoſe of raiſing a revenue, on commodities which ſhe obliges us to take from her alone ?———Or in other words, whether the parliament can legally take money out of our pockets without our conſent ?

If they can, our boaſted liberty is but

(b) “ It is worthy obſervation how quickly ſubſidies granted in forms uſual & accuſtomable (though heavy) are borne : ſuch a power hath uſe and cuſtom ; on the other ſide, what diſcontentment, and diſturbances ſubſidies framed in new moulds do raiſe (ſuch an inbred hatred novelty doth hatch) is evident by examples of former times.” Lord Coke's ſecond Inſtitute, p. 33.

(c) Some people whoſe minds ſeem incapable of uniting two ideas, think that Great Britain has the ſame right to impoſe duties on the exports to theſe colonies, as on thoſe to Spain and Portugal, &c.——Such perſons attend ſo much to the idea of exportation, that they entirely drop that of the connection between the mother country and her colonies.

If Great Britain had always claimed and exerciſed an authority to compel Spain and Portugal to import manufactures from her only, the caſes would be parallel : But as ſhe has never pretended to ſuch a right, they are at liberty to get them where they pleaſe : and if they chooſe to take them from her, rather than from other nations, they voluntarily conſent to pay the duties impoſed on them.

They write from Weſt Florida of the 29th paſt, that the whole number of Choctaws, that muſtered to go out againſt the Creeks was upwards of eight hundred, but they all returned without ſeeing the enemy, except the Red captain, one of our faſteſt friends in that nation ; he with a party of forty two men were ſet upon near the Cahaba river by the Creeks, who killed him, his ſon, & twenty four others. The Choctaws blame a white man, a trader, for betraying them to the Creeks : Letters from the country of the Creeks ſay, that they were a hundred in number, that they killed 30 out of 40 Choctaws, and brought one priſoner home, whom they burnt : They declare the Choctaws behaved with great bravery, for when they had fought till all their ammunition was expended, they ruſhed in among the thickeſt of their enemies knocking them down with their tomahawks, & the but ends of their muſkets. The Creeks own the loſs of twelve men, among whom were [illegible]alton, another good friend of ours his ſon, and the Oakfuskee king. The victors delivered the gorget, medal and commiſſion of the Red captain, who was a great medal chief, to Mr. Hewitt, a trader, in order to be tranſmitted to the commiſſary, or the ſuperintendant who appointed him.

IT gives me great pleaſure to hear of the Spirit of oeconomy that prevails in Boſton : A ſpirit extremely neceſſary to be cultivated at this important juncture. May it be cheriſhed with unfailing ſteadineſs and perſeverance! May its glowing ardor ſpread through, and cover this continent as the waters cover the ſea !

This is my hearty prayer ; and without the effectual application of ſome ſuch antidote, our preſent luxury muſt inevitably deſtroy us.”

On Monday the 14th we had here an Eaſterly Snow Storm but the wind not ſevere until late in the Evening, when it came about to the Weſtward, and blew exceeding hard all the Nigth, and very cold. No Damage that we hear of near this Place, excepting two veſſels drove aſhore, viz. Capt. Cobb from Quebec for this Port, at Duxbury ; and one outward bound for Philadelphia, on George's Iſland ; both likely to be got off.

From the ſouthward we hear, That the gales which followed the ſnow ſtorm on Monday the 14th, did conſiderable damage to the wharves and ſhipping at Newport, Stonnington, New-London, &c. The tides roſe higher than had been known for many years in thoſe places : Three veſſels lately ſailed from hence, one belonging to this place, the other two to Connecticut, all bound to that colony :——Raymond maſter of one of them, were drove high and dry upon Point Judith on Narraganſet, where it is probable they will remain until ſpring, no lives loſt, and their cargoes ſaved : Eleven ſail bound up the ſound were drove aſhore at Stonnington, one of them, Capt. Whitman, from Newport, on board of whom were William Burnet Brown, Eſq. and his ſiſter, who went from hence ſome time ſince, to take paſſage for Virginia : The people were ſav'd ; as alſo the baggage and Horſes of Mr. Brown.——Three veſſels were caſt away at a Place called Sachem's Head near Guilford ; one laden with 1500 Buſhels of Grain and a large Quantity of Flax Seed, bound from Connecticut to New York was entirely loſt, but the people ſaved. It is ſaid the wind, which was W S W was the moſt violent, ever known along that coaſt.

THE COURANT'S CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY.

From the Hartford Courant, Oct. 29, 1864.

A century has rolled away since the CONNECTICUT COURANT commenced its visits to the hills and valleys of this staid old State. On the 29th of October, 1764, a specimen number was published by Thomas Green "at the Heart and Crown, near the North Meeting House." The "Heart and Crown" was a tavern sign which swung in front of the site of the present Universalist Church, nearly opposite what is now known as the Centre church. The first regular issue of the CONNECTICUT COURANT, which has continued without interruption or change of name to the present time, bears date November 29th, 1764, and the paper was printed by Thomas Green until April 25th, 1768, when a card appears from Mr. Green, introducing Ebenezer Watson, as his partner. "Green & Watson, opposite the Court House," then becomes the colophon. Mr. Watson's name appears as sole publisher, Dec. 18th, 1770. The paper was then printed "near the Great Bridge," meaning what was called the "Little Bridge," after the bridge over the Connecticut river was erected, and is now known as the "Stone Bridge on Main street." In February, 1778, George Goodwin became interested, and the paper was published by Watson & Goodwin, until March 2d. 1779, when it appears under the name of Hudson & Goodwin, Mr. Watson having died, and Barzillai Hudson having married Mr. Watson's widow and assumed her interest. The paper continued to be printed by "Hudson & Goodwin near the Great Bridge," until November 21st, 1815, when George Goodwin & Sons appear as printers and publishers. It remained in the hands of the Goodwin family, until September 12th, 1836, when it passed into the hands of John L. Boswell, and was published by him until January 1st, 1850, when William Faxon was associated, and the paper appeared in the name of Boswell & Faxon, until the 1st of January, 1855, when it passed into the hands of Thomas M. Day, Mr. Boswell having died in the summer of 1854, and Mr. Day becoming the purchaser. It appeared in the sole name [illegible] A. N. Clark was taken in, and the paper appeared as at present, in the name of "Day & Clark." This gives us a continuous and uncontested title of One Hundred Years standing, to the name and good will of "THE CONNECTICUT COURANT."

That various changes have occurred since our first issue, in the condition of our community, our readers well know. In no way can we more graphically bring to our mind's eye the multifarious changes in almost everything, (except the course of nature,) than by conning over our early files. We trace the growth of that public sentiment from a point twelve years prior to the American Revolution, which in 1776 declared Independence. When the COURANT was started the utmost deference was paid in words to the English government, and "His Gracious Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects" were full of expressions which now grate harshly on an American ear of fealty to the British throne. As the time wore along, the "Loyal Sons of Liberty," whose doings are faithfully reported by their organ, the COURANT, toned up the public mind to the great issue which all sagacious men knew to be not far in the future, and when the war of Independence broke out, the COURANT was bold as the boldest in sustaining the American doctrine. That dreary and melancholy interval between the peace with Great Britain declared in 1783, and the practical operation of the new Constitution in 1789, is most vividly outlined in the old files of this journal; and the beneficent influence of Washington's first and second administrations, can be distinctly traced. The COURANT was a supporter of Washington and Adams, and an opponent of Jefferson and Madison; but in the early political conflicts, as well as in those of later date, it aimed to preserve its dignity and self-respect, and leave to others to whom the business was more congénial to deal in personal scurrilities and the religion of hate.

During the war of Independence, our publishers erected a paper mill in Hartford, and made the paper on which they printed, and numerous appeals and entreaties are to be found in our files to the good people of Connecticut COURANT were patriotic and courageous in opposing the tyranny of the ministers of George III., the Stamp Act, the Tea Tax, &c. Historians like Bancroft, Trumbull, Stuart, Hollister, and other writers and politicians have freely quoted and cited from the files of the COURANT. At the time when the acceptance or rejection of the Constitution of the United States was pending, the debate is fully reported, and such men as Oliver Ellsworth, Jeremiah Wadsworth, and Roger Sherman took part in it. No abler debate can be found.

We have not space in stirring political excitement like the present, to go into a sketch of what there is in the hundred volumes to which the issues of the COURANT have now attained. We have procured the reprinting on type and paper exactly like the original, of the specimen number which saw the light on the 29th of October, 1764, and intend to furnish all our subscribers and exchanges with a copy. We could think of no more permanent and appropriate compliment to our predecessors and token of our respect for the day of small things. So far as our best efforts can secure it, we hope to make the COURANT a permanent institution in Connecticut

Sure we are that much good has been done in the past, and that many a man and woman has received wholesome influences from the COURANT proper, as well as from the SUPPLEMENTS which have now accumulated to twenty-nine volumes, and are favorite reading in multitudes of families.

The life of the COURANT extends over the most eventful century in the history of man. Nowhere during the interval has the march of progress been so marvelous for diversity and richness of manifestation, as the field which its teachings helped to educate. At the time of its birth no inconsiderable portion of New England was inhabited by savages. A king reigned over her people. None of those obnoxious measures had yet been adopted which subsequently alienated the affections of the colonies, and robbed the British crown [illegible] The white settlement skirted the shores of the Atlantic, leaving the vast interior unmolested. With the exception of a few fortified trading posts, established for the purpose of traffic with the Indians, the area of civilization hardly extended a hundred miles from the coast in the most favored localities. Large sections of the seaboard were still held by the aborigines in undisputed possession. The fruitful valley of the Mississippi, now teeming with millions of population, intersected by railroads, and dotted thickly with thriving towns, was an unknown land.

The COURANT had reached its twelfth year before the first gun of the Revolution called a new nation into being. During the eight years of bloodshed, distress, and poverty that followed, it held on its even course without interruption for a single week. At the time when the adoption of the federal Constitution gave birth to the Union, the COURANT was older than a large majority of the papers now published in the United States. Its files chronicle the difficulties that beset the administration of Washington, and the wise measures that were adopted to remedy them. One administration succeeded another; political parties rose and fell; religious intolerance gave way slowly to healthy freedom; heroes passed from earth; great debates, where giant intellects in mighty but peaceful conflict settled the policy of the Republic, occurred; wars and rumors of war waked the martial spirit, and put the strength of the nation to test—all these and countless other changes the COURANT has lived to record. It is, dear reader, one of the oldest institutions on the continent.

The COURANT has been enlarged at intervals till it now exceeds five times the size of the original, and the SUPPLEMENT is more than twice its size. It has always been self-supporting. The public calamities and financial panics which have swept many similar enterprises out of existence, have left the COURANT unscathed. We would say, in no spirit of boastfulness, but as a source of gratificatian to our many friends, that its circulation and advertising patronage were never before so large as now, or its prospects more

Whenever you have a few columns that want filling in your entertaining Chronicle, if the following Narrative is thought worthy a place in it, you may (if you pleaſe) pre- to your readers.——

A TRAVELLER.

IN the beginning of April laſt, being adviſed by my friends, for the benefit of my ealth, to try the ſea air, and change of cli- ate, I embarked from this port for Rhode- land, where I was agreeably ſurpriſed in eeting my old ſchool mate, capt. Joſeph oxfield, of the ſloop Peggy, belonging to iſbon, for which port he was to ſail in a w days, and finding I was in purſuit of ealth, he preſſed me to become his paſſen- er, to which I readily conſented——We ailed the middle of the month, with a fair ind, and ran the length of the Weſtern I- lands in about twenty days, when, to our reat aſtoniſhment the ſhip ſprung a leak, hich gained on us ſo faſt that we expected few hours would conſign us to the boſom f the deep all our endeavours to ſtop it be- g fruitleſs. Terror and amazement over- read every countenance, and nothing was en but wild confuſion; ſome bemoaning fond wife and children, others a beloved iſtreſs, and all in the utmoſt agony of deſ- ir; one honeſt fellow indeed, forced a ile from me in ſpite of the horror of our uation, "Ah, Nell, (ſays he) that luteſtring ſack I promiſed thee, muſt be bent on the by ſome more happy dog?" I beſo't m to turn his thot's to the ſcene before him d was going on with a little ſerious advice hen he ſprung from the deck and cried, She ſhall have it, ſhe ſhall have it!" A ſail! ail! We all eagerly ran to the bow, and ſcovered a large ſhip ſtanding right for us! ver was a more ſudden tranſition from ief to joy; the moſt frantic ſoul, immured Bedlam, could not out do our honeſt tars this occaſion they ran, they jumped, hug- d each other, laughed, cried, hallowed & nced inceſſantly; for in vain did the cap- n endeavour to reſtore order, and it was th ſome difficulty he prevailed on any of em to fetch up the colours and a muſket make ſignals of diſtreſs, ſo totally for a ile, were they deprived of their ſenſes; length ſhe came up with us, and proved to the Nero, capt. Handel, of Liverpool, und for the coaſt of Guinea; they ſent eir boat on board, which, with our own ok us all in, with ſeveral of our cloaths d valuables, and ſcarce had we got on ard, before the ſhip went down, and poor oxfield, with tears in his eyes, as her hull appeared, cried, "Adieu, poor Peggy, a tter boat ne'er bore a maſt!" which Capt. andel hearing, replied, aye brother, the areſt friends muſt part, but let us forget row, and rejoice that we are all ſafe with good ſhip under foot; boy bring up ſome ne, and make the poor fellows a can of good flip—In ſhort, in a few hours we got well ſettled in our new habitation, and the diſappointment of undertaking a voyage to Africa, inſtead of Liſbon, inſenſibly wore off, to which the genteel behaviour of Capt. Handel's brother, who was ſurgeon on board, greatly contributed.——We had moſt favourable winds, and by the firſt of June had run down our latitude, when we ſteared an eaſterly courſe along the coaſt for eight days and Capt. Handel ſuppoſing he had ran the length of Cape Three points, we ſtood in for the land, though for the laſt two days we had no obſervation; he expected to make the land next day and ordered them to ſteer a north courſe. I went to bed with a joyful heart, hoping in the morning to ſet my foot on terra firma; and in pleaſing dreams I had paſſed the fore part of the night, when I was ſuddenly waked by a violent ſhock of the ſhip, which was ſucceeded by a general cry from above, we have ſtruck, we have ſtruck!" We all flew upon deck, and helm was immediately clapped hard down, but before we got about, ſhe ſtruck a ſecond time with ſuch violence that we concluded her bottom was beat through, for the wind blew very freſh, with a large ſea; hear we ſtruck, and the waves daſhed over us with amaſing force: we now loſt all hopes of getting clear and waited with impatient horror for the appearance of day. Here again I experienced the diſmal pangs of approaching diſſolution; in vain I lamented leaving theſe happy ſhores! In vain did I regret my too eaſy compliance with my old ſchoolmate's requeſt; to be ſwallowed up by the mercileſs wave, or caſt a lifeleſs trunk on a Barbarous ſhore, without the common funeral rites, were to me equally ſhocking. At length the day dawned, and diſcovered a ſight that would have ſhaken the moſt intrepid heart—the ſhip was wedged in between two rocks, and ſurrounded on all ſides by moſt dreadful breakers. We found the tide was going out when ſhe ſtruck, but was now returning; and the captain judging that ſhe would move on the water's riſing, ordered both the boats over the ſide, and all hands to enter, which they all immediately did, except myſelf, for I determined to ſtay by the veſſel, thinking it impoſſible for the boats to live in ſo great a ſwell, till they reached the ſhore; which was about four leagues diſtant. They intreated me with the utmoſt earneſtneſs, to quit the ſhip, aſſuring me ſhe would beat to pieces in a few hours; I thanked them for their anxiety, but perſiſted in my reſolution of keeping the ſhip; at length perceiving I was determined, poor Roxfield, jumped on the deck, and declared he would ſhare my fate; I beſought him to leave me, as I perceived he was actuated by friendſhip only and not by judgment; but I could not prevail on him to return to the boat.—So ſtrongly had our former intimacy attached him to me. The Captain judging it unſafe to wait longer leſt they ſhould not have tide enough to reach the ſhore, ordered the boats to be launched into the ſea, and we took a ſolemn leave of each other. I watched them with an anxious eye, expecting the breaking of every wave would put a period to their hopes, and plunge them to the bottom; now they were toſſed upon the frothy ſummit of a watery mountain, and then in an inſtant hurled down its ſide to the liquid vale below. Thus alternate mounting to the clouds and ſinking to the centure, did our poor adventurous companions increaſe their diſtance from us, till at length the long-boat ſtruck on a breaker, and in an inſtant ſet every ſoul afloat; in vain did the yaul attempt to ſave them, for the next wave toſſed her bottom up, and the crews of both to the number of five and thirty, ſoon diſappeared. But our own danger ſoon took off our attention, for the tide had now riſen ſo high, that Captain Roxfield aſſured me ſhe would in leſs than two hours, drive from her ſtation, and beat to pieces among the breakers; he therefore propoſed an expedient for our preſervation, well worthy of the notice of all ſeafaring men—There were two large iron bound water caſks laſhed to the rails, on the quarter deck, theſe he ſtarted and with a compaſs ſaw, cut a hole round the bung large enough for a man to enter, and making two canvas bags, open at each end, he nailed them round the holes of the caſks; he then got ſome pig iron from the veſſels run, and put about ſix hundred weight in each caſk, and on theſe ſtuffed in ſome beds and bedding, (as well to make an eaſy ſeat, as to ſtow away two bottles of rum and a dozen of water, with ſome biſcuit & cheeſe, in each of the caſks; he then took the blades of ſome oars left on board, and made four paddles, which he nailed with a rope near the hole.——We then brought up ſuch of our papers, and other valuables, as we were deſirous of ſaving, and ſtowing them away, got into the bag, which we tied tight round our waiſts, and with each of us a knife in our hand to cut looſe the laſhing when the ſhip ſhould ſink, we waited with a degree of confidence far beyond what I could have conceived; for Roxfield aſſured me the caſks would neither overſet nor ſink, whilſt the water kept out. We agreed to keep as near each other as poſſible, tho' we much doubted our being able to ſteer our bluff-bow'd barks, and had not been long in our cloſe quarters, before the ſhip launched from her ſtation, and in a few minutes the main deck was under water; indeed we had ſcarce time to cut the ropes, before ſhe ſunk under us, and to our great joy we both floated clear of the rigging, and mounted the next wave with amazing rapidity. If ever you have ſeen what the ſailors call Mother Cary's chickens, dancing on the waves, you may form a tolerable idea of our ſituation (except that our hearts were in a much greater flutter than thoſe feather'd mariners;) for near an hour I expected every ſea would overſet me, but ſo well ballaſted was my little bark that I always kept a perpendicular ſtation, at length my ſpirits began to revive, and I flatered myſelf that the flood and wind would carry us near enough the ſhore to be ſeen by ſome of the inhabitants if any there were.—Before the day cloſed, we had got four large ſeas between us; we waved our hands to each other, as long as we could ſee, & then commenced the moſt tedious horrid night I ever knew. Beſet with every diſmal idea that could enter into the head of ſuch a poor floating wretch, my very ſoul was racked with agony, and I ſhudder at the recollection. At laſt the glimmering of long wiſhed for day appeared, but never did I experience ſo ſlow a riſing ſun. I gazed around for my companion and the ſhore, but could ſee neither, for the flood being almoſt over when we quitted the ſhip, the ebb had carried me out to ſea; I ſtill ſearched with wandering eye for my friend, but all in vain, and I fear we then ſeperated never to meet again. I now began to want ſome refreſhment; and untying my bag for a moment, I took out ſome biſcuit and cheeſe, on which I made a hearty meal, and drank ſome rum and water. The wind beind conſiderably abated, and the ſea much fallen, I laid my head on my arm, & ſoon dropped aſleep, being much fatigued. In this poſture I lay ſeveral hours, and when I waked, the ſea was perfectly calm, but as the ſun was hid by the clouds, I could not tell which way the land lay, and therefore made no uſe of my oars; but as you may readily ſuppoſe, little variety could happen to one whoſe ſphere of action was ſo limited, I ſhall not trouble you with any more particulars——ſuffice it that I ſaw the ſun ſeven times riſe and ſet, and on the 8th day in the morning being aſleep as uſual, reclining on my arms, I was ſuddenly awaked with the ſound of human voices; I ſtarted up, and found I was ſurrounded by four canoes, full of naked negroes, who by their geſtures and behaviour, appeared to be fearful of approaching nearer; I beckoned to them to come up, and to convince them that I was a man and not a monſter, I untied my bag and ſtood upright; they then paddled up to me, and made ſigns for me to come out, which I accordingly did—I found they had been fiſhing, & that we were about a league and a half from the land——I enquired in the beſt manner I could, by ſigns, for my Friend, but could gain no intelligence of him they then faſtened two of their canoes to the butt, and in about three hours we reached the ſhore, to my great and inexpreſſable joy. The ſhore was ſoon thronged with the remainder of the inhabitants of the little village to which the fiſhermen belonged; amongſt them came an elderly negro, whom by a few trinkets that hung to his ears and round his neck, I ſuppoſed to be the head man of the place; he beckoned me to follow him to his cabbin, which was built of ſplit cane, and larger than the reſt which were about ten in number; I found flowers ſtrewed round the door, and under the trees, and by the great apearance of victuals, I conjectured it was ſome grand feſtival. The old man perceiving my attention to every thing around, called two likely young negro men, and two girls, who were adorned with various kinds of flowers and baubles, and joining their hands, thereby informed me they were going to be married, and the two girls were his daughters—— They paſſed the day in great mirth and good humour, but with the utmoſt decency and decorum; in ſhort they ſeemed to be ſome of the happieſt creatures on earth; and what was extremely remarkable, I did not diſcover any of their liquors to incline to intoxication; I heartily wiſhed for an interpreter, as there ſeemed much wit banded about amongſt them. At ſun-ſet a grave old negro ſtood up, with a white wand in his hand, and waveing it in the air a general ſilence enſued, & the four young folks fell down on their knees in a circle taking hold of each others hands whilſt the old fellow pronounced a long oration, making ſundry pauſes, at each of which the couples cried out, Fanda Cambos, which I interpreted as an eſſent to what he ſaid. The ceremony being over, the company joined in a circular dance, with the married couples in the middle.

I ſat at ſome diſtance, with the old man, who viewed his girls with that extacy of delight which poſſeſſes the heart of every fond parent on the proſpect of their children's happineſs; his old eyes ſparkled with joy, and, pointing to the heavens, made me underſtand he could now yield his life with pleaſure. But mark the uncertainty of human happineſs! the dancers were proceeding with the young pairs, to the cabbin, when, in an inſtant they were ſurrounded by a number of armed Negroes, who bound the whole company me among the reſt, and hurried us with great expedition into the woods; they marched us all night, and next morning, we reached an Engliſh fort, where we found the Captain of a Guineaman waiting our arrival; they unbound me immediately, and after aſking a few queſtions the Captain who was in a hurry to ſail, having nearly completed his cargo, ſtruck up a bargain, with the raſcally plunderers, for the poor wretches my companions, except the poor old man, whom he refuſed to take; in vain did he beg to ſhare the fortunes of his children and friends, the Captain kicked him away and ordered the reſt on board. Finding the ſhip was bound for Barbadoes, and being deſirous of returning home, I took my paſſage with him and having [illegible] a few piſtoles I purchaſed the old Negro at his own requeſt, and put him on board as freight, intending, on my arrival at Barbadoes, to pay the price of the young couples, and ſet them at liberty. The next day we ſailed with three hundred ſlaves on board, who were all confined below, my old fellow among the reſt, for the Captain would not ſuffer a ſoul on deck for ſeveral days, deſigning as he ſaid to lower their ſpirits by a good ſweating. A week paſſed very quietly when the Captain ordered the mate to go down and bring up twenty, ſaying "He would make the devils dance for their healths,"————but no ſooner was the hatch unbarred than a number of them, who had got off their irons, ruſhed upon the deck, and attacked the crew; but the ſailors being armed with piſtols and cutlaſſes, preſently overcame them; but not before 13 of the poor enſlaved wretches had plunged into the ſea, amongſt whom were my old man, and his daughters, the two young fellows, their unhappy huſbands, were ſhot dead on the deck with five others. Horrid as this ſcene was, the Captain felt no other concern than what aroſe from the loſs of ſo many freights; he ordered the carcaſes to be tumbled overboard, and ſwore not a ſoul ſhould ſee the ſun till they arrived at Barbados. Their cloſe confinement ſoon produced a peſtilential fever, and by the time we arrived at Barbados, we buried upwards of one hundred and ſeventy of the ſlaves, & eight of the crew. I ſtaid but a few days in the iſland, though long enough to ſee the barbarities inflicted on the poor ſlaves by their mercileſs owners; I got a paſſage to Rhode-Iſland, from whence I came here, by land, the latter end of October, in company with ſeveral gentlemen of that place. But the diſtreſſes of theſe poor enſlaved wretches has fixed ſuch a melancholly on my mind, that the pleaſures which generally attend the meeting of long abſent friends, are totally baniſhed from my breaſt; my thoughts by day and my dreams by night, are totally employed on the gloomy ſubject, and I am really amazed, that men, who pretend to be chriſtians, who pretend to be Britons, ſhould ſo far deviate from the laws of religion and liberty, as to treat their fellow creatures like the beaſts of the field! My heart ſwells with the theme, and prompts me to proceed; but I find I have already exceeded the bounds of your paper; I ſhall therefore leave the ſubject for ſome future eſſay, and end with this reflection,

The wretch who dares man's ſacred rights infringe,
And make him ſlave, would not, from honeſty
Refrain my purſe, or virtue ſpare my life,
If int'reſt, helliſh int'reſt gave the word.

P.S. If my friend Roxfield ſhould be alive and ſhould chance to meet with this paper he will give me infinite pleaſure to inform me of it. I need not be particular, he will know how to direct.

The ſame day Mr. Buckly, one of our Pilots, in attempting to jump on board his Boat, from a Brig he was carrying out, fell overboard in the Narrows, and notwithſtanding he could ſwim well, and was but a few Minutes in the Water, he was inſenſible when taken up, with the extreme Cold, and expired immediately.

Mr. PRINTER,

A HYMN, compoſed on Chriſtmas-Day, 1767.

WHILE worſhippers in Pagan lands,
Adore the works of their own hands,
Unmeaning Oracles purſue,
And tenets ſtupid and untrue.

While eaſtern powers blindly ſubmit,
To falſe Mahomet's vile deceit;
The ſenſeleſs alcoran explore,
And wild abſurdities adore.

Whilſt unbelieving, ſtubborn Jews,
CHRIST's name and miſſion ſtill abuſe;
Still waiting for a future King,
Who ſhall ſalvation's tidings bring.

CHRISTIANS rejoice to celebrate
The glorious, joyful, happy date
Of your divine Redeemer's birth,
The day which brought our GOD to earth.

When the whole world was overſpread
By darkneſs, like the grave's cold ſhade;
When wretched Gentiles long had been
Deep plung'd in folly, woe and ſin.

The Savior of the world appear'd,
The banner of his love he rear'd,
Diſpel'd the clouds of Gentile night,
Gave us eternal, ſaving light.

* CHRISTIAN, ariſe! with luſtre ſhine;
Thy light is come, ſalvation's thine;
On thee the glory of the Lord,
Shines in his everlaſting word.

Rejoice, ye nations, ſing for joy,
In thanks your hearts and tongues employ;
And may our Savior's love and grace,
Produce in us ſtrict holineſs!

One Joſiah Preſcott of Deerfield, in the South-weſt Part of Nottingham, being out a hunting on the 26th of November laſt, about three Miles from his houſe, he eſpied a MOOSE, at about 100 yards diſtance, he immediately fired at her, and ſhot her down dead; upon that there aroſe up two more at a little farther diſtance; he immediately charged his gun, and ſhot down the ſecond; and while the other was ſmelling of of his mate, he charged again & ſhot down the third; and while he was charging his gun, a fourth came up towards the others, and he ſhot her down likewiſe: two of them were old ones, the other two young ones. One of the old ones was ten feet high and ten feet long; the other eight feet high and ten feet long; the other two were about ſix feet high and eight feet long. After this extraordinary exploit was over, he was joined by a partner, who being at a little diſtance, heard the guns, came up to his aſſiſtance; and in going home he got help to dreſs the Mooſes: A wild Cat they alſo killed on their return.—This is fact.

To the PRINTER.

SIR,

THOUGH I am a Tradeſman, and depend upon my daily Labour for the Support of myſelf and Family, yet I commonly read your Paper; and my Neighbours and I have been more amuſed and inſtructed by the uſeful Pieces in it than with the Articles about the Poles or Corſicans: But I cannot help obſerving that you have lately had fewer Pieces than formerly on our diſtreſſed Situation.—Are our Circumſtances altered? is Money grown more plenty? Have our Tradeſmen full Employment? Are we more frugal? Is Grain cheaper? Are our Importations leſs?—not to mention the Play-Houſe and Equipages, which it is hoped none but People of Fortune frequent and uſe.——I am afraid every one of theſe Queries are againſt us; and yet of theſe we ſeem to take no Thought, tho' our Neighbours at Boſton made ſuch a Stir about them! Our News-Papers ſay, their Select Men were to write to our Corporation on this Head; If they have, we are ſurprized that it has never been communicated to the Citizens, as an Addreſs from ſuch a reſpectable People, might have animated us with a Spirit of Induſtry and Frugality.——About three Years ago a Society ſprung up among us, which promiſed much, and indeed was encouraged by all the moſt eminent and beſt Friends to their Country; and you can ſcarce believe how it cheer'd us in our Diſtreſs; but alas! its youthful Vigor is over, and many have relaxed or broke thro' ſome of the Rules of its Inſtitution. Yet we muſt acknowledge that it has done ſignal Service among us; by introducing not only Spinning, Weaving, and raiſing Flax, but encouraged many other uſeful Manufactories, and Growths among us. Notwithſtanding their Endeavours, what a diſmal Proſpect is before us! a long Winter, and no Work; many unprovided with Fire-wood, or Money to buy it; Houſe-Rent and Taxes high; our Neigbours daily breaking, their Furniture at Vendue in every Corner. Surely it is high Time for the middling People to abſtain from every Superfluity in Dreſs, Furniture and Living: And I will venture to ſay, they will be as well eſteemed by their Neighbours,—for at preſent they are only envied and talked of and if unfortunate, ſeverely reflected on; mere Conveniencies will give the moſt laſting Satisfaction, Show and Finery will ſoon or late give Pain. If by good Management we can ſave a little, how loudly will the Diſtreſes of our Neighbours call for it? Some former able Houſe-keepers ſtarving, yet aſhamed to beg, ſome Families ſtarving for Want of Work; ſome dragged to Goal, whoſe Miſeries are heightened by leaving a tender Wife and Family to ſtarve! The Mention of theſe, raiſes every tender Emotion in the human Breaſt: How muſt we feel, that too frequently ſee them?

With ſincere good Wiſhes, for the Proſperiety of my Countrymen,

I am your Friend and Reader,

LETTER III.

Beloved Countrymen,

I Rejoice to find that my two former letters to you have been generally received with ſo much favour by ſuch of you whoſe ſentiments I have had an opportunity of knowing. Could you look into my heart, you would inſtantly percieve an ardent affection for your perſons, a zealous attachment to your intereſts, a lively reſentment to every inſult and injury offered to your honour or happineſs; and an inflexible reſolution to aſſert your rights, to the utmoſt of my weak power, to be the only motives that have engaged me to addreſs you.

I am no farther concerned in any thing affecting America, than any one of you, and when liberty leaves it, I can quit it much more conveniently than moſt of you. But while Divine Providence that gave me exiſtance in a land of freedom, permits my head to think, my lips to ſpeak, and my hand to move, I ſhall ſo highly and greatfully value the bleſſing received, as to take care that my ſilence and inactivity ſhall not give my implied aſſent to any act, degrading my brethren and myſelf from the birthright, wherewith Heaven itſelf "hath made us free. (a)

Sorry I am to learn, that there are ſome few perſons, who ſhake their heads with ſolemn motion, and pretend to wonder, what can be the meaning of theſe letters. "Great Britain," they ſay, "is too powerful to contend with; ſhe is determined to oppreſs us; it is in vain to ſpeak of right on one ſide, when there is power on the other; when we are ſtrong enough to reſiſt, we ſhall attempt it; but now we are not ſtrong enough, and therefore we had better be quiet; it ſignifies nothing to convince us that our rights are invaded, when we cannot defend them; and if we ſhould get into riots and tumults about the late act, it will only draw down heavier diſpleaſure upon us."

What can ſuch men deſign? What do their grave obſervations amount to but this—"That theſe colonies totally regardleſs of their liberties, ſhould commit them with humble reſignation to chance, time, and the tender mercies of miniſters."

Are theſe men ignorant that uſurpations which might have been ſucceſsfully oppoſed at firſt, acquire ſtrength by continuance, and thus become irreſiſtable? do they condemn the conduct of the colonies concerning the Stamp-Act? Or have they forgot its ſucceſsful iſſue? Ought the colonies at that time, inſtead of acting as they did, to have truſted for relief to the fortuitous events of futurity? If it is needleſs "to ſpeak of rights" now, it was as needleſs then. If the behaviour of the colonies was prudent and glorious then, and ſucceſsful too; it will be equally prudent and glorious to act in the ſame manner now, if our rights are equally invaded, and may be as ſucceſsful.—Therefore it becomes neceſſary to enquire, whether "our rights are invaded." To talk of "defending" them, as if they could be no otherwiſe "defended" than by arms, is as much out of the way, as if a man having a choice of ſeveral roads, to reach his journey and ſhould prefer the worſt, for no other reaſon but becauſe it is the worſt.

As to "riots and tumults," the getlemen who are ſo apprehenſive of them, are much miſtaken if they think, that grievances cannot be redreſſed without ſuch aſſiſtance.

I will now tell the gentlemen what is "the meaning of theſe letters." The meaning of them is, to convince the people of theſe colonies that they are, at this moment expoſed to the moſt imminent dangers; and to perſuade them immediately, vigorouſly, unanimouſly to exert themſelves in the moſt firm, and moſt peaceable manner for obtaining relief.

The cauſe of liberty is a "cauſe of two much dignity to be ſullied by turbulence & tumults." It ought to be maintained in a manner ſuitable to her nature. Thoſe who engage in it ſhould breath a ſedate yet fervent ſpirit, animating them to actions of prudence juſtice, modeſty, bravery, humanity & magnanimity.

To ſuch a wonderful degree were the antient Spartans, as brave and free a people as ever exiſted, inſpired by this happy temperature of ſoul, that rejecting even in their battles the uſe of trumpets, and other inſtruments for exciting heat and rage, they marched up to ſcenes of havock & horror, with the ſound of flutes, to the tunes of which their ſteps kept pace—"exhibiting," as Plutarch ſays, "at once a terible and delightful ſight, and "proceeding, with a deliberate valour, full "of hope and good aſſurance, as if ſome divinity had ſenſibly aſſiſted them."

I hope, my dear countrymen, that you will in every colony be upon your guard againſt thoſe who may at any time endeavour to ſtir you up under pretences of patriotiſm to any meaſures diſreſpectful to our ſovereign and our mother country. Hot, raſh diſorderly proceedings injure the reputation of a people as to wiſdom, valour, and virtue, without procuring them the leaſt benefit. I pray GOD that he may be pleaſed to inſpire you and your poſterity to the lateſt ages with that ſpirit, of which I have an idea, but find a difficulty to expreſs in the beſt manner I can, I mean a ſpirit that ſhall ſo guide you, that it will be impoſſible to determine, whether an American's character is moſt diſtinguiſhable for his loyalty to his ſovereign, his duty to his mother country, his love of freedom, or his affection for his native ſoil.

Every government, at ſome time or other, falls into wrong meaſures; theſe may proceed from miſtake or paſſion. But every ſuch meaſure does not diſſolve the obligation between the governours and the governed; the miſtake may be corrected; the paſſion may paſs over. It is the duty of the governed, to endeavour to rectify the miſtake, and to appeaſe the paſſion.——————They have not at firſt any other right, than to rectify their grievances, and to pray for redreſs, unleſs imergence is ſo preſſing as not to allow time for receiving an anſwer to their applications, which rarely happens. If their applications are diſregarded, then that kind of oppoſition becomes juſtifiable, which can be made without breaking the laws, or diſturbing the public peace. This conſiſts in the prevention of the oppreſſors reaping advantage from their oppreſſions, and not in their puniſhment. For experience may teach them what reaſon did not; and harſh methods cannot be proper till milder ones have failed.

If at length it becomes UNDOUBTED, that an inveterate reſolution is formed to annihilate the liberties of the governed, the Engliſh hiſtory affords frequent examples of reſiſtance by force. What particular circumſtances will in any future caſe juſtify ſuch reſiſtance, can never be aſcertained till they happen. Perhaps it may be allowable to ſay generally, that it never can be juſtifiable, until the people are fully convinced, that any further ſubmiſſion will be deſtructive to their happineſs.

When the appeal is made to the ſword, highly probable is it, that the puniſhment will exceed the offence; and the calamities attending on war outweigh thoſe preceeding it. Theſe conſiderations of juſtice and prudence will always have great influence with good and wiſe men.

To theſe reflections on this ſubject, it remains to be added, and ought forever to be remembered; that reſiſtance in the caſe of colonies againſt their mother country, is extremely different from the reſiſtance of a people againſt their prince. A nation may change their king, or race of kings, and retaining their antient form of government, be gainers by changing. Thus Great Britain, under the illuſtrious houſe of Brunſwick, a race that ſeems to flouriſh for the happineſs of mankind, has found a felicity unknown in the reigns of the Stuarts. But if once we are ſeparated from our mother country, what new form of government ſhall we adopt, or where ſhall we find another Britain to ſupply our loſs? Torn from the body to which we are united by religion, liberty, laws, affections, relations, language, & commerce, we muſt bleed at every vein.

In truth, the proſperity of theſe provinces is founded in their dependance on Great Britain; and when ſhe returns to "her old good humour, & old good nature," as Lord Clarendon expreſſes it, I hope they will always eſteem it their duty and intereſt, as it moſt certainly will be to promote her welfare by all means in their power.

We cannot act with too much caution in our diſputes. Anger produces anger; and differences that might be accommodated by kind and reſpectful behaviour, may by imprudence be enlarged to an incurable rage.

In quarrels between countries, as well as in thoſe between individuals, when they have riſen to a certain height, the firſt cauſe of diſſention is no longer remembered, the minds of the parties being wholly engaged in recollecting and reſenting the mutual expreſſions of their diſlike. When feuds have reached the fatal point, all conſiderations of reaſon and equity vaniſh; and a blind fury governs, or rather confounds all things. A people no longer regards their intereſt, but the gratification of their wrath. The ſway of the Cleons, (b) and Clodius's, the deſigning and deteſtable flatterers of the prevailing paſſion, becomes confirmed. Wiſe and good men in vain oppoſe the ſtorm, and may think themſelves fortunate, if endeavouring to preſerve their ungrateful fellow citizens, they do not ruin themſelves. Their prudence will be called baſeneſs; their moderation, guilt; and if their virtue does not lead them to deſtruction, as that of many great and excellent perſons has done, they may ſurvive to receive from their expiring country, the mournful glory of her acknowledgement, that their councils, if regarded, would have ſaved her.

The conſtitutional modes af obtaining relief, are thoſe which I would wiſh to ſee purſued on the preſent occaſion; that is, by petitions of our aſſemblies, or, where they are not permitted to meet, of the people, to the powers that can afford us relief.

We have an excellent prince, in whoſe good diſpoſitions towards us we may confide. We have a generous ſenſible and humane nation, to whom we may apply. They may be deceived. They may, by artful men be provoked to anger againſt us; but I cannot yet blieve they will be cruel or unjuſt, or that their anger will be implacable. Let us behave like dutiful children, who have received unmerited blows from a beloved parent. Let us complain to our parents; but let our complaints ſpeak, at the ſame time the language of affliction and veneration.

If, however it ſhall happen by an unfortunate courſe of affairs, that our applications to his Majeſty and the parliament for redreſs prove ineffectual, let us then take another ſtep, by withholding from Great Britain, all the advantages ſhe has been uſed to recieve from us. Then let us try, if our ingenuity induſtry and frugality, will not give weight to our remonſtrance. Let us all be united with one ſpirit in one cauſe. Let us invent let us work; let us ſave; let us, at the ſame time, keep up our claims, and unceaſingly repeat our complaints; but above all, let us implore the protection of that infinitely good and gracious Being, "by whom kings reign and princes decree juſtice."

From the CONNECTICUT JOURNAL.

To the Inhabitants of the COLONY of CONNECTICUT.

Gentlemen,

MY Situation in Life gives me but little Opportunity to be acquained with Politicks; and have had little Converſation with the great; ſo that nothing could excite me to write for publicViews, except the ſuffering Cauſe of Liberty. And though I fill no conſpicious Station, yet I truſt true Engliſh Blood flows in my Veins, and have ſuch a reliſh for Engliſh Liberty—that glorious Liberty, which our worthy Anceſtors ſuffered the loſs of almoſt every Thing elſe to enjoy; as makes my Blood boil, and fills me with keen Reſentment, at every Deſign againſt it. I beheld with Joy the glorious Spirit of Liberty, which animated the Breaſts of myCountrymen, when threatened with loſs of Liberty by the deteſtable S—p A—. You then behaved with Spirit and by it won immortal Honor—Honor never to be forgotten whilſt Liberty is dear America. When this enſlaving Act was repealed, how did every Heart ſwell with Joy, in hopes that now our Liberty would be cotinued inviolate to the lateſt Poſterity? But alas! how ſoon is our Joy turned into mourning? If it be true as the public Papers inform me, (on which I depend chiefly for Intelligence in my private Situation) that heavy Duties are laid on our Imports, for the purpoſe of Revenue. Is this the caſe, how much better is ourState that when labouring under the threatning S——p A—? The Tax, 'tis true, is lighter, and guilded with the Name of anExternal Tax, to make it more palatable to incautious Minds. But is not liberty juſt as much endanger'd? Are not the eſſential Rights of Engliſhmen deſtroyed in this Caſe, as well as the other? Are we now tax'd by our own Conſent? Have our Repreſentatives anyHand in it? And as to the Diſtinction of External and Internal, what is the Difference, whether we are fleeced of our Money Externally or Internally, ſo be 'tis in a Way inconſiſtent withLiberty? I muſt confeſs I can't ſee where the Preference lies.——

Of theſe unconſtitutionalDuties, ourNeighbours of BOSTON, I find, entertain a due Reſentment; and like true ſons of Liberty, boldly ſtand up in defence of it, in a Way which even Malice itſelf cannot object to; i. e. by ſtopping all unneceſſary Imports, and leſſening vaſtly the neceſſary ones by encourageing our own Manufactures. This beneficial Method, if univerſally come into, would ſave our Money, and reſtore to us, once more a Medium of Trade. It will certainly ſo far prevent the Payment of the Duties, as we refrain from importing thoſe Articles, on which the Duties are laid. And it will doubtleſs have the happieſt Tendency of any Thing, to make Great-Britain ſenſible, that her Intereſt is connected with the Liberty & Freedom of the Colonies. This Method has once been found ſucceſsful, why then ſhould we be backward to try it again? There is certainly no Treaſon in it. It can't be Treaſon to wear our own Manufactures, when we can't procure Money to buy thoſe of Great Britain: Nor can it be Treaſon to buy no more of theirs, than we are able to pay for or even if we ſhould lay up a few pence in our Pockets ſo long as we obtain it by honeſt induſtry and Frugality. The Method is eaſy, and tis ſafe, and I hope it will prove effectual to the End deſigned; at leaſt we ſhall ſave our Money by it; Why then my Friends and Neighbours, are you ſo averſe to exert yourſelves? Have you loſt all Senſe of Liberty? Or have you ſo exhauſted your ſpirits in your former Struggles, as now tamely to ſubmit your necks to the galling Yoke of Slavery? Will you wait to be exhorted again, and again, by your Neighbours of BOSTON, before you will join in ſo glorious a Cauſe as that of Liberty? By your Conduct heretofore, I ſhould not have tho't it. Yet not one Town, that I have heard of, hath followed the illuſtrious Example of the Town of BOSTON. Let us then rouſe ourſelves, my dear Countrymen, and, in the Cauſe of Liberty, I beg you would hearken to the Voice even of the loweſt. What Colony can better cloathe themſelves in their own Manufactures than ours? We can with little Pains raiſe Wool and Flax enough for our own Uſe; and we have Women enough to ſpin it; thoſe Daughters of Liberty who have ſo diſtinguiſhed themſelves heretofore are not baniſhed from among us, they only wait to be ſpurred on, by the Example of the other Sex, nobly to exert themſelves. Let us combine to retrench our ſuperfluities, and be content with thoſe Neceſſaries and Conveniencies which our own Country affords us; and endeavour to ſpread ſo beneficial a Deſign throughout America.

I would earneſtly beg of the leading Men in our ſeveral Towns, to promote and encourage a Subſcription, ſimilar to that of BOSTON; and alſo would propoſe whether it might not be beneficial to endeavour by Subſcription, to raiſe a ſmall Sum of Money in every town, to be lodged with the Select Men, to be given out in Premiums to thoſe who ſhould manufacture the moſt Cloth, in Value, the current Year. This would be no ſmall Spur to the Induſtrious. And the Subſcribers will at leaſt have the Satisfaction of doing a noble Piece of Service to their Country.

But ſome more able Pen, I hope, will improve upon the Hints I have given, & point out ſome Methods effectually to carry in Execution this glorious Deſign. With my beſt Wiſhes that Induſtry and Frugality may flouriſh among us—I beg Leave to ſubſcribe myſelf a hearty Friend to the Public.

LIBER NOV-ANGLUS.

From a LONDON PAPER.

To the PRINTER,

SIR,

I Was preſent yeſterday at the complaints of a patient, whoſe phyſician attributed them all to tea; and added, that few perſons ought to drink tea after the age of forty, few at any age: A weak ſtomach, trembling limbs, giddy head, relaxed nerves, miſerable low ſpirits, and univerſal langor. What a train of evils do ariſe from ſo paltry an indulgence!

Is it not ſtrange, Sir, that we cannot imitate our rational neighbourhood of the north? At Upſal they drink a tea of ſelect herbs of their own growth; and there is ſcarce a weak man, or a man of weak nerves among them.

I am, Sir, Your humble ſervant,

TRAHLUR.

CORTE, (in Corſica) Aug. 4.

PAOLI is making great preparations for war. He hath already obtained poſſeſſion of Algogliola: and as the French troops have now evacuated Calvi and Ajaccio, he is actually laying ſiege to both theſe garriſons. The ſpirit with which our general conducts his enterprizes, is only equalled by the wiſdom and ſteadineſs with which he ſecures every advantage acquired by our arms.

Genoa, Sept. 5. The French commiſſary who was ſent from Baſtia to Hiace, has concluded a ſuſpenſion of hoſtilities between the Republic's troops and the Corſicans. Another commiſſary has been ſent to Calvi for the like purpoſe. This convention is to ſubſiſt until the epocha of time expires that the French were to keep garriſon in theſe towns. The Spaniſh frigate, and tranſports, with the expulſed Jeſuits are ſtill in port, waiting for orders from the court of Madrid. There was a violent ſtorm of rain and hail accompanied with the loudeſt thunder, and flaſhes of lightning, known in the memory of man. Seven perſons were killed, and much damage done to ſeveral churches and houſes. The foremaſt and topmaſt of one of the Spaniſh frigates were ſo much ſhivered that they muſt be changed; one man was killed and two others wounded on board the frigate.

LONDON, Sept. 15.

Extract of a Letter from Leghorn, Aug. 29.

"The Jeſuits diſembarked at Calvi, in the iſland of Corſica, amount to 800, and the Corſicans intrenched in the convent of Capuchins (a musket ſhot diſtance from them) conſiſt of 400 men. On the other hand, the Genoeſe garriſon, which ſucceeded the French there, is compoſed of only 150 ſoldiers. Ajaccio is already in the power of the Corſicans, the inhabitants having taken arms and opened the gates to them immediately after the departure of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's troops.

We hear that orders are given from the War Office for raiſing a number of recruits for compleating the regiments lately arrived from North America and the Weſt Indies.

A letter from Dunkirk, dated Auguſt 27, ſays, "The French are reparing their fortifications, and building a bridge over the harbour; the general talk is of an approaching war."

It is ſaid that a gentleman who lately belonged to the royal navy, has invented a cannon ſhell, of a new conſtruction, for naval ſervice, to anſwer the purpoſe of a bomb; proof of which has been lately made with a forty pounder, and it has been found, in every reſpect, to anſwer.

The late behavior of the Spaniards to the Britiſh ſhips in the Weſt Indies, occaſions ſtrange rumors, which, in all probability will bring on much altercation between the two courts, if not an open rupture.

We learn from Copenhagen of the 8th ult. that a treaty of commerce is negociating between the courts of England and Denmark, by which, among other beneficial articles, the ſubjects of Great Britain are to enjoy an excluſive privilege in caſe of a future war, in being ſupplied with naval and military ſtores from the Daniſh ſettlements in the Weſt-Indies.

Extract of a letter from Paris, Sept. 12.

"The greateſt attention is paid by the French miniſtry to the increaſe of their African trade, for which purpoſe, four frigates are now fitting out at Breſt, with a view, it is thought, to eſtabliſh a new factory ſomewhere on that coaſt."

We are aſſured, by the laſt letters from Hanover, that orders have been received to keep up an army of 25,000 men in that electorate, to be in readineſs to act as the emergencies of affairs may require.

On Friday there was a great board of Admiralty; when it is ſaid, ſeveral ſmall ſhips were put into commiſſion, the command of which we hear, was given to Lieutenants on half pay

At laſt Cheſter aſſizes a cauſe came on between a young lady of Stockport, in that county, and a gentleman of Penwortham, near Preſton, (an Enſign in the Lancaſter militia) for refuſing to marry the young lady agreable to promiſe; when in the courſe of the tryal it was fully proved, both by his own hand writing, and ſome credible witneſſes, that he was guilty of a breach of promiſe with her; the court adjudged him to pay 500l damages, and coſts of ſuit.

BOSTON January 7.

Since our laſt arrived here Capt Ford from Halifax, by whom we have the Nova-Scotia Gazettes of Dec. 3 and 10. which contain the following London Intelligences brought to Halifax by his Majeſty's ſhip Senegal, Captain Cookſod, in 6 weeks from Plymouth, viz.

From the LONDON GAZETTE.

WHITEHALL, September 29, 1767.

ON Sunday laſt Captain Wrotteſley arrived here from Monaco, with the melancholly account, That his Royal Highneſs Edward Auguſtus Duke of York and Albany, died at that place on the 17th inſtant, about eleven o'clock in the morning, of a malignant fever, after a ſevere illneſs of fourteen days, to the great grief of their Majeſties and all the Royal Family. The body was opened and embalmed; and was ordered by Commodore Spry to be put on board his Majeſty's ſhip Montreal, Captain Coſby, to be brought to England.

IN purſuance of his Majeſty's commands, Theſe are to give public notice, that it is expected, that, upon the preſent melancholly occaſion of the death of his late Royal Highneſs Edward Auguſtus Duke of York and Albany, all perſons do put themſelves into decent mourning; the ſaid mourning to begin on Sunday next the 4th of October.

LONDON, October 3.

Yeſterday another expreſs arrived at St. James's, with Advice of the death of her Royal Highneſs Mary, Princeſs of Heſſe Caſſel, daughter of the late king, & aunt to his preſent Majeſty. Her Royal Highneſs was born Feb. 22. 1722, and was married July 28, 1740, to his ſerene Highneſs Frederic Landgrave of Heſſe Caſſel; by whom ſhe had iſſue three Sons, viz. 1. William, Hereditary Prince, Viceroy of Norway. 2. Charles, a Lieutenant General, &c. in the Service of the King of Denmark. 3. Frederic, a Colonel of a Heſſian Regiment.

It is remarkable that no leſs than four Perſons of the Blood Royal of England have died in leſs than One Year & Eleven Months viz. His Royal Highneſs the Duke of Cumberland, Oct. 31, 1765; Prince Frederic, youngeſt Brother of his preſent Majeſty, Dec. 26. 1765; the Duke of York, Sept. 17. 1767; and laſtly, the Princeſs of Heſſe the ſame Month and Year.

It is ſaid, that the 24th of November next is fixed for meeting of Parliament.

It is now aſſured, that the celebrated John Wilkes, Eſq; will certainly declare himſelf a Candidate to repreſent the City of London at the enſuing general Election, and that he will appear here in Perſon, ſeveral Gentlemen of this City, it is ſaid, having received letters from him, at Paris, to that Purpoſe.

It was this morning reported, that the Eaſt India Company's troops had lately defeated a body of the Morattoes, and totaly diſperſed them.

They write from Plymouth, that the workmen in the Docks of that place, have, for ſome time paſt, been employed double tides, in getting ready three ſhips of War, intended to replace thoſe lately arrived from foreign ſtations.

They write from Breſt, that 2000 tons of ſhip timber had juſt arrived there, in Swediſh tranſports, from the Baltick, for the uſe of the king's dock yards.

HARTFORD, Jan. 11.

Laſt Week died at Goſhen, in Litchfield County, being about 50 Years of Age, MOSES LYMAN, Eſq; of that Town.——He had been troubled, for upwards of 20 Years, with an Exoſtoſis in one of his Legs, which of late increaſed to ſuch a Degree, as obliged him to have it cut off, which was accordingly done, on Tueſday the 29th Ult.——He was, for many Years, a Member of the General Aſſembly of this Colony; a Gentleman univerſally eſtemed, and his Death is greatly lamented by all his Acquaintance.

Wanted immediately

TWENTY Steers or Heifers of about three Years old, to be kept until next Spring on Share. Enquire of the Printer hereof.

To the PRINLER.

IT is hoped the inhabitants of this colony, will univerſally preſerve their linen and cotton rags of all kinds, and alſo their uſeleſs paper—for the encouragement of the paper manufactories in this and the neighbouring colonies. It is true the value of theſe articles is ſo ſmall, that many may think them not worth the trouble of ſaving.—But the trouble is inconſiderable, and ſmall as the value is, it would be ſufficient to ſupply moſt families with all the paper they will have occaſion to uſe: And how great a ſaving would this be to whole provinces? However, it is not ſo much with a view to the preſent profit of individuals, that piece of frugality is recommended, as for the common benefit of the public, and removing an impoſition which every perſon duly ſenſible of the value of freedom, and the juſt rights of an Engliſhman, muſt highly reſent—Since by the unfriendlineſs and rapacious appearance of thoſe meaſures, they may be conſidered as preludes to others of the like kind, that may by degrees be applied to every article of our liberty and property, till we are entirely ſtripped of every thing, which as Engliſhmen and freemen we uſed to value and eſteem. If you really love your country, then, my brethren, if you really love thoſe advantages which made that country dear to you, I beſeech you put in practice this eaſy piece of frugality, the ſaving all your linen rags, even tho' you ſhould give them away.——This will be one article of conſiderable ſaving to your country, and in a ſhort time the good effects of it will flow to every individual.

Containing the freſheſt Advices, Both Foreign and Domeſtick.

Mr. PRINTER.

I AM one of that ſort of men that the world calls "an uneaſy, complaining mortal." And indeed there are ſo many things that continually vex my ſoul, that I have worn out my family & neighbours, with my complaints. They can now unmov'd hear me fret and ſcold, for an hour together—nay, it was but yeſterday, when I was exclaiming, with the utmoſt violence, in my own kitchen, againſt ſome of the proceedings of our general aſſembly, my wife continued knitting a pair of mittens, and the maid waſhing the diſhes, with as little emotion as if there never had been any ſuch ſubjects of complaint, and (could you believe it!) my negro boy, in the midſt of ſo pathetic an harangue, interrupted me, by aſking his miſtreſs "if it was time to take the bread out of the oven?"—In my rage, I knock'd the fellow down, and vow'd that I would complain about public affairs no more. But I found, upon reflection, that there were ſo many public evils that needed complaint, that my raſh vow had better be retracted, and I accordingly have retracted it.——And though my people in the kitchen, pay ſo little regard to my complaints, I hope the public will lend an ear to them; for 'tis my full deſign to alarm people (if I can't entertain them) once every fortnight, at leaſt, with ſome dolorous information, well worthy of their notice, under the name of the COMPLAINANT.

The ſubjects of my complaint will be very various. As to the Britiſh parliament, or any proceedings at Weſtminſter, I believe I had as good let them alone, for three reaſons; firſt, I know ſo little about them, &c. that I ſhould be as likely to ſay what was wrong as right. Secondly, There has been ſo much ſaid and wrote already, as to do us more hurt than good. Thirdly, if I ſhould attempt to complain, I ſhould be more likely to burn my own fingers, than get any redreſs for my country——however, by the by, I am forced to grin very hard to keep in.—There are abuſes enough to complain, of which paſs off unpuniſh'd, every day, & that among ourſelves, to keep my pen continually going. I have ſaid ſo much by way of introduction, that there is but little room for Num. I. However, making ſpecial allowance for the length of this, pleaſe to inſert it as follows.

COMPLAINANT. N°. I.

But Pity is not common.

MAD TOM.

BENEVOLENCE, as the main ſpring of our ſocial conduct, is in itſelf ſo amiable, ſo much the glory of human nature, & ſo eſſential to the intereſt of the world, that mankind in general, lay claim to it, and pretend to be actuated by it. But when we conſider compaſſion, exciting our utmoſt endeavours to relieve the afflicted, to be an eſſential part of benevolence, we muſt certainly diſallow the claims of a great part of mankind. That precept which enjoins that we rejoice with them that rejoice, and weep with them that weep, is too little regarded. I may perhaps evince this, in ſome future complaints, by ſeveral inſtances. All that I ſhall complain of, at this time, relative to this obſervation, is the treatment that a dear and intimate friend of mine meets with from the world. He is in a miſerable conſumptive ſtate of health; and, as his proſpects are very gloomy, he has loſt that vivacity which endeared his converſation to his acquaintance. Now, mankind about him, inſtead of condoling with him, as lying under the afflicting hand of God, act as the Doctor did, who, when call'd to a patient, ever made it his rule to obſerve what bones, and fragments of food lay about the houſe, and, without exception, lay the malady to the diet; though ſome of them indeed, are near about as wiſe, in their animadverſions upon my friend, as an apprentice of the aforeſaid doctor's, who, being inſtructed to act upon the ſame rule, and ſpying a ſaddle under his patient's bed, pronounced his diſeaſe the effect of eating a horſe. When any perſon falls into ſome ſore diſtreſs that calls for the ſympathy, condolance, and aſſiſtance of all around him, thoſe that ſhould comfort him, are reproaching him with ſome irretrievable imprudence, that brought on his calamity. Thus my poor friend muſt hear from every viſitor, of his raſhneſs and imprudence, in coming away ſo ſoon from the enoculating hoſpital. If this was really the cauſe of his infirmities, is it friendly to be continually reproaching him with it? Is it not a conduct very ſimilar to that of Job's friends? However, whether this be the cauſe or no, the poor gentleman muſt bear the blame of his own misfortunes; for where there is no manifeſt imprudence, the cauſe and all, muſt be ſolved only into the ſovereign providence of God, the imaginations of a malevolent world will be ſet to work to deviſe ſome vice or folly, in the poor ſufferer, as the ſource of all he endures. That ſympathy whereby we participate in the afflictions of others, makes us feel part of their burden, and therefore, tho' ſcripture and humanity call upon us to feel for the diſtreſſed, yet a deſire to excuſe ourſelves from any thing ſo diſagreable, ſets us upon inventing ſome way of throwing the cauſe of all their ſufferings upon their own vice or imprudence.

I was the other evening in company, where I heard a number of perſons communicating to one another their different opinions of the cauſe of my friend's dangerous decline. After his imprudence at his innoculation, had been thoroughly canvaſs'd and condemn'd, "I believe (ſays one) he has hurt himſelf with eating meat ſuppers."——"That may be (ſays another) but I believe it's more owing to his drinking ſo much tea." A third ſays, "I believe he'd do well enough, if he'd break all his pipes——he ſmoaks too much." A fourth gave a kind of dark hint, that he uſed wine too freely. But a fifth, more wiſe than all the reſt, intimated that he'd got a young, hearty wife, and————So the poor fellow was bang'd off, by this wiſe, cenſorious circle. But I quickly found my friend was not the only perſon treated in this form, & with the ſame ſpirit; for the converſation ſoon turned upon a ſad cataſtrophe that ſome time ago happened in our town——A man's houſe was burnt down, all his ſubſtance was devoured by the flames, and a child burnt to death, the cauſe of the accident unknown. "Well, tis'nt ſo much matter, (ſays one) for they always us'd to leave the fire very careleſsly." "The woman (ſays another) would frequently ſweep up the hearth, and put the broom away," &c. &c. In ſhort, I determined, that Mad Tom ſpoke as ſober a truth as e'er a biſhop in England ever did, when he ſaid, Pity is not common.

LETTER IV.

My dear Countrymen,

AN objection, I hear, has been made againſt what I offered in my ſecond letter, which I would willingly clear up before I proceed. "There is," ſay theſe objectors, "a material difference, between the Stamp-act & the late act for laying a duty on paper, &c. that juſtifies the conduct of theſe who oppoſed the former, and yet are willing to ſubmit to the latter. The duties impoſed by the Stamp act, were internal taxes, but the preſent are external, which therefore the parliament may have a right to impoſe."—To this I anſwer, with a total denial of the power of parliament to lay upon theſe colonies any tax whatever.

This point being ſo important to this and to all ſucceeding generations, I wiſh to be clearly underſtood.

To the word "Tax," I annex that meaning which the conſtitution and hiſtory of England require to be annexed to it; that it is, an impoſition on the ſubject, for the ſole purpoſe of levying money.

In the early ages of our monarchy, the ſervices rendered to the crown, for the general good,

Of the Duke of York's Death.

LONDON, October 2.

A Gentlemen of Conſequence has very obligingly, favoured us with the following Particulars relative to the Death of his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York. His Royal Highneſs had danced rather overmuch at the Chateau of a Perſon of Faſhion, & this had not only fatigued him but occaſioned a very ſtrong Perſpiration. As ſoon as the Ball was finiſhed the prince gave orders for his Carriages to be got ready immediately, to ſet out for Toulon, from whence he was diſtant ſome three or four leagues. The Gentlemen of the Train Colonels Murriſon at St. John, and Capt. Wrotteſley, Earneſtly repreſented to his Royal Highneſs the Neceſſity of ſtaying where he was till he was cool and had ſhifted himſelf: The Prince declared there was no actual Occaſion for ſuch Caution, that he would wrap himſelf up in his Cloak, and that would be ſufficient: He did ſo, and ſtepped into his Carriage. This was on the 29th of Auguſt. The next Day his Royal Highneſs complained of a ſlight Chilneſs and Shivering, but went at Night to the Comedy. and before it was over, his Royal Highneſs found himſelf infinitely worſe, and was obliged to withdraw. He was feveriſh, thirſty, and complained of an immoderate Heat all over his Body. By proper Care and drinking plentifully, the Duke was better in the morning; and therefore ſet forward for Monaco,* the Prince of which (who was perſonally acquainted with his Royal Highneſs, in his former Tower to Italy) was waiting there in Expectation of the Honor of a Viſit from him, and the Duke was rather inclined to accelerate his Journey thither, as in that Prince's Palace he might naturally look for an Aſſiſtance and Accomodation ſuperior to what he could reaſonably hope to meet with in common Places. The weather happened to be uncommonly hot, which not a little incommodad his Royal Highneſs; He nevertheleſs arrived at Monaco in good ſpirits, but yet feveriſh and with an Head-Ach, the latter of which he imputed principally to the intenſe Heat of the Sun that whole Day. The next day the Duke was worſe and took his Bed entirely. In hopes of a Recovery, and unwilling to unneceſſarily alarm his King his Royal Parent, and Relations, the Duke enjoined his Attendants, on no Account, to write concerning his Illneſs to England. All poſſible Advice and Aſſiſtance was given, but to no Purpoſe, the Fever was unconquerable! His Royal Highneſs now ſaw the Danger of his Situation; and he ſaw it with a Fortitude and reſignation rarely to be met with, where Bloom of Youth and Dignity of Station are united! Convinced that without ſome unexpected Turn in his Diſtemper, he muſt die, his Royal Highneſs, with the utmoſt Calmneſs and Compoſure of Mind, adjuſted every Step conſequent to the fatal Event himſelf. His Royal Highneſs ordered that Captain Wrotteſly ſhou'd bring the News to England, and in what Method it ſhould be diſcloſed. The Captain was firſt to wait on Mr. Le Grard, of Spring Gardens, and with him to go to Leiceſter Houſe, and then to Glouceſter Houſe, and having communicated the Event to the Dukes his Brothers, to proceed to their Majeſties, ſubmitting it to the King and Queen, in what Manner, and by whom, it ſhall be imparted to his Royal Parent. After his Royal Highneſs had ſettled this Arrangement, he ſeemed remarkably eaſy. He declared himſelf perfectly reſigned to the Divine Will, and he ſpoke his Diſſolution with all the Piety and Reſolution of a Chriſtian and a Man; acting up to thoſe exalted Characters to his lateſt Breath. His Royal Highneſs was ſenſible to his laſt Moment; and the very Morning of his Death dictated a Letter to their Majeſties, his Illuſtrious Parent, and the Royal Family; deſiring the Writer to expidite it, as he had but a few Minutes to ſpare, and thoſe to employ in ſtill more momentous Concerns.

Meſſengers were directly diſpatched from Charleton Houſe to inform their Majeſties, and the reſt of the Royal Family, of this affecting Event; and in the Evening their Majeſties came privately from Richmond to Charlton Houſe, to condole with her Royal Highneſs the Princes Dowager of Wales.

His Royal Highneſs was in the 29th Year of his Age, being born on the 25th of March 1739; was inſtalled Knight of the Garter, June 14 1752; and was created Duke of York, &c. the 4th of April, 1760.

LONDON, October 3.

We hear that the Mourning for their late Royal Highneſſes the Duke of York & Princeſs of Heſſe will be exactly the ſame as that for the late Prince Frederic his Majeſty's youngeſt Brother, and that it will commence on Sunday.

Monday an order was ſent to the Managers of both the Theatres, to ſuſpend acting till further Orders.

Saturday an Order was received by the Managers of the two Theatres for their opening again on Monday following.

Yeſterday a grand Council was held at St. James's, at which his Majeſty, who came from Richmond in the Morning was preſent.

We hear that a great Perſonage, among other acts of her munificence, cloaths and educates forty boys and an equal number of girls, to guard againſt thoſe dangers which the want of Education ſubjects the younger part of both ſexes to.

It is thought that his Royal Highneſs the Duke of Glouceſter will be appointed Keeper of Windſor Lodge and Park, in the room of his late Royal Highneſs the Duke of York.

It is talked that a promotion of General Officers will ſoon take place, and that amongſt the reſt, his Royal Highneſs the Duke of Glouceſter will be declared a Major General.

We hear that Colonel Peter Parr is appointed Lieutenant Governor of Fort George in Scotland, in the room of Governor Caulfield deceaſed.

Laſt Sunday the Hon. Mr Dillon, eldeſt Son to Lord Dillon, renounced the Errors of the Romiſh Church in the Pariſh Church of St. Martin's in the Field.

We are told that a young woman, who lives near the 7 Dials, and who is a zealous Methodiſt, a few days ago actually pulled out one of her eyes, becauſe ſhe ſaid it had offended her.

Oct. 3. It is again reported, that Lord North, eldeſt Son to the Earl of Guilford, who was a Lord of Treaſury under Mr. Grenville, will be appoined Chancellor of the Exchequer.

We hear that the conteſts at the next General Election are expected to be the greateſt ſince the glorious revoluſion in 1689.

On Thurſday, the fellows of the college of phyſicians had a meeting and a dinner at the college in Warwick lane; and in the afternoon a great number of gentlemen, licentiates of the college (between whom and the fellows there has been a ſtrong diſpute for ſome time paſt, the licenciates claiming the ſame privilege with the fellows, who have ſteadily refuſed the licenciates admittance at their meetings) went to the college, and not being admitted, forced the gates. & with the aſſiſtance of a ſmith forced the door of the college & ruſhed in upon the fellows; ſome of the gentlemen broke ſeveral of the windows to pieces with their canes, which cauſed great confuſion; but after ſome time they broke up without further violence.

At the breaking open the Doors and Windows of the College of Phyſicians, 2 Gentlemen of the Faculty, of different Parties, furniſhed themſelves each with a Latin Quotation. One of them, when applying the Sledge to the Door to break it open, cryed out,

Ducit opes, animumque ferro!

The other, upon the forcible Entrance, ſaid pleaſantly,

Spectatum admiſſi riſum teneatis amis?

Out of 21 Phyſicians who broke into the College Hall, 13 are ſaid to be of the Kingdom of Scotland. One Doctor was goin to pay the uſual Compliment, of aſking his Brother Doctor, of the other Party, how he did? Upon which his next Neighbour ſtopped his Mouth, by telling him this was no Time or Place for Compliments.

In the garden of Thomas Benfield, at Great-Barrington, in this Country, from one pea have been gathered 909 pods, and there are near 100 more remaining unpick'd. This pea was allowed a ſpot of ground about two feet diameter, and by that means ſhot forth a great number of ſtalks, which perhaps may ſerve to prove a thin ſowing is eſſential to a good crop.

By a letter from Barbados there is advice of an Engliſh ſchooner, belonging to Bridge-Town, having been carried into Cuba by a Spaniſh frigate, under pretence of illicit trade with the ſubjects of the Catholic King.

Dublin, Sept. 15. In digging for a foundation near St. John's Well, by the Hoſpital Fields, the bones of a man were found of a gigantick ſtature, & a ſword lying by his ſide. It is imagined he has lain there near 400 years. It is ſaid the ſword was ſilver mounted.

QUEBEC, November 26.

On Monday the 16th inſtant was determined, in the court of Vice-Admiralty, a cauſe betwixt Richard Green commander, & William Sholl, mate of the ſhip Bethia, both being Plaintiffs. The captain's charge againſt the mate, was, threatening his life, and ſtriking him when on the high ſeas, with many more mutinous practices, diſobedience of orders, and neglect of ſhip's duty. The mate's complaint was, that the captain while on the high ſeas, had ſtruck him ſo violent a blow on the head with a mallet as greatly endangered his life, uſing very bad language to him both before and after ſaid blow. When after examining ſeveral witneſſes on both ſides, the Judge, without going out of court, honorably acquitted the mate, and adjudged the captain to pay him all actual expences occaſioned by ſaid trial, and likewiſe to pay his paſſage to London. The counſel for the captain was Mr. George Sucklin, and for the mate, the Attorney-General, and Mr. Williams.

Mr. GREEN,

Pleaſe, for once, to be ſo trifling, as to inſert in your Courant the following

TRIFLE.

FROM trifle to trifle, this volatile age.
Still varies, & nothing but trifles engage.
They none but the triflingeſt authors peruſe,
And trifling amuſements their ſenſes amuſe.
A trifling briſk fellow is highly preferr'd,
A trifling gay madam is greatly admir'd.
And ſtill, as if trifling, or trifling fell ſhort,
Things ſolemn and ſerious to trifles convert.
Their time, and their health, and their money too they,
And e'en reputation they trifle away.
Honeſty and honor are trifles become,
And conſcience itſelf capriciouſly dumb.
The ſyſtem of morals a trifle they call,
And religion is made the grand trifle of all!

good, were perſonal; (a) but in proceſs of time ſuch inſtitutions being found inconvenient, certain gifts and grants of their own property were made by the people, under the ſeveral names of aids, tallages, taſks, taxes, ſubſidies, &c. Theſe were made as may be collected even from the names, for public ſervice, "upon need and neceſſity." (b) All theſe ſums were levied upon the people by virtue of their voluntary gift (c) The deſign of them was to ſupport the national honour & intereſt. Some of theſe grants comprehended duties ariſing from trade, being imports on merchandizes. Theſe Chief Juſtice Coke claſſes under "ſubſidies" (d) and "parliamentary aids." They are alſo called 'cuſtoms' But whatever the name was, they were always conſidered as gifts of the people to the crown, to be employed for the public uſes.

Commerce was at a low ebb, and moſt ſurpriſing inſtances might be produced, how little it was attended to for a ſucceſſion of ages. The terms that have been mentioned and amongſt the reſt that of "tax," had obtained a national, parliamentary meaning, drawn from the principles of the conſtitution long before any Engliſhman thought of regulations of trade "by impoſing duties."

Wherever we ſpeak of taxes among Engliſhmen, let us therefore ſpeak of them with reference to the intentions with which, and the principles on which they have been eſtabliſhed. This will give certainty to our expreſſion, and ſafety to our conduct; but if when we have in view the liberty of theſe colonies, and the influence of "taxes" laid without our conſent, we proceed in any other courſe, we purſue a Juno (e) indeed, but ſhall only catch a cloud.

In the national parliamentary ſenſe, inſiſted on, the word 'tax' (f) was certainly underſtood by the congreſs at New York, whoſe reſolves may be ſaid to form the American 'bill of rights.' I am ſatisfied that the congreſs was of opinion, that no impoſitions could be legally laid on the people of theſe colonies, for the purpoſe of levying money, but by themſelves or their repreſentatives.

The third, 4th, 5th, & 6th reſolves, are thus expreſſed.

III. 'That it is inſeperably eſſential to the freedom of a people, and the undoubted right of Engliſhmen, that NO TAX be impoſed on them, but with their own conſent, given perſonally or by their repreſentatives.'

IV. 'That the people of the colonies are not, and from their local circumſtance cannot be repreſented in the houſe of commons, in Great Britain."

V. 'That the only repreſentatives of the people of the colonies, are the perſons choſen therein by themſelves; ——and that NO TAXES ever have been, or can be conſtitutionally impoſed on them, but by their reſpective legiſlatures.'

VI. 'That ALL ſupplies to the crown being free gifts of the people, it is unreaſonable, and inconſiſtent with the principles and ſpirit of the Britiſh conſtitution, for the people of Great Britain to grant to his Majeſty the property of the Colonies.

Here is no diſtinction made, between internal and external taxes. It is evident from the ſhort reaſoning thrown into theſe reſolves that every impoſition 'to grant to his Majeſty the property of the colonies," was tho't a 'tax;' and that every ſuch impoſition if laid any other way 'but with their conſent, given perſonally or by their repreſentatives,' was not only 'unreaſonable, and inconſiſtent with the principles and ſpirit of the Britiſh conſtitution,' but deſtructive 'to the freedom of a people.'

This language is clear and important. 'A tax' means an impoſition to raiſe money. Such perſons therefore as ſpeak of internal & external 'taxes,' I pray may pardon me, if I object to that expreſſion as applied to the privileges and intereſts of theſe colonies. There may be external and internal impoſitions, founded on different principles, and having different tendencies; every 'tax' being an impoſition, though every impoſition is not a 'tax.' But all 'taxes' are founded on the ſame principle, and have the ſame tendency.

'External impoſitions for the regulation of our trade do not grant to his Majeſty the property of the colonies." They only prevent the colonies acquiring property in things not neceſſary, & in a manner judged to be injurous to the welfare of the whole empire. But the laſt ſtatute reſpecting us, 'grants to his Majeſty the property of theſe colonies,' by laying duties on manufactures of Great Britain, which they muſt take, and which ſhe ſettled them, in order that they ſhould take.

What 'tax' can be no more 'internal then this? Here is money drawn without their conſent from a ſociety, who have conſtantly enjoyed a conſtitutional mode of raiſing all money among themſelves. The payment of this tax they have no poſſible method of avoiding, as they cannot do without the commodities on which it is laid, and they cannot manufacture theſe commodities themſelves; beſides if this unhappy country ſhould be ſo lucky as to elude this act, by getting parchment enough to uſe in the place of paper, or by reviving the antient method of writing on wax and bark, and by inventing ſomething to ſerve inſtead of glaſs, her ingenuity would ſtand her in little ſtead; for then the parliament wou'd have nothing to do, but to prohibit manufactures, or to lay a tax on hats and woollen cloths, which they have already prohibited the colonies from ſupplying each other with; or on inſtruments and tools of ſteel and iron which they have prohibited the provincials from manufacturing at all. (g) And then, what little gold and ſilver they have, muſt be torn from their hands, or they will not be able in a ſhort time, to get an ax (h) for cutting their firewood nor a plough for raiſing their food ——In what reſpect therefore I beg leave to aſk, is the late act preferable to the Stamp act, or more conſiſtent with the liberties of the colonies? I regard them both with equal apprehenſion, and think they ought to be in the ſame manner oppoſed."

We have a ſtatute like a ſword in the ſcabboard.

A FARMER.

(a) It is very worthy of remark, how watchful our wiſe anceſtors were leſt theſe ſervices ſhould be extended beyond the limits of the law. No man was bound to go out of the realm to ſerve, and therefore even in the conquering reign of Henry 5th, when the martial ſpirit of the nation was inflamed by ſucceſs to a great degree they ſtill carefully guarded againſt the eſtabliſhment of illegal ſervices. Lord Chief Juſtice Coke's words are theſe. "When this point concerning maintenance of wars out of England came to queſtion, the commons did make their continual claim of their ancient freedom and birth right, as in the 1ſt of Henry 5th, and 7th of Henry 5th, &c the commons made proteſt that they were not bound to the maintenance of war in Scotland, Ireland, Calice, France Normandy, or other foreign parts, & cauſed their PROTEST to be entered into the parliament roll, where they yet remain; which in effect agreeth with that, which upon like occaſions was made in the parliament of E. 1." 3 Inſt. pa. 528.

Theſe gifts entirely depending on the pleaſure of the donors, were proportioned to the abilities of the ſeveral ranks of people who gave, & were regulated by their opinion of the public neceſſities.—Thus Edward 1ſt, had at his 11th year, a 13th from the laity, a 20th from the clergy; in the 22d year a tenth from the laity, a 6th from London, and other corporate towns, half of their benefices from the clergy; in his 23d year and 11th from the barons and others, a tenth from the clergy, and a 7th from the burgeſſes &c. Hume's hiſt. of England.

The ſame difference in the grants of the ſeveral ranks, is obſervable in other reigns. In the famous ſtatutes de tallagio non concedendo, the king enumerates the ſeveral claſſes without whoſe conſent, he, and his heirs ſhould never ſet or levy any tax——"Nullam tallagium, vel auxilium per nos, vel hæredes noſtros, in regno noſtro ponatur ſeu levetur, ſine voluntate et aſſenſu archiepiſcoporum, epiſcoporum, comitum, baronum, militum, burgenſium, et aliorum liberorum de regno noſtro." 34 E. 1.

Lord Chief Juſtice Coke in his comment on theſe words, ſays, "for the quieting of the commons, and for a perpetual and conſtant law for ever after, both in this, and other like caſes, this act was made.'—— 'Theſe words are plain without ſcruple; abſolute without any ſaving.'

2 Cokes Inſt. p. 522, 523.

Little did the venerable judge imagine, that other like caſes would happen, in which the ſpirit of this law would be deſpiſed by Engliſhmen, the poſterity of thoſe who made it.

COMPLAINANT. No. II.

Delightful Taſk!——————
To teach the young Idea how to ſhoot!—

AMONG all the ſubjects of complaint, to which the public ear ought to be open, none are more important, than abuſes in the education of children.— Parents indeed, are inveſted with the power of managing, governing and training up their own offspring, according to their diſcretion; but many of them make a wretched uſe of their power, and ſhew that they have little or no diſcretion to direct it. And I wiſh there was not ſome reaſon to complain of the inſtructors of youth, eſpecially in our private ſchools, on the ſame account. The principal article of complaint I ſhall take notice of, in this paper, is a uniformity of treating children in their inſtruction and diſcipline, tho' their genius and temper be very different; and a neglect to encourage and cultivate a promiſing genius, when it ſhews itſelf. Perhaps I may communicate my ideas, and enforce my complaint better by relating ſome facts, with now and then a curſory obſervation upon them, than in any other form—— wherefore that is all I purpoſe to trouble printer or reader with this week

RUSTICUS had a number of children; whenever any one of them had committed what their father thought a fault, whether preſumptuouſly or inadvertently, the puniſhment was the ſame: Hence it came to paſs that the very deſign of correction was fruſtrated, themſelves deprived of that comfort, & the world of that ſervice which nature ſeemed to have deſigned them for. Tom was of a robuſt, heavy make——his natural temper was rugged & ſavage—his intellectuals were quite mean, perfectly correſpondent to his clowniſh, rough-hewn appearance. To ſtick a pig, or knock down a bullock in the beſt manner, were the higheſt objects that his ambition aſpired at. A ſchool he abhor'd worſe than a priſon; and had rather any time, take a ſevere drubbing for neglecting his book, than endure the mortification of ſtudying it, for a drubbing in no ſhape ever affected Tom, further than it made his fleſh ſmart.

Billy (the ſecond ſon) was entirely a contraſt to Tom: Nature had made his animal conſtitution very delicate, for which reaſon he was frequently inſulted by Tom, on account of the ſmallneſs of his legs, his inability to lift, and the like. However, Billy had a genius that Tom could lay no claim to. A book was his delight. Never was he better pleaſed than when he found himſelf welcome to look over ſome gentleman's library, and aſſured of liberty to take what books he choſe, for peruſal at home. By his temper he ſeem'd form'd for generoſity, friendſhip and compaſſion; and indeed ſuffer'd more exquiſite ſenſations, from one diſapproving look of his father or preceptor, than Tom did from all the birch that was ever expended upon his back. From theſe rough out-lines of their character it is plain that Tom was deſigned by nature for the rough and laborious callings of life, and might (as one ſays) "do his country excellent ſervice at the plow tail." He had neither heart nor head for any thing elſe, and ſeem'd calculated altogether to be the ſolefeather of a community. As for Billy, he would certainly, with proper encouragement, have made a figure in the literary world, and his delicacy of conſtitution pointed out an education aiming at the leſs laborious callings of life. But their parents had determined, in their early childhood, that Tom ſhould have a college education, and be brought up for a miniſter; and that Billy ſhould ſettle a large, uncultivated tract of land, in one of the new townſhips, that belonged to the family. With this view the ſchool maſter was directed to advance Tom along into latin and Greek, & confine Billy's education to what was proper only for a plough jogger. But alas! his taſk was great! neither ferrel nor rod could make Tom ſtudy with any hopeful proſpect of proficiency, nor keep Billy from peeping into latin books and hiſtories. It almoſt broke Billy's heart to find himſelf ſo ſeverely handled, for doing what he was ſo ſtrongly prompted to, not only by a natural but laudable diſpoſition: And it gave Tom ſome uneaſineſs, to find that he muſt looſe ſo much ſkin, only for neglecting what he was naturally ſo averſe to Tom frequently play'd truant, on account of yoking ſome young ſteers, breaking a colt, or ſome other occaſion of the like kind——and Billy as frequently fell ſhort in his taſk of making ſtone wall, on account of Joſephus's antiquities, or ſome other book that bewitch'd him——the conſequence was, that as frequently both wou'd have a flogging, which indeed hurt Tom's back, but went to Billy's heart. Billy was once ſeverely treated, for carrying a ſmall bible to meeting to look the proofs, as the miniſter quoted them, when he was a little boy. Now, had the plain indications of nature, with regard to inſtruction and diſcipline, been obſerved in theſe two boys, and duly purſued, they might both have been uſeful members of ſociety, and comfortable in the world. But they were both drove, contrary to their inclinations, to their reſpective deſtinations in life: Billy went into the woods with a ſpirit broken by the treatment he had met with, from whence enſued a melancholly that prey'd upon his naturally delicate conſtitution to that degree, as to render him incapable of making much improvements upon his land. Hence his character ſuffered, in point of induſtry, and he was branded with the name of an idle fellow, by the robuſt peaſants around. This ſerv'd only to add more weight to that gloom which before was too heavy for his ſpirits. His generous ſoul, form'd for friendſhip felt inſolitude that void from the want of ſocial enjoyments, which encreaſed the burden, and would have been inſupportable, were it not for holding "high converſe with the mighty dead;" I mean, peruſing the works of departed authors.— By theſe means his farm went back, rather than forward, in point of improvement, his health ſwiftly decayed, his reputation was more and more aſpers'd, his ſpirits ſunk to the duſt, and quickly drew animal nature after them into the grave.——Poor, unhappy, generous Billy! thy whole life was unfortunate, thy death untimely, thy reputation blaſted, and the amiable qualities of thy nature cruſh'd and buried, through the imprudent uſe of that authority with which thy father and thy maſter were entruſted.

As for Tom, by the ſame means which have been ſucceſsful in others of the like character, he obtained a degree; and ſince he was deſtined for the miniſtry, he reſolved to ſettle, if poſſible, where he could get the moſt land. And indeed, put aſide this conſideration, all that ever could have induced him to think of entering upon that calling, was a proſpect of exerciſing ſovereignty and lordſhip over ſome of his fellow men. ——————A ſettlement was finally obtained in an obſcure part of the country; but quickly did Tom appear diſguſtful to his audience (as illiterate as they were.) He totally deſerted his ſtudy, and deſcended ſo far beneath the dignity of his ſtation, as to value himſelf upon being the beſt ſow-gelder in his pariſh. Full of ſovereignty and imperiouſneſs, and void of prudence, he became odious to his people; and as they ſaw him treated with the deepeſt contempt by the neighbouring clergy, they reſolved to get rid of him, and accordingly, after three years from his ſettlement, effected it. Upon which Tom entered upon the purſuit of what his natural inclination ever dictated. But his means were now ſmall: moſt of his patrimony had been ſwallowed up in his uſeleſs education, and the indolence of a college life had greatly incapacitated him for hard and ſteady labour, ſo that he muſt ſhirk as well as he can. He acted therefore, about among his people, and in the neighbouring parts, in capacity of butcher, ſow-gelder, farrier, &c. But his haughty, quarrelſome temper, ſet him upon abuſing a molatto fellow, on a ſtrife which of them could ſpay a ſow in the beſt manner; which coſt Tom dear; for he was bound over to court, impriſoned for want of bail, condemn'd to pay charges, and conſiderable damage in the iſſue, which being beyond his ability he was forced to make the beſt terms he could for his liberty; and now, to the honor of the cloth, cleans ſtables, and waters horſes at an inn, in order to get wherewithal to ſatiſfy the molatto. Poor Tom! (I'll drop a tear upon thee as well as upon Billy.) Had not thy parents oppos'd in-

"MOST certain it is that where luxury and extravagance are the prevailing character of a people, (and that it is ours every man muſt acknowledge) the final iſſue muſt neceſſarily be unhappy—Strange infatuation ! unhappy ſtate of things ! We all ſee and own the woful extravagance of the times—We all condemn it —And yet we are all carried away with it ! Such is the prevalence of example—ſuch the force of cuſtom and habit—ſuch in ſhort, the fatality which bears down even a wiſe and ſenſible people before it" O ye illuſtrious patriots ! ye darling guardians of America ! You who have ſo nobly exerted yourſelves in the cauſe of freedom ; who have bravely ſtem'd the torrent of arbitrary power, reſcu'd your country from ſlavery, pity, ſtill pity wretched America, ſtill exert thoſe abilities which lately preſerv'd her liberty, in convincing your countrymen of their preſent ſituation ; rouſe them from that ſupine negligence which poſſeſſes them ; paint the miſeries which threaten them in their true colours; repreſent the dreadful conſequences that muſt enſue from that luxury and extravagance ſo univerſally prevailing ; rekindle thoſe dormant ſparks of public ſpirit which lately broke forth in defence of their darling rights, into a glorious blaze : You will then preſerve your country from ruin, (the conſciouſneſs of which muſt excite the moſt rapturous ſenſations) lay a foundation for the happineſs of unborn millions, and tranſmit your fame to the remoteſt poſterity.

My fellow citizens and friends, would you preſerve your country from the many calamities which threatens us, baniſh from your houſes (for the preſent at leaſt) thoſe ſuperfluous attendants luxury and prodigality ; contribute every thing for the encouragement of frugality œconomy and induſtry—How intoxicated have we been, bleſs'd by kind nature with a moſt fertile country, capable of producing not only every neceſſary of life, every thing that might render it uſeful and delightful, but what might ſatisfy the moſt boundleſs vanity and extravagance, to be indebted to diſtant regions for almoſt every thing which might by induſtry & a proper management be produc'd amongſt ourſelves ! ! !———For ſhame my countrymen ! Exert yourſelves, ſhow that you have ſome ſparks of patriotiſm ſtill left, that you have ſo much Britiſh blood as to ſcorn being always dependent : Riſe, encourage every laudable attempt towards induſtry, ſet up manufactories, and by your example ability, zeal, and every noble, patriotic virtue, bear down all oppoſition to the public good,—If ever there was a time when unanimity induſtry and reſolution were neceſſary, it is now; our preſent wretched condition loudly demands the exertion of theſe public virtues from every man who truly loves his country.

Think not American fair ones that you are excluded from contributing a part towards the public good—Your country demands the exertion of all your gentler faculties—Scorn to let ſuch trifling ſubjects as dreſs, ſcandal and detraction engroſs your thot's, while the nobleſt purſuits demand your utmoſt attention ; ſuch topics ſhow a meanneſs of ſpirit, ſuch a depravity of nature as ſcandalizes any, much more ſo the moſt beautiful part of the human ſpecies : But rather ſhow you have ſouls capable of feeling for the miſeries of your country, ſhow that you will do every thing to preſerve it from ruin lay aſide thoſe gaities which ill ſuit the circumſtances of your country ; wear nothing but what is manufactured in America ; this will be the greateſt encouragement to manufactures and induſtry, this will be acting worthy your charming ſelves.

In fine, let each individual exert himſelf and encourage the mechanic arts, manufactures, agriculture, in ſhort every thing that might tend to the emolument of America, we ſhall then find employment for our induſtrious poor, we ſhall have a ſource of riches amongſt ourſelves ; honour, plenty & happineſs will be the reward of our inſtuſtry, and the conſciouſneſs of our having acted worthy the deſcendents of our brave progenitors, muſt afford a pleaſure, a delight that will crown our greateſt toils.

COMPLAINANT. N°. III.

——Pueris dant Cruſtula blandi
Doctores, Elementa velint ut diſcere prima.

IN the account we had of Tom Ruſticus, in a late Complainant, it appears that his ſchool maſter attempted to overcome his averſion to ſtudy by no other means than that of ſeverity. I am inclined to think that all means would have prov'd ineffectual with Tom ; but ſtill I may be allow'd from thence to take the hint of another ſubject of complaint, and that is " too great a neglect among pedagogues to make a ſchool a delightful place to their ſcholars." I would have introduced this ſubject in a manner more different from an indictment, which perhaps may be a little diſpleaſing to gentlemen of the character I am preſuming to handle, did not the title of my paper oblige me to this method.

Moſt certainly, had Billy Ruſticus been permitted to purſue his ſtudies, and met with kind, endaring and encouraging treatment from his maſter, his benevolent heart, and exuberant genius had been duly cultivated to his great uſefulneſs and comfort in life ; but it was otherwiſe——and I can't but think that a conduct tending to make a ſchool diſagreable, has frequently proved of laſting, irretrievable miſchief to a delicate, tender or ſelf-diffident ſpirit. Let me find in addition to his ability to inſtruct, ſteadineſs and gravity without auſterity and moroſeneſs ; a full remembrance of the governing foibles of his own childhood, join'd with the ſedate judgment of riper years ; a diſtinguiſhing ſagacity of diſcerning the peculiar principles that actuate his different pupils, with all their reſpective foibles, and a happy talent of improving the ſame to their advancement in learning ; firm, unſhaken authority, to awe the rugged, and tenderneſs to win the ſoft ; I ſay, let me find theſe things in a preceptor, and I will commit my children wholly to his management and inſtruction, and do my utmoſt to procure an honorable reward for him.

That there are many ſuch in the country, training up youth in the way they ſhould go, I make no doubt—and hope they will excuſe me if I complain of ſome others of their profeſſion of quite a different character—— and that for theſe two things.

Firſt. " In the exerciſe of government, too much credulity in admitting the information of one boy againſt another." There is frequently in children a diſpoſition to triumph over one another, and they take a certain delight in ſeeing their fellows brought to puniſhment, which is not ſo commonly obſerved in their riper years : Hence you will ſee a boy laſhing a tree or a poſt, to get the imaginary pleaſure of being the ſcourger of ſome perſon : Hence, likewiſe, they will be ſure to fill the maſter's ears with informations againſt their mates, of every thing they ſuppoſe will incur his reſentment, and bring ſtripes upon them. And ſometimes falſe informations, back'd with falſe witneſſes, will bring puniſhment, making a maſter the inſtrument of revenge or diverſion to his ſcholars. A quotation on this ſubject, from a letter of a gentleman of veracity, will, I hope, be excuſed both by him and public.

" When I was 6 or 7 years old, I was in a very large ſchool, under the tuition of a gentleman remarkable for his ſeverity ; I was very ſmall of my age, and my nerves were ſtrung in ſuch a manner as that I cut capers with much activity and nimbleneſs, when a ſtick four feet long cling'd round my little limbs. This was great diverſion to the larger boys, and therefore they contriv'd to have the affair brought about once or twice every day. I was daily accuſed of playing in ſchool, calling names, or ſome other fault which I was altogether innocent of. The accuſation would be ſupported by two or 3 large boys, and the reſt that knew it to be falſe, dare not open their mouths. Hence I was daily whip'd, for a fault I never committed, till I was forc'd to own it, and then whip'd for lying. This was the caſe for ſo long a courſe of time, that I have ſince wonder'd that my maſter, who never ſaw any thing in me but obedience, with his own eyes, did not ſuſpend his credulity, and determine, that the diverſion of my accuſers, in ſeeing me cut capers, was the end of their accuſations. But whether he did, or did not, the practice was continued till I found there was no benefit in obedience, manners or ſtudy—my fate muſt be the ſame. So true to the ſchool was I, that I never mentioned any thing of my treatment to my parents ; and my maſter was much careſs'd at our houſe, as being a valuable, faithful preceptor. Where it would have ended I know not (ſince my diſcouragements produced actual faults, and the exerciſe of the long ſtick was repeated ſeveral times in a day) had not I once had my little, raw-bon'd back and ribs ſmartly checker'd, becauſe I was bloody from a great boy's having run a broomſtick into my ear before ſchool began. I was forced then to go into the hands of a phyſician, to have the wound heal'd, but ſeveral diſadvantages, the conſequence of that accident, remain to this day ; and yet the maſter was a gentleman of ſenſe and learning, which ſhews the danger of credulity, as to complaints againſt children under our care. With ſuch a warning before me, one would have thought that I ſhould have avoided it, when acting in character of ſchool maſter ; but I confeſs that, I believe that a droll, half witted, comical, lubberly boy, who was once my ſcholar, has been puniſhed upon falſe informtaion given for the diverſion of the ſchool. And indeed we are all too apt to forget that little children, from their want of language to convey their ideas, as well as from the awe they have from the preſence of their maſter, are under an incapacity properly to defend themſelves."

Secondly, I would complain of a too common diſregard of the advice implied in the motto, which is, in ſhort, " to endear themſelves to their ſcholars, and make both ſchool and ſtudy delightful." (N.B. If any one ſhould ſay I do not conſtrue right, I will not diſpute the matter, as I am not very expert at tranſlating) To inſpire the little mortals with a ſervile fear and awe, ſeems to be the grand point in view with many, and I would have authority ſupported, but eaſineſs of acceſs, and indications of kindneſs, towards his pupils is quite as neceſſary."— I will tagg on, for the concluſion of the paper, ſome obſervations made by the moſt celebrated writers on this head.

" This is one of the moſt important points (ſays M. Rollin) in education, and at the ſame time the moſt difficult ; for amongſt a great number of maſters, who in other reſpects are very deſerving there are very few to be found, who are happy enough to make their ſcholars fond of ſtudy."

" It ſhould be the great care of the maſters (ſays Quintilian) who teach children their letters, to do it in ſuch a manner that a child who is not yet capable of being fond of his book, ſhould not take an averſion to it, and the diſlike continue when he grows up." " For this reaſon (ſays he) his ſtudy ſhould be made a diverſion to him. The maſter muſt proceed by aſking him little queſtions. He muſt be encouraged by commendation, and allowed to ſet ſome value upon himſelf, and be pleaſed with having learnt any thing. Sometimes what he refuſes to learn muſt be taught another, to raiſe his jealouſy. We muſt enter into little diſputes with him, and let him think he has often the better. We muſt entice him likewiſe by little rewards, which children at that age are very fond of." Quint. Lib. 1. Cap: 1.

" The great ſecret to make children love their books, is to make them fond of their maſter. In this caſe they willingly give ear to him, become docile, ſtrive to pleaſe him, and take a pleaſure in his leſſons." Quint. Lib. 2. Cap 9.

" We may confine the body, make a ſcholar ſit at his deſk againſt his inclination, double his labour by way of puniſhment, force him to finiſh a taſk impoſed on him, and for that end deprive him of his lay & recreation, but can labouring thus upon force be properly called ſtudy ?" M. Rollin. E

LETTER V.

My dear Countrymen,

PERHAPS the objection to the late act impoſing duties upon paper, &c. might have been ſafely reſted on the argument drawn from the univerſal conduct of the parliaments and miniſters, from the firſt exiſtence of theſe colonis, to the adminiſtration of Mr. Greenvile.

What but the indiſputable, the acknowledged excluſive right of the colonies to tax themſelves, could be the reaſon, that in this long period of more than one hundred and fifty years, no ſtatute was ever paſſed for the ſole purpoſe of raiſing a revenue on the colonies? And how clear, how cogent muſt that reaſon be, to which every parliament, and every miniſter, ſo long a time ſubmitted, without a ſingle attempt to innovate?

England in part of that courſe of years, and Great Britain, in other parts, was engaged in ſeveral fierce and bloody wars; troubled with ſome tumultuous and bold parliaments; governed by many daring and wicked miniſters; yet none of them ever dared to touch the Palladium of American liberty. Ambition, avarice, faction tyranny, all revered it. Whenever it was neceſſary to raiſe money on the colonies, the requiſitions of the crown were made, and dutifully complied with. The parliament from time to time regulated their trade, and that of the reſt of the empire, to preſerve their dependance, and the connection of the whole to good order.

The people of Great Britain in ſupport of their privileges, boaſt much of their antiquity. 'Tis true they are antient: Yet it may well be queſtioned, if there is a ſingle privilege of a Britiſh ſubject, ſupported by longer, more ſolemn, or more uninterrupted teſtimony, than the excluſive right of taxation in theſe colonies. The people of Great Britain conſider that kingdom as the ſovereign of theſe colonies, and would now annex to that ſovereignty a prerogative never heard of before. How would they bear this was the caſe their own? What would they think of a new prerogative claimed by the crown? We may gueſs what their conduct would be from the tranſports of paſſion into which they fell about the late embargo, tho' laid to relieve the moſt emergent neceſſities of ſtate, admitting of no delay; and for which there were numerous precedents.—Let our liberties be treated with the ſame tenderneſs, and it is all we deſire.

Explicit as the conduct of the parliaments for ſo many ages, is, to prove that no money can be levied on theſe colonies, by parliament for the purpoſe of raiſing a revenue yet it is not the only evidence in our favour.

Every one of the moſt material arguments againſt the legality of the ſtam act, operates with equal force againſt the act now objected to; but as they are well known, it ſeems unneceſſary to repeat them here.

This general one ſhall be conſulted at preſent: That though theſe colonies are dependent upon Great-Britain, and though ſhe has a legal power to make laws for preſerving that dependance; yet it is not neceſſary for this purpoſe, nor eſſential to the relation between a mother country and her colonies, as was eagerly contended by the advocates for the ſtamp act, that ſhe ſhould raiſe money on them without their conſent.

Colonies were formerly planted by warlike nations, to keep their enemies in awe; to relieve their country overburthened with inhabitants, and to diſcharge a number of diſcontented and troubleſome citizens. But in more modern ages, the ſpirit of violence being in ſome meaſure, if the expreſſion may be allowed, ſheathed in commerce, colonies have been ſettled by the nations of Europe for the purpoſes of trade. Theſe purpoſes were to be attained, by the colonies raiſing for their mother country thoſe things which ſhe did not produce herſelf; and by ſupplying themſelves from her with things they wanted. Theſe are the national objects in the commencement of our colonies, and have beed uniformly ſo in their promotion.

To anſwer theſe grand purpoſes, perfect liberty was known to be neceſſary, all hiſtory proving, that trade and freedom are nearly related to each other. By a due regard to this wiſe plan, the infant colonies expoſed in the unknown climates and unexplored wilderneſſes of this new world, lived, grew, and flouriſhed.

The parent country, with undeviating prudence and virtue, attentive to the firſt principles of colonization, drew to herſelf the benefits ſhe might reaſonably expect, & preſerved to her children the bleſſings, on which thoſe benefits were founded. She made laws obliging her colonies to carry to her all thoſe products which ſhe wanted for her own uſe; and all thoſe raw materials which ſhe choſe herſelf to work up. Beſides this reſtriction, ſhe forbad them to procure manufactures from any other part of the globe, or even the products of European countries, which alone could rival her, without being firſt brought to her. In ſhort, by a variety of laws ſhe regulated their trade in ſuch a manner as ſhe tho't moſt conducive to their mutual advantage and her own welfare. A power was preſerved to the crown, of repealing any laws that ſhould be enacted. The executive authority of government was all lodged in the crown, and its repreſentatives; and an appeal was ſecured to the crown from all judgments in the adminiſtration of juſtice.

For all theſe powers eſtabliſhed by the mother country over the colonies; for all immenſe emoluments derived by her from them; for all their difficulties and diſtreſſes in fixing themſelves what was the recompence made them? A communication of her rights in general, and particularly of that great one, the foundation of all the reſt—that their property, acquired with ſo much pain and hazard, ſhould be diſpoſed of none but[*] themſelves——or, to uſe the beautiful and emphatical language of the ſacred ſcriptures.[‡] "that they ſhould ſit every man under his own vine, and under his fig tree, and NONE SHOULD MAKE THEM AFRAID."

Can any man of candor and knowledge deny that theſe inſtitutions form an affinity between Great Britain and her colonies that ſufficiently ſecures their dependance upon her? Or that for her to levy taxes upon them, is to reverſe the nature of things? Or that ſhe can purſue ſuch a meaſure, without reducing them to a ſtate of vaſſalage?

If any perſon cannot conceive the ſupremacy of Great Britain to exiſt, without the power of laying taxes to levy money upon us the hiſtory of the colonies, and of G. Britain ſince their ſettlement, will prove the contrary. He will there find the amazing advantages ariſing to her from them——the conſtant exerciſe of her ſupremacy,——and their filial ſubmiſſion to it, without a ſingle rebellion, or even the thought of one, from their firſt emigration to this moment,——And all theſe things have happened, without one inſtance of Great Britain's laying taxes to love money upon them.

How many Britiſh authors have demonſtrated, that the preſent wealth, power and glory of their country are founded upon theſe colonies? as conſtantly as ſtreams tend to the ocean, have they been pouring the fruits of their labours, into their mother's lap. Good Heaven! And ſhall a total oblivion of former tenderneſſes and bleſſings, be ſpread over the minds of a wiſe and good nation, by the ſordid arts of intriguing men who covering their ſelfiſh projects under pretences of public good, firſt enrage their countrymen into a frenzy of paſſion, and then advance their own influence and intereſt, gratyfying the paſſion, which they themſelves have baſely exited.

Hitherto Great Britain, has been contented with her Proſperity. Moderation has been the rule of her conduct. But now, a generous, humane people, that ſo often has protected the liberty of Strangers, is inflamed into an attempt to tear a privelege from her own children, which if executed, muſt in their opinion, ſink them into ſlaves: AND FOR WHAT? For a pernicious power, not neceſſary to her, as her own experience may convince her; but horribly dreadful and deteſtible to them.

It ſeems, extremely probable, that when cool, diſpaſſionate poſterity ſhall conſider the affectionate intercourſe, the reciprocal benefits, and the unreſpecting confidence, that have ſubſiſted between theſe colonies & their parent Country, for ſuch a length of time they will execrate with the bittereſt curſes the infamous memory of thoſe men, whoſe peſtilential ambition, unneceſſarily, wantonly, firſt opened the ſources of civil diſcord between them; firſt turned their love into jealouſy; and firſt taught theſe provinces filled with grief and anxiety, to enquire—

> "Mens ubi materna eſt?"
> Where is material affection?

HOWEVER little ſome may think of common News Papers, to a wiſe Man they appear the ark of God for the Safety of the People,—Their fullneſs of general Entertainment, ſmall Bulk and Price, recommend them to every one, and the Variety of the Matters with the great Importance of many of them, awaken the Minds of many to a ſolid enquiry of Intereſts they would otherwiſe never once dream of.—Never was a Time when greater Diligence was neceſſary to render theſe Batteries reſpectable.—The Preſs, and the Maintainers of its Freedom, are become very obnoxious to the Gentlemen of High Fortune, and no Meaſure will be left untried, to cruſh the ſeditious Diſturbers of the public Tranquility.— Rebellion, Treaſon, Hereſy, any pretence if their is but power.—There are but two methods of Government, leading and driving, nothing will lead the people but a Conviction their Safety and Intereſts are the Concern of their Rulers; and when the Arguments uſed on the ſide of Power, fail to evince theſe Points, then may we expect to hear of Racks and Gibbets, and Inquiſitions in Plenty, and the moſt worthy Members of the Cammunity deprived of their Places of Power to guard the Rights of the People. Aſſemblies and Right of Trial by Juries, muſt be undermined by degrees, but haſtened as much as poſſible, leſt a new Adminiſtration ſhould be forced in by a deſperate People, before things can be thoroughly eſtabliſhed—A Man muſt be ſlow of Underſtanding indeed, to be at any Loſs for the Tendency of preſent Meaſures.—Dominica is taxed by Prerogative alone, without pretence of Parliament; and what is the Difference in the Condition of the whole continent, beſides the Pretence? THE
Connecticut COURANT.

Containing the freſheſt Advices, Both Foreign and Domeſtick.

COMPLAINANT. N°. IV.

Noſce Teipſum.

I Will inform my Engliſh readers, that the ſhort motto I have choſen is literally tranſlated by two Engliſh words, viz. KNOW THYSELF. And a diſregard of a precept ſo ſhort, ſo eaſily remembered, and of ſuch importance to peace at home and abroad, is what I ſhall this week complain of.

The natural pride of mankind, ſets them upon caſting a mantle over their own infirmities, and magnifying in their own view, all that is amiable in themſelves; and from the ſame principle, in order to obtain a compariſon advantageous to themſelves, the characters of others muſt neceſſarily be depreciated.——Divines tell us, that "Pride is our maſter corruption, and the hardeſt to be ſubdued." For my part, I am not about to take upon me to decide any theological points—I will leave that for the clergy to do —but this I will be bold to ſay, that pride is one of the greateſt enemies to civil and ſocial happineſs, that I can complain of; but the principal article I exhibit againſt it, in this paper is, that it hides a man from himſelf, and makes him appear ridiculous in the eyes of others. It puts him upon boldly pretending to endowments and qualifications that all his acquaintance of common ſenſe, know he is utterly deſtitute of, and upon enveighing with much confidence and ſelf-importance, againſt thoſe vices and infirmities in others, which he is generally known to be guilty of himſelf; it makes a man inſenſible of his own importance, and ſets him upon deciding and determining in matters evidently beyond his ſphere——and it does a thouſand other things very hurtful to mankind, and productive of much employment to a profeſs'd Complainant, that I muſt now paſs over, as foreign to the preſent ſubject. Pray what is it but this univerſal evil, more than commonly predominant in Superbus, that makes him ſo exceſſively careful of his own reputation, and ſo monſtrouſly cenſorious in his treatment of others, and at the ſame time arrogate to himſelf the praiſe of being one exceeding tender of other men's characters, exceeding modeſt, and exceeding humble?——No man exclaims with ſo much vehemence againſt detraction as he, and yet no man is more frequently guilty of it. But how? does he utter any downright ſcandalous aſſertions concerning his neighbours? O no; he has a ſurer way of convincing himſelf, and, as he imagines, the world too, that he is peculiarly tender in handling men's reputations. If there be any thing ſaid in his company, to the detriment of another, he takes occaſion to cenſure that diſpoſition there is mankind to defame and ſlander their neighbours, and aſſures that he abhors a tale-bearer, but concludes with aſſuring them, to this purpoſe, concerning the perſon whoſe reputation is on the carpet, "However, I muſt confeſs I have heard and known ſo much, that I wiſh I could ſay I believed there was no truth in the report, and indeed far worſe reports than that too."——Here this charitable, ſlander-hating Superbus has done more to blaſt the reputation in queſtion than all the reſt of the company. When Superbus has been uttering ſome very important ſcandal againſt another, fatal to his reputation, by way of hint (for he never poſitively aſſerts any thing of this nature) I have ſome times wondered how he could find any expedient for keeping his own character and ſelf ignorance; but I found this to be ſometimes his method——he would tack on to the tail of his hints and inſinuations—"But then he has many good properties, & we all have our faults; for my part, I have ſo many faults of my own, that I don't want to pick flaws in other people's. I believe the man is very well on many accounts."——Sometimes he finds it neceſſary to ſay ſomething to ſet the ſcandal home, beyond ſuch hints; and then he will tell you what ſuch an one ſaid; or aſk you "whether you ever heard the ugly ſtory concerning ſuch a perſon?" and then proceeds to relate it with all the grimace, and all that emphaſis, in proper places, which will ſerve to blacken the ſtory ſtill further. But here he finds it neceſſary to wipe himſelf a little, becauſe to help along an evil report partakes of the guilt of deviſing it at firſt, and therefore he tells you "That he does'nt know that there is any truth in it——he wiſhes there mayn't be——that people are very apt to ſcandalize their neighbours——he wiſhes ſomething might be done to ſuppreſs it with all his heart."——But his greateſt art lies in ſignificant ſhrugs of his ſhoulders, a well-tim'd ſmile, as though he was unobſerved, ſome very expreſſive ſcowls, twiſts of the mouth, winks, &c. With theſe ſmall ſhot, from his upper works, he often does more execution than he could poſſibly do with a whole broad ſide. But ſo thin is the veil with which he covers himſelf, that he is generally ſeen in his true character, and all men around him dread nothing worſe than diſpleaſing him, for fear of thoſe effects of his reſentment, that touch reputation;——therefore they all treat him as being much their ſuperior, applaud all he does, and even load his moſt glaring infirmities with the higheſt encomiums. This has confirm'd him in his ignorance of himſelf, made him more impetuous in his reſentments, of every ſlight that he imagines is put upon him, and more unguarded in aſperſing others. If it be aſked, how I determine this proceeds from pride? I anſwer, the whole tenor of his conduct evinces it. And in addition to this, I may ſay, he is not only incapable of bearing cenſure, but impatient without continual praiſe. This is ſo apparent to others, and yet he is ſo ignorant of it himſelf, that many find their advantage in it, and his foibles and infirmities find fuel from their applauſes. Further, his ſmall ſhot are projected at thoſe who are near upon a level with himſelf, and his undermining operations chiefly reſpect thoſe who are riſing to equality with himſelf in the public eſteem. As to friendſhip, he never felt its power, except for his own dear ſelf; for calumny, inſtead of beneficenſe, will every man meet with from him who does not allow and reverence in him, properties and qualifications that, by no means, belong to him. And to evince his conduct to ariſe from pride and ſelf ignorance, I need only ſay, that, if he ſhould ſee his own picture in this complaint, he would be ſo far from owning it, as to find an original ſomewhere elſe. I know men, blind to their own infirmities, are not eaſily convinced——an attempt of this kind, is like holding a ſhingle for a man to ſee his face in inſtead of a looking glaſs.

What is it but this ſelf ignorance, that makes Sordidus, a moſt notorious miſer, exclaim ſo violently againſt avarice, & ſpeakingneſs? If he feels any of them in himſelf, yet he is ſo ignorant of the outward and apparent tokens thereof in his conduct, as to ſuppoſe the world will account him generous [illegible] loudly applauds generoſity.

And is it not from the ſame cauſe, that the moſt unqualified and incompetent judges are frequently the moſt forward in deciding the merit and character of men, ſermons, and books? With regard only to this very Connecticut Courant, there are a great many that take it, that have neither taſte nor learning to decide as to the merit of any of the labours of the preſs, and yet they are the moſt forward to do it. I take it, that, in a dearth of news, a periodical Gazette or Courant is the proper vehicle of miſcellaneous obſervations to the public; and it was always an honor to any paper that it contained ſome drollery to ſeaſon the miſcellany for the palates of thoſe who cannot reliſh plain, ſober, naked truth. But the greateſt part of the readers of this paper are ignorant of this truth; and becauſe they pay for the paper, have taken upon them to laſh me off as being a fooliſh, ſilly fellow. Some of your ſerious, ſelf important people, that can ſcarcely write their names, have thought that ſuch ſtuff was not fit for the news paper, ——if I had fill'd my paper with divinity-words, whether there had been a ſentiment in it or no, or if I had put in ſome eke's and aye's, it would have done, but then I ſhould have diſpleaſed ſome of the more ſprightly, and I believe judicious of the readers.

Mr. PRINTER,

Y*OUR paper labours under the greateſt diſcouragements of any one News Paper on the continent. The fierce combatants for an election are almoſt the only perſons that will write for you, where you will be ſure to promote a party, if not be called a party man. I undertook to write partly for your benefit, partly for my own diverſion, and principally* for the public good; and in order to anſwer my purpoſe, by gaining attention, I thought it convenient to introduce myſelf in a ludicrous manner. But I find ſo many criticks engag'd to pick my bones, and ſome of them ſuch ſelf-important, ſelf-ignorant critcks as I ſcorn to be meat for, that I think it beſt to creep into retirement, and complain to myſelf only.——Unleſs I can have ſufficent evidence that the major part of your readers had rather open their ears to me than not, they ſhall hear from me no more.—In the mean time I adviſe you to fill up your vacant page with Bunyan's Holy war, continued from week to week, or ſome work that can't offend ſerious ears. or rather, as ſome have found fault that I have ſaid nothing new, invent ſome ſtrange ſtory about apparitions, ſhipwrecks, &c. I believe that may do as well. And now, I hope I may be excuſed, for inſerting in verſe, ready done to my hand, a fable we read in our ſpelling books.

ONce on a time a ſon & ſire, we're told,
The ſtripling tender, & the father old,
Purchas'd a jack aſs at a country fare,
To eaſe their limbs, & hawk about their ware
But as the ſluggiſh animal was weak,
They fear'd if both ſhould mount, his back would break.
Up gets the boy, the father leads the aſs.
And thro' the gazing croud attempts to paſs.
Forth from the throng the grey beards hobble out,
And hail the cavalcade with feeble ſhout.
This the reſpect to feeble age you ſhow?
And this the duty you to parents owe?
He beats the hoof, and you are ſet aſtride;
Sirrah! get down, and let your father ride.
As Grecian lads were ſeldom void of grace,
The decent, duteous youth reſign'd his place.
Then a freſh murmur thro' the rabble ran,
Boys, girls, wives, widows, all attack the man.
Sure never was brute beaſt ſo void of n[illegible]
Have you no pity for the pretty creature?
——To your own baby ſo unkind?
Here, Sukey, Bill, Betty, put the child behind.
Old Dapple next the clown's compaſſion claim'd
'Tis wonderment them boobies an't aſham'd,
Two at a time upon a poor dumb beaſt!
They might as well have carry'd him at leaſt
The pair ſtill pliant to the partial voice,
Diſmount and bear the aſs—then what a noiſe!
Huzza's, loud laughs, low gibes & bitter joke
From the yet ſilent ſire theſe words provoke,
Proceed, my boy, nor heed their further call,

CONSTANTINOPLE, Octo. 1.

WE are viſited here with all the ſcourges from heaven. Some time ago we had two ſhocks of an earthquake; and 12 days ago there happened a violent Storm of wind and heavy rain, at the village of Catali, in Aſia, nine miles from hence. The waters ruſhed down in ſuch torrents from the neighbouring mountains, that many houſes fell by the rapidity of them, & 72 perſons periſhed.

On Saturday laſt, about midnight a dreadful fire broke out in the quarter of the Franks, called Pera. Fifty houſes were entirely conſumed, moſt of them large ones, inhabitted chiefly by Franck merchants, and by drugomen, with ſome ſhops. The palaces of the Dutch ambaſſador, the Neapolitan Envoy, and the Ruſſian Reſident, two houſes of the Engliſh factory, and a ſmall Roman catholic convent, were burnt down.

Nov. 17. The following is privately handed about at the Weſt end of the Town, as an authentic extract of a letter from a noble Earl at Bath, to an Eminent Lord in London: "You aſk, if returning health will induce me to think of reſuming public buſineſs? Is it poſſible that you ſhould make ſuch a queſtion? What has been the whole tenor of my life? Have not my actions ever teſtified, that inactivity is heterogenious to my nature; and that with me the public ſervice has always ſuperſeded private eaſe? What! but an inceſſant attendance (in the intervals of health) of the parliamentary concerns of the nation (and an unremitting attention to the general welfare? And were providence to bleſs me with renewed health and ſtrength do you imagine me, can you imagine me capable of forſaking my country, becauſe too many of my ungrateful countrymen have raſhly taken it into their heads that I have forſaken it already? think, my friend, more highly of my Patriotiſm.—Do not ſmile at the word; for, proſtituted as it is and has been, our language furniſhes me with no other, whoſe real meaning can ſo emphatically ſpeak the ruling paſſion of my ſoul."

HARTFORD, February 8.

We hear from Hebron, that on Thurſday night laſt, as Mr. Orlando Mack was returning home from a nigh neighbour's in that terrible ſtorm of wind and ſnow, about nine o'clock, being in the 75th year of his age, the ſnow being very deep, the poor old man was ſo fatigued, as to be obliged to yield, and cry for help, but, alas! in vain, as none hear'd his voice but a widow unable to afford him help. He wallowed until he was within ten rods of his own houſe, and then reſign'd to the intemperate climate and next day was found froze to death. The ſtorm was attended with ſuch an unuſual bluſter that his family were not capable of hearing his voice, and ſo thick, that none could do more than feel the way. The jury of inqueſt was ſummoned, and found a verdict, viz. A caſual Death.

ADVICE to YOUTH.

While urg'd by warm & youthful blood,
You pleaſure court, as the chief good
Of mortals here below,
Let friendſhip kindly now dictate,
How to avoid the wretched fate,
Which from this ſource will flow.
From midnight revels keep away,
Where Bacchus rules with ſovereign ſway,
And miſchiefs ſtill attend;
Leſt prompted by th' intemp'rate God,
Thy dagger drink the vital blood,
Of thy moſt valu'd friend!
Next ſhun the Harlot's falſe embrace,
Where ruin with a ſmiling face,
And poignant evils dwell:
Tho' all Arabia's ſweets do ſhed,
Their fragrance o'er, th' unhallow'd bed,
Her ways lead down to hell.
For wint'ry age will ſoon come on,
And all your fleeting joys be gone!
Then conſcience like a fiend,
Will hourly haunt your guilty breaſt,
Nor night nor day will yield you reſt:
In pain your days will end.
But would you taſte of real joy,
And pleaſures which will never cloy,
Still walk in virtue's ways;
Keep the celeſtial maid in ſight,
She'll give ineffable delight,
And crown with bliſs your days.
Serene your hours will calmly glide,
And peace will ever at your ſide,
A conſtant gueſt remain:
Shou'd th' earth be from its baſis hurl'd,
And ruin crown a trembling world,
You will the ſhock ſuſtain.
Reflect on this ye thoughtleſs, who,
Ideal forms of bliſs purſue;
Reflect 'ere 'tis too late:
Recede from vice's dangerous lure,
In time make your election ſure;
Or think what ills await!

LETTER VI.

My dear Countrymen,

IT may perhaps be objected againſt the arguments that have been offered to the public, concerning the legal power of the parliament, "that it has always exerciſed the power of impoſing duties for the purpoſe of raiſing a revenue, on the productions of theſe colonies carried to Great Britain; which may be called a tax on them." To this objection I anſwer, that this is no violation of the rights of the colonies, it being implied in the relation between them and Great Britain, that they ſhould not carry ſuch commodities to other nations, as ſhould enable them to interfere with the mother country. The impoſition of duties on theſe commodities when brought to her is only a conſequence of this her material right; and if the point is thoroughly examined, they will be found to be laid on the people of the mother country. Whatever theſe duties are, they muſt proportionably raiſe the price of the goods, and conſequently the duties muſt be paid by the conſumers. In this light they were conſidered by the parliament, in the 25 Cha. II. ch. 7. ſ. 2d, which ſays, that the productions of the plantations were carried from one to another free from all cuſtoms, while the ſubjects of this your kingdom of England have paid great cuſtoms and impoſitions for what of them have been ſpent HERE." &c.

Beſides, if Great Britain exports theſe commodities again, the duties will injure her own trade, ſo that ſhe cannot hurt us without plainly and immediately hurting herſelf; and this is our check againſt her acting arbitrarily in this reſpect.

It * may, perhaps, be further objected, "that it being granted that ſtatutes made for regulating trade are binding upon us, it will be difficult for any perſons but the makers of the laws to determine, which of them are made for the regulating of trade, & which for raiſing a revenue; and that from hence may ariſe confuſion."

To this I anſwer, that the objection is of no force in the preſent caſe or ſuch as reſemble it, becauſe the act now in queſtion is formed, expreſſly for the ſole purpoſe of raiſing a revenue.

However, ſuppoſing the deſign of the parliament had not been expreſt, the objection ſeems to me of no weight, with regard to the influence, which thoſe who may make it might expect it ought to have on the conduct of theſe colonies.

It is true that impoſitions for raiſing a revenue, may be hereafter called regulations of trade; but names will not change the nature of things. Indeed we ought firmly to believe, that is an undoubted truth confirmed by the unhappy experience of many ſtates heretofore free, that unleſs the moſt watchful attention be exerted, a new ſervitude may be ſlipped upon us under the ſanction of uſual and reſpectable terms.

Thus the Cæſars ruined the Roman liberty, under the titles of the tribunitial & dictatorial authorities——old and venerable dignities, known in the moſt flouriſhing times of freedom. In immitation of the ſame policy James II. when he meant to eſtabliſh popery, talked of liberty of conſcience, the moſt ſacred of all liberties; and had thereby almoſt deceived the diſſenters into deſtruction.

All artful rulers, who ſtrive to extend their power beyond its juſt limits, endeavour to give to their attempts as much ſemblance of legality as poſſible. Thoſe who ſucceed them may venture to go a little farther, for each new encroachment will be ſtrengthened by a former. ‡ "That which is now ſupported by examples, growinging old, will become an example itſelf," and thus ſupport freſh uſurpations.

A free people, therefore, can never be too quick in obſerving, nor too firm in oppoſing the beginnings of alterations, either in form or reality, reſpecting inſtitutions formed for their ſecurity. The firſt leads to the laſt; on the other hand, nothing is more certain than that the forms of liberty may be retained, when the ſubſtance is gone. In government as well as in religion, the "letter killeth, but the ſpirit giveth life." ‖

I will beg leave to enforce this remark by a few inſtances. The crown, by the conſtitution, has the prerogative of creating peers; the exiſtance of that order in due number and dignity, is eſſential to the conſtitution; and if the crown did not exerciſe that prerogative, the peerage muſt have long ſince decreaſed ſo much as to have loſt its proper influence. Suppoſe a prince for ſome unjuſt purpoſes, ſhould from time to time advance ſo many needy, profligate wretches, to that rank, that all the independance of the Houſe of Lords ſhould be deſtroyed there would then be a manifeſt violation of the conſtitution, under the appearance of legal prerogative.

The houſe of commons claim the privilege of forming all money bills, and will not ſuffer either of the other branches of the legiſlature to add to or alter them; contending that their power, ſimply extends to an acceptance or rejection of them. This privilege appears to be juſt; but under pretence of this juſt privilege, the houſe of commons has claimed a licence of tacking to money bills, clauſes relating to many things of a totally different kind, and have thus forced them, in a manner, on the crown & lords. This ſeems to be an abuſe of that privilege, and it may be vaſtly more abuſed. Suppoſe a future houſe, influenced by ſome diſplaced, diſcontented demagogues, in a time of danger, ſhould tack to a money bill ſomething ſo injurious to the king and peers, that they would not aſſent to it—— and yet the commons ſhould obſtinately inſiſt on it; the whole kindom would be expoſed to ruin, under the appearance of maintaining a valuable privilege.

In theſe caſes it might be difficult for a while to determine, whether the King intended to exerciſe his prerogative in a conſtitutional manner or not; or whether the commons inſiſted on their demand factiouſly or for the public good: But ſurely the conduct of the crown, or of the houſe, would in time ſufficiently explain itſelf.

Ought not the people therefore to watch?

* If any one ſhould obſerve that no oppoſition has been made to the legality of the 4th Geo. III. ch. 15, which is the firſt act of parliament that ever impoſed duties on the importations in America, for the expreſs purpoſe of raiſing a revenue there, I anſwer, firſt, that though that act expreſſly mentions the raiſing a revenue in America, yet it ſeems that it had as much in view "the improving and ſecuring the trade between the ſame and Great Britain," which words are part of its title: And the preamble ſays, "Whereas it is expedient that new proviſions and regulations ſhould be eſtabliſhed for improving the revenue of this kingdom, and for extending and ſecuring the navigation & commerce between Great Britain and your Majeſty's dominions in America, which, by the peace, have been ſo happily extended and enlarged, &c." Secondly, all the duties, mentioned in that act, are impoſed ſolely on the productions and manufactures of foreign countries, and not a ſingle duty laid on any production or manufacture of our mother country. Thirdly, the authority of the provincial aſſemblies is not therein ſo plainly attacked, as by the laſt act, which makes proviſion for defraying the charges of the adminiſtration of juſtice, and the ſupport of civil government. Fourthly, that it being doubtful whether the intention of the 4th of Geo. III. ch. 15, was not ſo much to regulate trade as to raiſe a revenue, the minds of the people here were wholly engroſſed by the terror of the Stamp Act, then impending over them, about the intention of which there could be no doubt.

These reaſons ſo far diſtinguiſh 4th Geo. III. ch. 15 from the laſt act, that it is not to be wondered at, that the firſt ſhould have been ſubmitted to, tho' the laſt ſhould excite the moſt univerſal and ſpirited oppoſition. For this will be found on the ſtricteſt examination to be, in the principle on which it is founded and in the conſequences that muſt attend it, if poſſible, more deſtructive than the Stamp-Act. It is, to ſpeak plainly, a prodigy in our laws, not having one Britiſh feature.

to obſerve facts ? to ſearch into cauſes ? to inveſtigate deſigns ? and have they not a right of judging from the evidence before them, on no ſlighter points than their liberty and happineſs ? It would be trifling, wherever a Britiſh government is eſtabliſhed to make uſe of any other arguments to prove ſuch a right. It is ſufficient to remind the reader of the day on which King William landed at Torbay. §

I will now apply what has been ſaid to the preſent queſtion. The nature of any impoſitions laid by parliament on theſe colonies, muſt determine the deſign in laying them. It may not be eaſy in every inſtance to diſcover the deſign. Whenever it is doubtful, I think ſubmiſſion cannot be dangerous ; nay, it muſt be right : For in my opinion, there is no privilege theſe colonies claim, which they ought, in duty and prudence, more earneſtly to maintain and defend, than the authority of the Britiſh parliament to regulate the trade of all her dominions. Without this authority the benefits ſhe enjoys from our commerce, muſt be loſt to her : The Bleſſings we enjoy from our dependance upon her, muſt be loſt to us ; her ſtrength muſt decay ; her glory vaniſh ; and ſhe cannot ſuffer, without our partaking in her misfortune. Let us therefore cheriſh her intereſts as our own, & give her every thing that it becomes Freemen to give, or to receive.

The nature of any impoſitions ſhe may lay upon us, may in general be known, by conſidering how far they relate to the preſerving, in due order, the connection betwen the ſeveral parts of the Britiſh empire. One thing we may be aſſured of, which is this ; whenever a ſtatute impoſes duties on commodities, to be paid only upon their exportation from Great Britain to theſe colonies it is not a regulation of trade, but a deſign to raiſe a revenue upon us. Other inſtances may happen, which it may not be neceſſary now to dwell on. I hope theſe colonies will never, to their laſt exiſtance, want underſtanding ſufficient to diſcover the intentions of thoſe who rule over them, nor the reſolution neceſſary for aſſerting their intereſts. They will always have the ſame rights that all free ſtates have of judging when their privileges are invaded, and of uſing all prudent meaſures for preſerving them.

LONDON, Nov. 12.

We hear that the intended new ſettlement on the Ohio is the fineſt in North America ; the brave general Lyman, is to be made governor thereof, on account of his diſtinguiſhed merit and great ſervices during the laſt war in that country.

November 13th, That the public may know who General Lyman is, at preſent ſo much talked of, we are enbled to ſatisfy their curioſity by the following account from a gentleman who ſerved under him many years during the late war, viz. When the war broke out in the year 1755, he was one of his Majeſty's council in the colony of Connecticut, and was in the beſt practice of the law, to which he was bred, of any man in that colony ; and tho' he had a wife & ſeveral children, generouſly offered his ſervice, and was then appointed and commiſſioned by the ſeveral governors who raiſed troops for his Majeſty's ſervice that campaign, a Major-General of theſe forces, which character he ſuſtained through the whole war ; he commanded the left wing, on the plain where the famous French General Baron Dieſkau made his firſt attack cloſely purſuing more than half the Engliſh army in a precipitate flight from the woods ; he ſtopt the career of this flying party, and brought them back, to the line, otherwiſe they would have flung the whole into confuſion, and muſt have given the Baron an eaſy victory. He gave all the orders in that attack, and tho' the Baron had a firm body of regular troops, advancing in a column, with their bayonets, yet they repulſed his army and wounded the Baron, by which means he was afterwards made priſoner. He was in the thickeſt of the fire through the whole attack.

After the Baron's firſt repulſe he attempted to attack the other wing of the army ; and Gen. Johnſon being wounded, General Lyman ſent his orders to that wing, the chief command devolving upon him.

He was next year under the command of L. Loudin ; the part he acted in conciliating the provincials (whoſe prejudices were very high) to unite with the Britiſh forces, is well known to the Commander in chief and his principal officers.

In the next year 1758, he ſerved with General Abercrombie, and was with him at the important attack of the lines of Ticonderoga. He was alſo, the ſame year, in the engagement where Lord Howe was killed and with the column he commanded, took above 100 priſoners, which was more than two thirds of thoſe taken that day.

The next year he was with Sir Jeffery Amherſt, in taking Ticonderoga and Crown-point. The year after, at the reduction of Fort Lewis at Oſwego, and at the taking of Montreal, and continued under him till he was ſent to the Havanna, under the Earl of Albermarle, where he had the command of the provincial troops.

General Lyman was during the ſervice, often ſent out with the command of large parties on difficult and fatiguing marches againſt the enemy, and has, in the late war, been in fifteen engagements with the enemy, and never gave way in any one, but when he was ordered by his ſuperiors, and that happened only in the unhappy attack of the lines at Ticonderoga.

He might have made money, by concerning himſelf with the ſupply of the troops, to which he was urged by ſome ; but being ſenſible it would leſſen his influence, & render the troops leſs ſerviceable to his Majeſty, he rejected the propoſal himſelf, and prevented others from giving into it.——He has been in England four years in ſoliciting the new ſettlement, which, to the honour of his preſent Majeſty is now adopted.

" By a letter from Hiſpaniola, to a gentleman in this town, we are informed that the french inhabitants, with their ſlaves, in number about 8000 ſouls, having poſſeſſed themſelves of a part of the iſland called Ence a Petre, where they were making ſettlements the old ſpaniſh inhabiants came ſuddenly upon them in the dead of the night, about ſix weeks ago, and moſt cruelly cut their throats, and ſlew almoſt every ſoul. On the ſame night they proceeded to a place called Jacamel, where they ſlew 600 more ; but an alarm ſpreading over the iſland, the french beat to arms, and a general engagement enſued, wherein the ſpaniards were routed, & about 550 of the murderers taken priſoners, beſides a great ſlaughter. When this letter came away every thing was in the greateſt confuſion, the old ſpaniſh inhabitants being determined to murder every frenchman in their power.

Extract of a Letter from Philadelphia.

"Ten Indians have been killed by one Stub ——He invited them to his houſe, near Fort Auguſtus, under Pretence of making up a Quarrel he had with them ; he made them all drunk, and then killed them——200. Pounds Reward are offered for apprehending Stub, who is well known in Philadelphia."

BOSTON, Feb. 4.

The Diſorder among the horſes prevails at the Eaſtern Parts : A Number on board a Veſſel at Ipſwich, outward bound for the Weſt Indies, were obliged to be taken out, one of them was ſo violently ſeized, that he beat his Head againſt the Sides of the Veſſel till he killed himſelf.

We hear that a Veſſel arrived at Newbury Port, from St. Euſtatia, brought Advice, that above 60 Veſſels had arrived at the Iſlands in the Weſt Indies, which had been blown off from theſe Northern Coaſts, in the cold ſtormy Weather the laſt Fall.

HARTFORD, February 15.

Laſt Friday was brought to this town, pinion'd, one Alexnader Grahams, a tranſient perſon, who was ſome time ſince detected in ſtealing ſundry articles of men's wearing apparel, together with about thirty ſhillings in caſh from a perſon in Hebron.——He was brought before the inferior court then ſitting in this place, where he confeſs'd the crime, for which he was adjudg'd to be whipt ten ſtripes on the naked body—which he very patiently received the day following.

ANECDOTE.

A Certain noble Roman having done the Republic ſignal ſervices in the field, and beſides his unparrallel'd fortitude, had given the higheſt proofs of his abilities, and diſintereſted patriotiſm, in the various departments of the ſtate to which he had been appointed ; at length determined to ſtand for the Conſulſhip——the higheſt office in the ſtate——his election to which, none that knew his worth, doubted of.—It had, it ſeems, by degrees grown into a cuſtom that the candidates on and before the days of election, ſhould offer themſelves to the people, careſs them, ſpeak to each one by name, and take him by the hand, with ſome friendly enquiries of his health, and the like. Theſe cuſtoms, though the firſt ſymptoms of corruption in a ſtate, were now grown ſo into uſe, that it was fatal to neglect them ; and as it was impoſſible each candidate ſhould know the name of every elector, eſpecially thoſe candidates who had ſerved abroad ; they were conſtantly attended by a ſet of men called Nomenclators, the whole buſineſs of whoſe lives it was to know by name every elector or voter, and on theſe days to attend the candidate who employ'd them, and whiſper in his ear the name of each perſon they met.——This noble candidate comply'd with the cuſtom, though it ſeems with not ſo good a grace as his rivals ; for meeting a countryman of no great appearance, and who by hard labour had rendered his hands as hard as a brick, on taking him by the hand, to give him the engaging ſqueze, he could not forbear aſking him, in a jocoſe manner 'if 'he walk'd on his hands, ſince he perceiv'd 'them hard, and full of corns ?'——This perſon was no leſs than the head, or leading man of one of the tribes of voters.——'An ill-tim'd jeſt (ſays Cicero) ſince it de'prived the moſt deſerving man in the ſtate, 'of the honors due to his virtue and deſerts, 'and the republic of an able, valiant and 'patriotic Conſul.' Unfortunate candidate ! were thy hands raw with ſquezing the clumzy fiſt of every clown thou hadſt met for ſeveral days ? thy tongue tired with ten thouſand ſilly, impertinent compliments and enquiries ? or did thy noble ſoul inwardly diſdain to ſtoop to thoſe means of obtaining preferment, in which the moſt ſtaunch, hypocritical ſycophant was the ſureſt of excelling ?——The ſtory is ancient and true—— the moral modern, and a warning to all who mean to ſqueeze into public employ, that they are not delicate, or tender of their palms ; but perſevere, tho' they ſhould even bleed in their country's cauſe.

A Diſſertation upon Truth.

TRuth and reality have all the advantages of appearance, and many more. If the ſhews of any thing be good for any thing, I am ſure ſincerity is better : for why does any man diſſemble, or ſeem to be that which he is not, but becauſe he thinks it good to have ſuch a quality as he pretends to ? for to counterfeit and diſſemble, is to put on the appearance of ſome real excellency.

Now the beſt way in the world for a man to ſeem to be any thing is really to be what he would ſeem to be, beſides that it is many times as troubleſome to make good the pretence of a good quality, as to have it ; and if a man have it not, it is ten to one but he is diſcovered to want it, and then all his pains and labour to ſeem to have it is loſt. There is ſomething unnatural in painting, which a ſkilful eye will eaſily diſcern from native beauty and complexion.

" It is hard to perſonate and act a part long ; for where truth is not at the bottom nature will always be endeavouring to return, and will peep out and betray herſelf ſome time or other. Therefore if any man think it convenient to ſeem good, let him be ſo indeed, and then his goodneſs will appear to every body's ſatisfaction, ſo that upon all accounts ſincerity is true wiſdom. Particularly as to the affairs of this world, Integrity hath many advantages over all the fine and artificial ways of diſſimulation and deceit ; it is much the plainer and eaſier, much the ſafer and more ſecure way of dealing in the world ; it has leſs of troubles and difficulty, of intanglement and perplexity, of danger and hazard in it ; it is the ſhorteſt and neareſt way to our end, carrying us thither in a ſtraight line, and will hold out and laſt longeſt. The arts of deceit & cunning do continually grow weaker and leſs effectual and ſerviceable to them that uſe them ; whereas integrity gains ſtrength by uſe, and more and longer any man practiſeth it the greater ſervice it does him, by confirming his reputation and encouraging thoſe with whom he hath to do, to repoſe the greateſt truſt & confidence in him, which is an unſpeakable advantage in the buſineſs and affairs of life.

" Truth is always conſiſtant with itſelf & nothing to help it out ; it is always near at hand, and ſets upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware ; whereas a lye is troubleſome, and ſets a mans invention upon the rack, and one trick needs a great many more to make it good. It is like building upon a falſe foundation, which continually ſtands in need of props to ſhore it up, & proves at laſt more chargeable, than to have raiſed a ſubſtantial building at firſt upon a true and ſolid foundation ; for ſincerity is firm and ſubſtantial, and there is nothing hollow and unſound in it, and becauſe it is plain & open, fears no diſcovery, of which the crafty man is always in danger, and when he thinks he walks in the dark, all his pretences are ſo tranſparent that he that runs may read them ; he is the laſt man that finds himſelf to be found out, and whilſt he takes it for granted that he makes fools of others, he renders himſelf ridiculous."

Add to all this, that ſincerity is the moſt compendious wiſdom, and an excellent inſtrument for the ſpeedy diſpatch of buſineſs ; it creates confidence in thoſe we have to deal with, ſaves the labour of many inquiries, & brings things to an iſſue in a few words : it is like travelling in a plain beaten road, which commonly brings a man ſooner to his journey's end than by ways, in which men often loſe themſelves, in a word, whatſoever conveniences may be tho't to be in falſhood and diſſimulation, it is ſoon over ; but the inconvenience of it is perpetual, becauſe it brings a man under an everlaſting jealouſy and ſuſpicion, ſo that he is not believed when he ſpeaks truth, nor truſted (perhaps) when he means honeſty, when a man has once forfeited the reputation of his integrity, he is ſet faſt, and nothing will ſerve his turn, neither truth nor falſhood.

And I have often thought that God hath in his great wiſdom hid from men of falſe and diſhoneſt minds the wonderful advantages of truth and integrity to the property even of our worldly affairs ; theſe men are ſo blinded by their covetouſneſs and ambition that they cannot look beyond a preſent advantage, not forbear to ſeize upon it, the by ways never ſo indirect ; they cannot ſee ſo far as to the remoteſt conſequences of a ſteady integrity, and the vaſt benefit and advantages to which it will bring a man at laſt, were but this ſort of men wiſe & clear-ſighted enough to diſcern this, they would be honeſt out of very knavery, not out of any love to honeſty and virtue but with a crafty deſign to promote and advance more effectually their own intereſts ; and therefore the juſtice of the divine providence hath hid this trueſt point of wiſdom from their eyes, that bad men might not be upon equal terms with the juſt and upright, and ſerve their own wicked deſigns by honeſt and lawful means.

" Indeed, if a man were only to deal in the world for a Day, and ſhould never have occaſion to converſe more with mankind, never more need their good opinion or good word, it were then no great matter (ſpeaking as to the concernments of this world) if a man ſpent his reputation all at once, and ventur'd it at one throw ; but if he be to continue in the world, and would have the advantage of converſation whilſt he is in it, let him make uſe of truth and ſincerity in all his words and actions ; for nothing but this will laſt and hold out to the end : all other arts will fail, but TRUTH & INTEGRITY will carry a man through, and bare him out to the laſt."

A PARSON, having mounted the pulpit to preach from thoſe words of the Scripture, 'He that ſows ſparingly ſhall reap ſparingly,' divided, after a vey tedious preamble his ſermon into thirty two points. He was juſt entering upon the firſt point, when, one of his auditory ſtarting up, & making a buſtling motion for going out, the preacher ſeverely reprimanded him for his remiſſneſs in GOD's ſervice, inattention to his word; aſking him where he was going, and about what, in ſuch preſſing haſte? I am going ſaid the other, to fetch my nigt-cap, for I well foreſee we ſhall lie here this night. In fact, the Preacher, having loſt the thread of his diviſions & ſubdiviſions by this interruption, could never find the end of his diſdourſe.—The auditors, at length, loſing all patience, and ſeeing the night coming on apace filed out one after the other. The Preacher, who had been now chafed with the vehemency of his own utterance, and being withal near ſighted, did not percieve this deſertion, and might have continued to cant eternally, had not his ſon, a little boy, the only one of the congregation that ſtill remained, cried out: 'Father, I am very hungry and very ſleepy; 'here are the keys of the church the Clerk 'gave me; and, when you are done, you 'will lock up the doors yourſelf."

N.B. Thoſe perſons that are entirely unacquainted, with Mr. Shandy, and Biſhop Berkley, are ſtrictly charged to paſs no judgment on this paper, unleſs they are willing to ſee their picture drawn at full length, in ſome future Complainant. O.

ABOUT a year and a half ago I ſpent a very agreable week with the celebrated, humourous, and inimitable Triſtram Shandy; I don't know that I can recollect verbatim, any one thing he communicated to me, not having had the leaſt converſation with him ſince; but I am confident that he aſſerted to this purpoſe, that "Great Men in general, keep their HOBBY HORSES —" ———That is, I take it, that, let a man be ever ſo great, his character ever ſo high, his attainments ever ſo exalted, he has ſtill ſome foible, whim, or peculiarity, that, if it does not expoſe him to ridicule, is too apparent to eſcape the notice of his inferiors. I need not enlarge upon the whimſical choice of the word HOBBY HORSE———there is ſomething too ſtriking and expreſſive to eſcape the notice of any that have been much acquainted with him. If I don't miſtake Mr. Shandy, the Hobby Horſe appears principally in ſome favourite topick of diſcourſe, lugg'd unſeaſonably into company, and kept there againſt the will of all preſent but the rider. This he illuſtrates in the character of his worthy, benevolent uncle Toby, who would, on hearing any word that could have the moſt remote tendency to excite a remembrance of fortification in ſome of its branches, bring on a tranſition in converſation, to the ſubject——no matter how abrupt———no matter how remote from the former diſcourſe if there is a word dropp'd that was ever uſed in beſieging or fortifying, it opens a door ſufficiently wide for his Hobby Horſe to enter. I beg the gentleman's pardon for contracting his meaning; for I ſuppoſe that the objects of imagination, meditation and amuſement, are all hobby horſical in a genuine, Shandean ſenſe.——But I chooſe to enter no further into His ſpirit or meaning, than is neceſſary to my preſent purpoſe.——Now, by way of digreſſion, I conclude I ſhall be ſeverely pummelled by ſome of my readers, for making uſe of words that they can't find in their dictionaries: I have only, in ſuch a caſe, to refer them to the gentleman before mentioned as my voucher for the propriety of them.—To return. Mr. Shandy allows a man to mount, and ride up and down as faſt as he pleaſes, provided he hurts no body, and ſo do I——but I don't think he has any right to come prancing into a room full of people, whenever he can find a door open, breaking the ſhins of one, rumpling the petticoats of a ſecond, diſcompoſing the hair of a third, fouling the ſtockings of a fourth, and ſo on, 'til he has made all the company inwardly curſe horſe and rider. Nay, 'tis not barely your "great men," but your little men that too commonly do this, and that is what I now complain of.

The pleaſure as well as profit of converſation is ſo great, that it is with reluctance I ſee perſons of all ranks laying hold on every occaſion of introducing their favourite topicks, to the great diſguſt of the reſt of the company. There is one certain ſtring a man is moſt ſkilful in harping upon, and at all events that ſtring muſt be ſtruck, and ſounded louder than any other, however ungrateful the jargon in the ears of all that hear it——if it tickles the player's ear, no matter for other's. A variety of ſubjects may be very freely handled at the ſame ſitting, by means of a natural, eaſy tranſition, to the entire gratification of all the company. What I have to complain of, is a certain trick ſome people have of hoiſting a ſubject on to the carpet, in an unnatural, abrupt manner, merely becauſe all their talents lye in declaiming upon that ſubject, when 'tis entirely diſagreable to the reſt of the company. If a merchant that had always been bred up in a compting houſe in the city, ſhould turn the diſcourſe, among a company of peaſants, upon premiums, inſurances, diſcount, charter party's, &c. which are the natural ſubjects of talk among peaſons of his own profeſſion, he would as little entertain or edify the circle, as if a peaſant ſhould introduce among the merchants of 'Change, a diſſertation upon the proper ſtrength of runnet to make cheeſe, or the beſt ſituation for a hog's pen. I deſire to know what buſineſs a man has, becauſe he underſtands the mathematicks, and the reſt of us do not, to make the whole company uneaſy for an hour together, with a learned unintelligible harangue upon lines and angles.

Capt. Spritſail is a gentleman of worth & benevolence, but he never enjoys converſation, unleſs the ſubject of it be ſomething relating to navigation, & is almoſt as expert at mounting the Sea Horſe, as uncle Toby is the War Horſe———A ſingle anecdote may ſuffice.———He was, the other evening, in company with a number of clergymen, where he ſat for ſome time, very uneaſy, as there was nothing that had any diſtant relation to his common place theme. The gentlemen were attempting an explanation of the act of flying in birds, upon mechanical principles, and the Captain's good ſtars ſo ordered it that there was mention made "that birds were frequently driven off to ſea by heavy winds." This was too lucky an opportunity for the Captain to ſlip; at the mention of ſea, and heavy winds, his eyes ſparkled and with all boldneſs he mounted, and rode gloriouſly through the remainder of the viſit.—He aſſur'd them the obſervation was true, gave a large account of penguins, ſhearwaters, tropic birds, &c. Related many of the hardſhips he had endur'd in ſtorms, characterized a good ſeaman, gave a very particular account of the variation of the compaſs, & concluded with commending his own ſhip as being the beſt ſea boat in the harbour, ſaying "ſhe would lye too like a duck."

During this time the clergymen, interrupted and uneaſy applied themſelves to ſmoaking, meditating and nodding; ſo that it may be truly ſaid, that they knew no more of any one ſentence utter'd, after the firſt, which concern'd the point in debate, than if they had been faſt aſleep. However, one of them, more from politeneſs than inclination, recollecting the words lye too, aſk'd the Captain what they meant? This interrogation gave him new life. He, in a tranſport, proceeded to explain the terms, and from thence to give an account of a ſhip, hull & rigging throughout, 'til the gentlemen were ſo weary as to drop off one after another, tho' he ſeiz'd one or two of the laſt, and compell'd them to hear how wonderfully he eſcaped on the Frying-pan ſhoals.

Ergoſus is an everlaſting chopper of logick, and becauſe he imagines he cuts a very brilliant figure in mataphyſical diſputations, he is continually intruding upon company with abſtruce queſtions, that he may have the glory of anſwering them. He takes this to be the characteriſtick of a great man, & is therefore ſure to ſhine wherever he goes. News papers, magazines and hiſtories, are too trifling for his peruſal. He once lik'd Watts's Logick, but he begins now to think it too ſuperficial. He has a certain ſet of everlaſting truths (as he calls them) on which he will build juſt what hypotheſis he pleaſes, and confound all ſuch as are ſo unhappy as to mingle in ſociety with him. His whole converſation is a ſtring of ſylogiſms. He can never enjoy a diſcourſe relating to matters of fact, however intereſting to the nation or country, but watches the firſt opportunity of hauling in ſome abſtruſe, ſpeculative point that will give him full play at his beloved a priori. He is ſo intent upon what Congreve calls "The cauſation of cauſes, and the cauſes of things" that he never hires a man to put up a length of fence, before he has proved, from arguments drawn from the nature of things, that it is fitting and proper that the fence be put up: and by extending the argument a little further, ſhews that 'tis infinitely fitting, and very fairly deduces as a conſequence, that 'tis infinite folly to omit it.——I intended, when I began, to have proceeded further, but will conclude my paper with an account of the laſt evening's viſit, where Ergoſus was preſent. A very reſpectable company was engaged in converſation upon the Britiſh conſtitution, the power of the navy, the liberties of the colonies, and ſuch like ſubjects, too trifling to engage his attention, and he waited with impatience for ſome opportunity of ſhewing himſelf in his proper element, which indeed happened to his great ſatiſfaction, & my as great chagrin, in the manner following. A young lady preſent, upon ſnuffing the candle, which burnt very dim, ſaid, "I believe theſe are the worſt candles that ever exiſted." "Exiſted!" ſaid he haſtily; 'can a candle exiſt?' I forget what anſwer the young lady made, but in general remember that it was pertinent and proper. But, having taken occaſion, Ergoſus improved it in ſhewing that matter did not exiſt out of the mind—that there was no heat in fire, nor cold in ice—that what we ſaw one another's faces by was not properly light—and that, ſtrictly ſpeaking, we never do ſee one another's faces—— and twenty other things, that ended in breaking the company up, and put an end to all diſcourſe upon Old England, and our liberties. Now, what buſineſs or right had Ergoſus to mount his ſtrong headed, plaguy Hobby, and ride ſo furiouſly into ſuch company as that? what right had he to drive off the ſtage ſuch good converſation, only to give his unruly bonny room to friſk and prance about, and all to prove the non exiſtance of a candle, that every one ſaw with both his eyes?—— Dear Mr. Shandy, ſay not a word in his favour; we ſhall be beat out of our chriſtian names, if ſuch fellows are allowed to gallop at their pleaſure thro' thick and thin. LETTERS from a FARMER in Pennſylvania, to the Inhabitants of the Britiſh Colonies.

LETTER VIII.

My dear Countrymen,

IN my opinion a dangerous example is ſet in the laſt act relating to theſe colonies. The parliament to levy money upon us for raiſing a revenue is therein avowed and exerted. Regarding the act on this ſingle principle; I muſt again repeat, and I think it my duty to repeat, that to me it appears to be unconſtitutional.

No man who conſiders the conduct of parliament ſince the repeal of the Stamp Act, and the diſpoſition of many people at home, can doubt, that the chief object of attention there is, to uſe Mr. Grenville's expreſſion, "providing that the dependance and obedience of the colonies be aſſerted and maintained."

Under the influence of this notion, inſtantly on repealing the Stamp Act, an act paſſed declaring the power of parliament to bind theſe colonies in all caſes whatſoever. This however was only planting a barren tree, that caſt a ſhade indeed over the colonies, but yielded no fruit. It being determined to enforce the authority on which the Stamp Act was founded; the parliament having never renounced the right, as Mr. Pitt adviſed them to do; and it being thought proper to diſguiſe that authority in ſuch a manner, as not again to alarm the colonies; ſome little time was required to find a method by which both theſe points ſhould be united.— At laſt the ingenuity of Mr. Grenville and his party accompliſhed the matter, as it was thought, in "an act for granting certain duties in the Britiſh colonies and plantations in America; for allowing drawbacks, &c. which is the title of the act laying duties on paper, &c.

The parliament having ſeveral times before impoſed duties to be paid in America, it 'was expected no doubt, that the repetition 'of ſuch a meaſure would be paſſed over as 'an uſual thing. But to have done this without expreſly "aſſerting and maintaining" the power of parliament to take our money without our conſent, and to apply it as they pleaſe, would not have been ſufficiently declarative of its ſupremacy, nor ſufficiently depreſſive of American freedom.

Therefore it is, that in this memorable act we find it expreſly "provided," that money ſhall be levied upon us without our conſent, for purpoſes, that render it, if poſſible, more dreadful than the Stamp-Act.

That act, alarming, as it was, declared, the money thereby to be raiſed, ſhould be applied "towards the defraying the expences of defending, protecting and ſecuring the Britiſh colonies and plantations in America;" and it is evident from the whole act that by the word "Britiſh," were intended colonies and plantations ſettled by Britiſh people, and not generally, thoſe ſubject to the Britiſh crown. That act therefore ſeemed to have ſomething gentle and kind in its intention, and to aim only at our own welfare: But the act, now objected to, impoſes duties upon the Britiſh colonies, "to defray the expences of defending, protecting and ſecuring his Majeſty's DOMINIONS in America."

What a change of words! what an incomputable addition, to the expences intended by the Stamp Act! his Majeſty's dominions comprehend not only the Britiſh colonies, but alſo the conquered provinces of Canada and Florida; and the Britiſh garriſons of Nova-Scotia; for theſe do not deſerve the name of colonies.

What juſtice is there in making us pay for "defending, protecting and ſecuring" theſe places? What benefit can we, or have we ever derived from them? None of them was conquered for us, nor will be defended, protected and ſecured for us.

In fact, however advantageous the ſubduing or keeping any of theſe countries, may be to G. Britain, the acquiſition is greatly injurious to theſe colonies. Our chief property conſiſts in lands. Theſe would have been of a much greater value, if ſuch prodigious additions had not been made to the Britiſh territories on this continent. The natural increaſe of our own people, if confined within the colonies, would have raiſed the value ſtill higher, and higher, every fifteen or twenty years; beſides, we ſhould have lived more compactly together, and have been therefore more able to reſiſt any enemy. But now the inhabitants will be thinly ſcattered over an immenſe region, as thoſe who want ſettlements, will chooſe to make new ones, rather than pay great prices for old ones.

Theſe are the conſequences to the colonies, of the hearty aſſiſtance they gave to G. Britain in the late war——a war undertaken ſolely for her own benefit. The objects of it were, the ſecuring to herſelf the tracts of land on the back of theſe colonies, with the Indian trade; and Nova-Scotia, with the fiſhery. Theſe and much more has that kingdom gained; but the inferior animals, that hunted with the lion, have been amply rewarded for all the ſweat and blood their loyalty coſt them, by the honour of having ſweated and bled in ſuch company!

I will not go ſo far as to ſay, that Canada and Nova-Scotia are curbs on New England; the chain of forts through the back woods, on the middle provinces; & Florida on the reſt; But I will venture to ſay, that if the products of Canada, Nova-Scotia and Florida deſerve any conſideration, the two firſt of them are only rivals of our northern colonies, and the other of our ſouthern.

It has been ſaid that without the conqueſt of theſe countries, the colonies could not have been "protected, defended and ſecured:" If that is true, it may with as much propriety be ſaid, that Great Britain could not have been "defended, protected and ſecured," without that conqueſt: For the colonies are parts of her empire, which it as much concerns her as them, to keep out of the hands of any other power.

But theſe colonies, when they were much weaker, defended themſelves, before this conqueſt was made; and could again do it, againſt any that might properly be called their enemies. If France and Spain indeed ſhould attack them, as members of the Britiſh empire, perhaps they might be diſtreſſed but it would be in a Britiſh quarrel.

The largeſt account I have ſeen of the number of people in Canada does not make them exceed ninety thouſand. Florida can hardly be ſaid to have any inhabitants. [illegible] is computed that there are in our colo[illegible] millions. Our force therefore muſt inc[illegible] with a diſproportion to the growth of th[illegible] ſtrength, that would render us very ſafe.

This being the ſtate of the caſe, I c[illegible] think it juſt, that theſe colonies, labou[illegible] under ſo many misfortunes, ſhould be l[illegible]ed with taxes to maintain countries, not only not uſeful, but hurtful to them. The ſupport of Florida and Canada coſts yearly, it is ſaid, half a million ſterling From hence we may have ſome gueſs of the load that is to be laid upon us; for we are not only to "defend, protect and ſecure" them, but alſo to make "an adequate proviſion for defraying the charge of the adminiſtration of juſtice, the ſupport of civil government, in ſuch provinces, where it ſhall be found neceſſary."

Not one of the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia or Florida, has ever defrayed theſe expences within itſelf; And if the duties impoſed by the laſt ſtatute are collected, all of them together, according to the beſt information, I can get, will not pay a quarter ſo much as Pennſylvania alone. So that the Britiſh Colonies are to be drained of the rewards of their labour, to cheriſh the ſcorching lands of Florida, and the icy rocks of Canada, and Nova Scotia, which never will return to us one farthing that we ſend to them.

Great Britain——I mean the miniſtry in Great Britain, has cantoned Canada and Florida out into five or ſix governments, and may form as many more. She now has 14 or fifteen regiments on this continent; and may ſend over as many more. To make "an adequate proviſion" for all theſe expences, is, no doubt, to be the inheritance of the colonies.

Can any man believe that the duties on paper, &c. are the laſt that will be laid for theſe purpoſes? It is in vain to hope, that becauſe it is imprudent to lay duties on the exportation of manufactures from a mother country to colonies, as it may promote manufactures from among them, that this conſideration will prevent them.

Ambitious, artful men have made the meaſure popular, and whatever injuſtice or deſtruction will attend it in the opinion of the coloniſts, at home it will be tho't juſt and ſalutary.

The people of Great Britain will be told and they have been told, that they are ſinking under an immenſe debt—that great part of this debt has been contracted in defending the colonies—that theſe are ſo ungrateful and undutiful, that they will not contribute one mite to its payment——nor even to the ſupport of the army now kept up for their "defence, protection and ſecurity"— that they are rolling in wealth, and are of ſo bold and republican a ſpirit that they are aiming at independance——that the only way to retain them in "obedience" is to keep a ſtrict watch over them, and to draw off part of their riches in taxes——and that every burden laid upon them, is taking off ſo much from Great Britain.——Theſe aſſertions will be generally believed, and the people will be perſuaded that they cannot be too angry with the colonies, as that anger will be profitable to themſelves.

"Qui ſentit commodum ſentire debet et onus." They who feel the benefit ought to feel the burden.

SIR,

"The 21ſt Inſtant I marched a Party of 19 Men to George Gabriel's Houſe, at Penn's Creek's Mouth, and made Priſoners Frederick Stump, and John Ironcutter, who were ſuſpected to have murdered ten Indians, near Fort Auguſta; and I have this Day delivered them to Mr. Holmes, at Carliſle Goal.

"Yeſterday I ſent a Perſon to the Great Iſland, that underſtands the Indian Language, with a Talk; a Copy of which is incloſed.——Myſelf and Party, were expoſed to great Danger, by the deſperate Reſiſtance made by Stump, and his Friends, who fled with him.——The Steps I have taken, I flatter myſelf will not be diſapproved of by the Gentlemen in Government; my ſole Views being directed to the Service of the Frontiers, before I heard his Honour the Governor's Orders.—The Meſſage I have ſent to the Indians, I hope will not be deemed aſſuming any Authority of my own, as you are very ſenſible I am no ſtranger to the Indians, and their Cuſtoms. I am, with Reſpect, Your obedient humble Servant,

Juniata, January 22, 1768.

"Brothers of the Six Nations, Delawares, and other Inhabitants of the Weſt Branch of Suſquehanna, hear what I have to ſay to you. With a Heart ſwelled with Grief I have to inform you, that Frederick Stump, and John Ironcutter, hath unadviſedly, murdered Ten of our Friend Indians near Fort Auguſta.—The Inhabitants of the Province of Pennſylvania do diſapprove of the ſaid Stump and Ironcutter's Conduct; and as Proof thereof, I have taken them Priſoners, and will deliver them into the Cuſtody of Officers, that will keep them ironed in Priſon for Trial; and I make no Doubt, as many of them as are guilty, will be condemned, and die for the Offence.

"Brothers, I being truly ſenſible of the Injury done you, I only add theſe few Words with my Heart's Wiſh, that you may not raſhly let go the faſt Hold of our Chain of Friendſhip, for the ill Conduct of one of our bad Men. Believe me, Brothers, we Engliſhmen continue the ſame Love for you, that hath uſually ſubſiſted between our Grandfathers, and I deſire you to call at Fort Auguſta, to trade with our People there, for the Neceſſaries you ſtand in Need of. I pledge you my Word, that no White Man there ſhall moleſt any of you, while you behave as Friends. I ſhall not reſt by Night or Day, until I receive your Anſwer. Your Friend and Brother, W. PATTERSON."

On Friday Morning laſt, a Number of armed Men (about 80, it is ſaid) went to the Goal of Carliſle, which they entered by Force and carried off the above mentioned Frederick Stump, and John Ironcutter, notwithſtanding the Oppoſition and Perſuaſions of the Magiſtrates, and others, to the contrary.——

NEW-YORK, February 18.

Extract of a Letter from a Gentleman in London to his Friend in New York, dated London Oct 30.

"It is believed here that all Matters will go on well in America but I can't for my life believe it, ſince it ſeems that the Revenues lately eſtabliſhed under the Inſpection of Commiſſioners, are to be applied to make Governors and Civil Officers independant of the People, though they are totally dependent upon Prerogative: If it made Civil Officers, or at leaſt ſome of the principal Judges, thoroughly independant of King and People, there would be ſomewhat rational in the Scheme, but the other is a moſt ruinous and iniquitous Method.

If your Legiſlature ceaſe, they will I dare ſay, after a few Years, be obliged to reſtore what they ſo ſhamefully took away, as they did to Jamaica.

I fear little will be done for America the next Seſſion, for the Commons will not be ſettled till late in the Seaſon"

We find by the Engliſh Papers, that Proviſions ſtill continued at an exorbitant Price, Manufactories ſeemed every where in a State of Decay, and the Poor in the greateſt Diſtreſs——Nor was it likely that the Parliament could be able to apply any adequate Remedy, without an entire Change in the late Syſtem of Politics.

HARTFORD, Feb. 29.

On Tueſday the 16th inſt. the following ſorrowful accident happened at Litchfield. Mr. Zebulon Gibbs, jun. of that place, being in the woods at work, a tree he had cut lodged upon another that ſtood near it, and in attempting to remove it, it fell upon his head and fractur'd his ſkull in two places, in which condition he languiſhed till Saturday night, and then died.

The following account of the Indian that was murdered at Litchfield (as mentioned in our laſt) was ſent us by the King's Attorney of Litchfield county, viz.

On Tueſday the 16th inſt. John Jacobs, an Indian native of Farmington, was committed to the goal in this town, on an information charging him with murdering James Chokerer, alias James Choqaays, a native of the Skatacook tribe in Kent. John and his ſquaw being laſt Monday evening at James's wigwam in this town, where they had been ſeveral days on a viſit, the neighbouring Engliſh were that evening, about ten o'clock; alarmed with the news that John had killed James; and going inſtantly to the wigwam, found James almoſt expiring: he attempted to ſpeak, but the Engliſh could not underſtand him; he then lay ſpeechleſs, and died the next day. The jury of inqueſt (among whom were ſeveral phyſicians and ſurgeons) having opened a contuſion on his right temple, found his ſkull much fractur'd, & drove in; and having thoroughly examined the evidences, ſoon returned their verdict, finding, That the ſaid John murdered the ſaid James, by maliciouſly giving him a mortal wound, with the head of an ax, on his right temple. It can't with any certainty be determined what was the reaſon of John's giving this blow; he aſſigned no other particular cauſe to the Engliſh (upon their coming in) than that James was a d——d Skatacook. There was no perſon at the wigwam when the affair happened but the two Indians and their reſpective ſquaws, who alarmed the neighbours, and give different accounts of the tranſactions.

Mr. GREEN,
SIR,

Pleaſe to give the following a place in your Paper, and you will oblige ſome of your conſtant Readers.

An humble ADDRESS to the Freemen of the Corporation.

SUFFER me to addreſs you in ſcripture language. Men, brethren, and fathers. Since kind providence has ſeen fit to incorporate you into a political body, as a free people, indulging you with very great privileges of a civil and ſacred nature, perhaps none greater under heaven. Of what vaſt importance is it then, rightly to improve them. I have been a conſtant reader of the public prints for above a year paſt, and have taken notice of many things in the papers, remote from the things which ought to be duly conſulted and attended to, as to the right uſe and improvement of our privileges (inſtead of contending about the circumſtance in the choice of our civil rulers, whether they be upon the eaſt or weſt ſide of Connecticut river.) Pray be intreated,

1. Seriouſly to conſider what the work is that we want civil rulers to do, as God's miniſters, for our good, and the good of the whole.

2. Search the ſcriptures with greater care and cloſe attention, in order to get the knowledge of thoſe qualifications that perfect wiſdom has aſſign'd civil rulers to be found [illegible] with getting a good underſtanding of our charter grant, conſciouſly attending to the ſolemn oath you took when you was made free of this corporation. Putting theſe together, is ſuitable to prepare the mind to form a right judgment of thoſe qualifications needful to be found in rulers.

3. Wherever you find a man, or men, thus qualified, they are the men doubtleſs, that providence points out to you to chooſe for your rulers. And whether they live on the eaſt ſide of Connecticut river, or the weſt, in this county or that, in a populous town, or a ſmall village (in my opinion) is all out of the queſtion. It is the qualifications that the man is bleſſed with from his Creator, and not the place of his abode, that prepares a man to be choſen into office.

4. Pray conſider whether there is proper meaſures and due care taken, by every perſon, to get ſuitable knowledge of thoſe in nomination, from time to time. Are not the body of you inclined to lay too much ſtreſs upon what a few leading men in every town propoſe, without taking pains perſonally to know their fitneſs that is nominated? For juſt ſo much as there is a want here, ſo much your privilege is miſ-improved. But when upon ſufficient knowledge, and according to your oath, you have made your choice, endeavour to be ſubmitted to providence, altho' other perſons ſhould be choſe which you could not ſee to be ſo qualified, as thoſe you voted for. Suffer me to intreat you to keep from hard ſpeeches, and canting one againſt another, in your choice, for it is too mean, and below the character of wiſe men ſo to do; but rather uſe brotherly freedom one with another, in calmneſs, making your objections, and offering your reaſons one to the other, in order for good agreement in your choice, &c.

In as much as it is your privilege to chuſe the gentlemen that conſtitute the upper and lower houſe, and that to repreſent you in general court aſſembled, is it not reaſonable that you ſhould give them ſome directions & inſtructions, that when they come to act on your behalf, they may act your minds, &c. Did the town of Boſton go counter to right reaſon, in giving ſpecial direction to their repreſentatives, how to act as their conſtitutes in ſecuring to them their great and valuable privileges? Ought not every town in Connecticut to act their equal right in giving direction to their deputies? for is it not proper in ſome ſenſe, to ſay what the general court acts the freemen act, and much more ſo when they acquieſce in the court's act, or tamely ſubmit thereto.

[The Remainder will be in our next.]

COMPLAINANT. No. V.

Why, this is the world's ſoul [illegible]
Of the ſame place is every flatterer's ſpirit.
O Timon! for the monſtrouſneſs of man—
Timon of Athens.

WHOEVER deſires to form a juſt eſtimate of any man's real character, as to ſome amiable qualities which mankind may aſcribe to him, ought to follow him from ſcenes of public and open action, home to his family, and obſerve whether his private and domeſtick behavior harmonizes with the other. Thoſe amiable qualifications, as they appear in the public view, and charm every beholder, are like ſome rich and glittering apparel, to be put on only when a man appears in public, and thrown off when he retires home. Some men very much reſemble a patch'd, painted harlot, who appears very beautiful abroad, in her borrowed attire, but when ſhe comes to uncaſe in her chamber, exhibits a moſt loathſome ſpectacle of deformity and diſeaſe—whoever has read Swift's diſcription of her, may recollect that, and ſave me any further attempt.——Men have to act in different ſpheres or circles; ſome of them are large, and ſome ſmall; but a circle is always compleat, let it be ever ſo ſmall, and 'tis as requiſite to the character of a good, kind, generous man, that he act as becomes ſuch in the ſmall circle of his own family, as in any of the more large ones. But how commonly ſhould we find a contraſt between a man's public and private behavior, could we view him in his family, and bed chamber, as well as in court, market and tavern. I feel a little conviction on myſelf, from the obſervation; for though I am ſo continually exclaiming in my own family, againſt our general aſſembly, I am always ſilent, as to theſe things, when in the company of any of the members; and I can't ſay that I have not ſome times, in the hearing of thoſe honorable gentlemen, applauded what I have bitterly condemn'd at home. But, as I ſhall ſave no fine by complaining of myſelf, I will proceed to characteriſe ſome others, that ought to be complained of on this ſcore.

Oſtentius has the reputation of a generous, free ſoul'd, public ſpirited man; and were we to view him only in his more public conduct, we might determine the character to be juſt. His generoſity verges near to extravagance, and he uſes his money as if he valued it on no other account than that it enabled him to relieve the diſtreſſed, and promote expenſive public ſpirited ſchemes. You will be ſure to find his name in every ſubſcription that is ſet on foot, with a ſum annexed equal, if not ſuperior to any in the liſt. The church ſteeple is a tow'ring monument of his generoſity, and the bell ſounds forth his liberality every time it rings, for he bore the largeſt ſhare of expence of any man in erecting the one and procuring the other——you tread upon his money as you walk the ſtreets, for he was the largeſt ſubſcriber towards the pavement. In trading he ſcorns to beat a man down, and almoſt thinks it beneath him to take the change of his money. When he has loſt at gaming, with what eaſe and pleaſure does he clink the coin upon the table! and how little gratified does he appear when fortune has made him the gainer!——He is always ready to treat any that will drink at his expence, and frequently inſiſts upon the honor of paying the whole reckoning at a drinking bout. When he invites company to dine with him at his own houſe, care is taken that they are ſerved in a very elegant manner, and his table proclaims his houſe the ſeat of plenty. But how different is his private and domeſtic conduct!——the neceſſary expences of his houſhold, fret and vex him to that degree, that ſcarce a day paſſes, but his poor wife and children are reproach'd with waſting, and careleſly conſuming his ſubſtance. To day there is too much meat cook'd, 'twill be loſt——yeſterday there was an extravagant uſe of butter—laſt night there was more cyder draw'd than will be drink'd—there is no need of burning ſo much candle, they can ſit in the dark in the kitchen—there is too much ſoap uſed in waſhing——that bone that is flung away might be of ſome uſe. Theſe, and ſuch like ſubjects is Oſtentius continually declaiming upon, when there is none to hear him but his own family. If there be occaſion for a new gown, or a piece of holland in the houſe, his wife dreads to mention the matter to him, for ſhe is ſure of ſome very harſh accuſations of careleſneſs and waſtfulneſs in the family. The very mention of a pair of ſhoes for a child puts him into paſſion. He has a very forward ſon at ſchool, but the poor boy ſhudders when he has occaſion to aſk his father for a new book; and Oſtentius has now ſo far retrench'd the private expence of his family, in order to make the greater ſhew abroad, that, when he has no company preſent, his toaſt is dipp'd in ſkim'd milk inſtead of butter. Upon the whole, I determine that if Oſtentius is a generous, charitable man abroad, he is a niggardly, covetous, narrow ſoul'd wretch at home.—How abſurd is it for a man who can fling away his money with ſo proud an air at the tavern, to be peeping about continually among diſhclouts and dripping pans at home, leſt there be ſomething loſt! However, I have done with Oſtentius, having only this to ſay, that if the world knew him as well as his wife does, they would ſcorn him as much as they now eſteem him.

Melander and his ſpouſe are generally eſteemed a very happy couple, becauſe that in all companies they ſhew an exceeding fondneſs for each other: the endearing epithets and appellations that paſs from one to the other, with their mutual ogles, make the company generally believe that they can reliſh no ſociety like their own; and indeed that conjugal affection has ſo ſwallowed them up, that 'tis barbarous to interrupt their felicity, by viſits either for form friendſhip or buſineſs. But we ſhould form, another judgment in the caſe, if we were to purſue them into their private retirements, and lurk unſeen in their bed chamber; we ſhould then find theſe billing turtles to be but cat and dog, who ſpit and growl at each other inceſſantly. Melander thinks himſelf entitled to an implicit, ſervile obedience in all things at home, becauſe he has raiſed his wife to the rank of a lady, in the appearance of the world; and ſhe conceives herſelf inveſted with ſome certain prerogative of ſex, to which her huſband does not ſufficiently pay homage. She imagines herſelf entitled to more courtſhip for her favors, than her huſband is willing to pay, ſince he imagines that nothing is more ridiculous than pruding in a wife towards her huſband. Hence it comes to paſs, that ſhe treats his endearments, either like madam puſs, with ſpitting and ſcratching, or elſe (which is full as bad) with an affected coldneſs and inſenſibility, deſigned only to make him uneaſy. Melander, vexed hereat, has ſometimes ſworn that he would never ſollicit any more favors of her; if ſhe was ever kind again, it ſhould be of her own accord: but when the firſt ſallies of his reſentment were over, his tenderneſs return'd, & produc'd a breach of oath. He was then ſure to meet with reproach on that account, which ſerves to increaſe that diſpoſition there is to torment each other in private. Did not pride put them upon appearing to the world what they are not, they would be as ridiculous in the eyes of others, as they are diſagreable to one another. In ſhort, how common is it to find a neat, genteel perſon abroad, a ſloven at home——to find one ſo delicately temperate that his punch muſt be beveridge, without ſpirit, when in company, and yet capable at home of drinking clear brandy without ſcowling——How common to find a man who paſſes in the world for a peaceable, good natur'd man, exerciſing tyranny in his own houſe, and wielding the family ſcepter without mercy! ——Lo, this is an evil that I have ſeen under the ſun.

LETTER VII.

My dear Countrymen,

THIS letter is intended more particularly for ſuch of you, whoſe employment in life may have prevented your attending to the conſideration of ſome points that are of great and public importance. For many ſuch perſons there muſt be even in theſe colonies, where the inhabitants in general are more intelligent than any other people, as has been remarked by ſtrangers, and it ſeems with reaſon.

Some of you perhaps, filled as I know your breaſts are with loyalty to our moſt excellent Prince, and with love to our dear mother country, may feel yourſelves inclined by the affections of your hearts, to approve every action to thoſe whom you ſo much venerate and eſteem.

A prejudice thus flowing from goodneſs of diſpoſition is amiable indeed. I wiſh it could be indulged without danger. Did I think this poſſible, the error ſhould have been adopted, not oppoſed by me. But in truth, all men are ſubject to the paſſions and frailties of nature; and therefore whatever regard we entertain for the perſons of thoſe who govern us, we ſhould always remember that their conduct as rulers may be influenced by human infirmities.

When any laws injurous to theſe colonies are paſſed we cannot, with the leaſt propriety, ſuppoſe that an injury was intended us by his majeſty or the lords. For the aſſent of the crown and peers to laws, ſeems, as far as I am able to judge, to have been veſted in them more for their own ſecurity, than for any other purpoſe. On the other hand it is the particular buſineſs of the people to inquire & diſcover what regulations are uſeful for themſelves, & to digeſt & preſent them in the form of bills to the other orders, to have them enacted into laws. Where theſe laws are to bind themſelves, it may be expected that the houſe of commons will very carefully conſider them: But when they are making laws, that are not deſigned to bind themſelves, we cannot imagine that their deliberations will be as cautious and ſcrupulous as in their own caſe.

I am told that there is a wonderful addreſs frequently uſed in carrying points, in the houſe of commons, by perſons experienced in theſe affairs——that opportunities are watched—and ſometimes votes are paſſed, that if all the members had been preſent, would have been rejected by a great majority. Certain it is, that when a powerful & artful man has determined on any meaſure againſt theſe colonies, he has always ſucceeded in his attempt. Perhaps therefore it will be proper for us whenever any oppreſſive act affecting us is paſſed, to attribute it to the inattention of the houſe of commons, and to the malevolence or ambition of ſome factious great men, rather than to any other cauſe.

Now I do verily believe that the late act of parliament impoſing duties on paper, &c. was formed by Mr. Grenville and his party, becauſe it is evidently a part of that plan, by which he endeavoured to render himſelf popular at home; and I do alſo believe that not one half of the members of the houſe of commons, even of thoſe who heard it read, did perceive how deſtructive it was to American freedom.

For this reaſon, as it is uſual in G. Britain to conſider the King's ſpeech as the ſpeech of the miniſtry, it may be right here to conſider this act as the act of party—Perhaps I ſhould ſpeak more properly if I was to uſe another term.——

There are two ways of laying taxes. One is by impoſing a certain ſum on particular kinds of property, to be paid by the uſer or conſumer; or by taxing the perſon at a certain ſum; the other is, by impoſing a certain ſum on particular kinds of property to be paid by the ſeller.

When a man pays the firſt ſort of tax, he knows with certainty that he pays ſo much money for a tax. The conſideration for which he pays it is remote, and it may be does not occur to him. He is ſenſible too that he is commanded and obliged to pay it as a tax; and therefore people are apt to be diſpleaſed with this ſort of tax.

The other ſort of tax is ſubmited to in a very different manner. The purchaſer of any article very ſeldom reflects that the ſeller raiſes his price ſo as to indemnify him for the tax he has paid. He knows the prices of things are continually fluctuating, and if he thinks about the tax, he thinks at the ſame time, in all probability, that he might have paid as much, if the articles he buys had not been taxed. He gets ſomething viſible and agreeable for his money, & tax, and price are ſo confounded together, that he cannot ſeperate or does not chooſe to take the trouble of ſeperating them.

This mode of taxation therefore is the mode ſuited to arbitrary and oppreſſive governments: The love of liberty is ſo natural to the human heart, that unfeeling tyrants think themſelves obliged to accommodate their ſchemes as much as they can to the appearance of juſtice and reaſon and to deceive thoſe whom they reſolve to deſtroy or oppreſs, by preſenting to them a miſerable picture of freedom, when the ineſtimable original is loſt.

This policy did not eſcape the cruel and rapacious Nero. That monſter, apprehenſive that his crimes might endanger his authority and life, thought proper to do ſome popular acts to ſecure the obedience of his ſubjects. Among other things, ſays * Tacitus, "he remitted the twenty fifth part of 'the price on the ſale of ſlaves, but rather 'in ſhew than reality; for the ſeller being 'ordered to pay it, it became a part of the 'price to the buyer."

This is the reflection of the judicious hiſtorian; but the deluded people gave their infamous emperor full credit for his falſe generoſity. Other nations have been treated in the ſame manner the Romans were.——The honeſt induſtrious Germans who are ſettled in different parts of this continent can inform us, that it was this ſort of tax that drove them from their native land to our woods, at that time the ſeats of perfect and undiſturbed freedom.

Their princes inflamed by the luſt of power and the luſt of avarice, two furies, that the more they are gorged the more hungry they grow, tranſgreſſed the bounds they ought in regard to themſelves to have obſerved. To keep up the deception in the minds of ſubjects "there muſt be," ſays a very learned author §, "ſome proportion between the impoſt and the value of the commodity; wherefore there ought not to be an exceſſive duty upon merchandizes of little value. There are countries in which the duty exceeds ſeventeen or eighteen times the value of the commodity. In this caſe the prince removes the illuſion. His ſubjects plainly ſee they are dealt with in an unreaſonable manner, which renders them moſt exquiſitively ſenſible of their ſlaviſh ſituation."

From hence it apears that ſubjects may be ground down into miſery by this ſort of taxation as well as the other. They may be as much impoveriſhed if their money is taken from them in this way as in the other; and that it will be taken, may be more evident by attending to a few more conſiderations.

The merchant or importer, who pays the duty at firſt, will not conſent to be ſo much money out of pocket. He, therefore, proportionably raiſes the price of his goods.—It may then be ſaid to be a conteſt between him and the perſon offering to buy, who ſhall loſe the duty. This muſt be decided by the nature of the commodities and the and the purchaſers demand for them.————If they are mere luxuries, he is at liberty to do as he pleaſes, and if he buys, he does it voluntarily: But if they are abſolute neceſſaries, or conveniencies which uſe and cuſtom have made requiſite for the comfort of life, and which he is not permitted, by the power impoſing the duty, to get elſewhere, there the ſeller has a plain advantage, and the buyer muſt pay the duty. In fact, the ſeller is nothing leſs than the collector of the tax for the power that impoſed it. If theſe duties then are extended to neceſſaries and conveniencies of life in general, and enormouſly increaſed, the people muſt at length become indeed "moſt exquiſitively "ſenſible of their ſlaviſh ſituation."

Their happineſs, therefore, intirely depends on the moderation of thoſe who have authority to impoſe the duties.

I ſhall now apply theſe obſervations to the late act of parliament. Certain duties are thereby impoſed on paper and glaſs, &c. imported into theſe colonies. By the laws of Great Britain we are prohibited to get theſe articles from any other part of the world. We cannot at preſent, nor for many years to come, though we ſhould apply ourſelves to theſe manufactures with the utmoſt induſtry, make enough ourſelves for our own uſe. That paper and glaſs are not only convenient, but abſolutely neceſſary for us, I amagine very few will contend. Some, perhaps, who think mankind grew wicked & luxurous as ſoon as they found out another way of communicating their ſentiments than by ſpeech, and another way of dwelling than in caves, may advance ſo whimſical an opinion. But I preſume no body will take the unneceſſary trouble of refuting them.

From theſe remarks I think it evident that we muſt uſe paper and glaſs, that what we uſe muſt be Britiſh, and that we muſt pay the duties impoſed, unleſs thoſe who ſell theſe articles are ſo generous as to make us preſents of the duties they pay, which is not to be expected.

Some perſons may think this act of no conſequence; becauſe the duties are ſo ſmall. A fatal error. That is the very circumſtance moſt alarming to me. For I am convinced that the authors of this law would never have obtained an act to raiſe ſo trifling a ſum, as it muſt do, had they not intended by it to eſtabliſh a precedent for future uſe: To conſole ourſelves with the ſmallneſs of the duties is to walk deliberately into the ſnare that is ſet for us, priſing the neatneſs of the workmanſhip. Suppoſe the duties, impoſed by the late act, could be paid by theſe, diſtreſſed colonies, with the utmoſt eaſe, and that the purpoſes, to which they are to be applied, were the moſt reaſonable and equitable that could be conceived, the contrary of which I hope to demonſtrate before theſe letters are concluded, yet even in ſuch a ſuppoſed caſe, theſe colonies ought to regard the act with abhorrance——For who are a free people? not thoſe over whom government is reaſonably and equitably exerciſed, but thoſe who live under a government, ſo conſtitutionally checked and controuled, that proper proviſion is made againſt its being otherwiſe exerciſed. The late act is founded on the deſtruction of this conſtitutional ſecurity.

If the parliament have a right to lay a duty of four ſhillings and eight pence on a hundred weight of glaſs, or a ream of paper, they have a right to lay a duty of any other ſum on either. They may raiſe the duty as the author before quoted ſays has been done in ſome countries, till it "exceeds ſe'venteen or eighteen times the value of the 'commodity." In ſhort, if they have a right 'to levy a tax of one penny upon us, they have a right to levy a million upon us. For where does their right ſtop? At any given number of pence, ſhillings, or pounds? To attempt to limit their right, after granting it to exiſt at all, is as contrary to reaſon, as granting it to exiſt at all is contrary to juſtice. If they have any right to tax us, then whether our own money ſhall continue in our own pockets, or not, depends no longer on us, but on them. "There is nothing which 'we can call our own," or to uſe the words of Mr. Locke, "what property have we "in that, which another may, by right, take "when he pleaſes, to himſelf?"

Theſe duties which will inevitably be levied upon us, and which are now levying upon us, are expreſly laid for the ſole purpoſe of taking money. This is the true definition of taxes. They are therefore taxes. This money is to be taken from us. We are therefore taxed. Thoſe who are taxed without their own conſent, given by themſelves, or their repreſentatives, are ſlaves. We are taxed without our own conſent given by ourſelves, or our repreſentatives.—We are therefore——I ſpeak it with grief—I ſpeak it with indignation—we are SLAVES.

Extract of a letter from London, to a Gentleman in New-York, dated Nov. 17.

"*I have the Pleaſure to let my Countrymen know, that from a converſation with lord N——h this day, I hope the Parliament will not take up the Affair, of not paſſing an Act (exactly conformable to the Billeting Act) with any warmth, but its probable the Government will reſt ſatisfied with what your Aſſembly has done, in voting the Sum to the General for the purpoſe. BOSTON, February 8.

There is now living in Danvers (near Salem) one Thomas Nelſon, who was born at Norwich in England, June, 1671, in the reign of Charles II. He was an apprentice to a weaver in that city, at the revolution; he inliſted as a ſoldier under King William, to go to Ireland to drive James II out. He ſerved in Queen Anne's wars; was a ſailor in the fleet under Sir Cloudeſley Shovel, at the ſiege and taking of Barcelona. Was in the expedition to Canada 1711. Is now in good health, no longer than the 13th ult. he walked alone two miles from home, to dine with his grand children, and returned the ſame day on foot, 'tis what he does almoſt every day in ſummer; he goes as erect as a lad. To ſee his remarkably white hair and hear him relate his old adventures, he ſeems like one from another world.

"I cannot but congratulate you on that Spirit of Oeconomy and prudence, which has led you to give ſo noble an Example to other Provinces; and I have no doubt from the well temper'd Zeal the New England Provinces diſcover, that America will owe their Freedom to their generous Struggles. What you have done upon the beſt Motives, and thro' Choice, we ſhall be obliged to do thro' Neceſſity; the extreme Hardſhip of the Times gradually forcing us into greater Frugality and a ſeverer Oeconomy."

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 20.

By a Gentleman who arrived here Yeſterday from Nantucket, which Place he left on Wedneſday laſt, we learn that an Indian confined in Goal there, had found means to murder his Fellow Priſoner, in a moſt cruel and deliberate Manner. They arrived at Nantucket ſome Time ago, with two other Indians, in a whaling Sloop and ſome Diſputes having aroſe between them at Sea, upon their Arrival, in deciding the Quarrel, their two Ship mates were killed, for which they were committed to Goal.

Jan 30 Wedneſday laſt Capt. Gideon Crawford arrived here, in 21 Days from St. Euſtatia.——He brings Advice, that Cape Nichola Mole was declared a Free Port on the firſt of this Month.

From divers Parts of the Colony we learn, that conſiderable Quantities of Cloth have been and continue to be, manufactured by the Inhabitants; and that People in general ſeem heartily diſpoſed to yield every Encouragement to the preſent excellent Scheme for promoting Induſtry and Oeconomy, from a Conviction that the happy Effect which muſt reſult therefrom, can alone avert the impending Ruin which for ſome Time paſt has threatned Britiſh America.

A Gentleman of Fortune in this Place a hearty Well wiſher, to the commendable oeconomical Spirit now prevailing, who, upon the repeal of the late memorable Stamp Act, had thrown by a piece of homeſpun Cloth, has ordered the ſame to be made up into a Suit.

Capt. Pattin, in the Brigantine Neptune arrived here a few Days ago from Monti Chriſti, in 32 Days Paſſage, in whom came Paſſenger Capt. Wm. Bett, who gives the following melancholly Account, viz. THE Connecticut COURANT.

Containing the freſheſt Advices, Both Foreign and Domeſtick.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 11.

Yeſterday Captain Anderſon, arrived here in ten Weeks from Liverpool, by whom we have the following ADVICES, viz.

His Majeſty's moſt gracious SPEECH to both Houſes of Parliament, on Tueſday the 24th Day of November, 1767.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Have choſen to call you together at this Seaſon of the Year, that my Parliament might have full Time for their Deliberations upon all ſuch branches of the Public Service, as may require their immediate Attention ; without the Neceſſity of continuing the Seſſion beyond the Time moſt ſuitable to My People, for the Election of a new Parliament : And I doubt not but you will be careful from the ſame Conſiderations, to avoid in your Proceedings all unneceſſary Delay.

Nothing in the preſent Situation of Affairs Abroad gives Me reaſon to apprehend, that you will be prevented, by any Interruption of the public Tranquility, from fixing your whole Attention upon ſuch Points as concern the internal Welfare and Proſperity of my People.

Among theſe Objects of a domeſtick Nature none can demand a more ſpeedy or more ſerious Attention, than what regards the high Price of Corn ; which neither the ſalutary Laws paſſed in the laſt Seſſion of Parliament, nor the Produce of the late Harveſt, have yet been able ſo far to reduce, as to give ſufficient Relief to the Diſtreſſes of the poorer Sort of My People. Your late Reſidence in your ſeveral Counties muſt have enabled you to judge, whether any farther Proviſions can be made, conducive to the Attainment of ſo deſireable an End.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

I will order the proper Officers to lay before you the Eſtimates for the Service of the enſuing Year.

The Experience I have had of your conſtant Readineſs to grant Me all ſuch Supplies, as ſhould be found neceſſary for the Security Intereſt, and Honor of the Nation, (and I have no other to aſk of you) renders it unneceſſary for Me to add any Exhortations upon this Head : And I doubt not, but the ſame Publick Conſiderations will induce you to perſevere, with equal Alacrity, in your Endeavours to diminiſh the National Debt ; while, on My Part, no Care ſhall be wanting to contribute, as far as poſſible to the Attainment of that moſt eſſential Object, by every frugal Application of ſuch Supplies as you grant.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The Neceſſity of improving the preſent general Tranquility to the great Purpoſe of maintaining the Strength, the Reputaion, and the Proſperity of this Country, ought to be ever before your Eyes. To render your Deliberations for that Purpoſe ſucceſsful, endeavour to cultivate a Spirit of Harmony among yourſelves. My Concurrence in whatever will promote the Happineſs of My People, you may always depend upon : And, in that Light, I ſhall ever be deſirous of encouraging Union among all thoſe who wiſh well to their Country.

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

WE, your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament aſſembled, return Your Majeſty our humble Thanks for Your moſt gracious Speech from the Throne.

We acknowledge, with Gratitude, Your Majeſty's tender Regard and Concern for Your People, in aſſembling the Parliament at ſuch a Seaſon, as, whilſt it provides for the Convenience of Your People, will allow ſufficient Time for our Deliberations on the ſeveral Branches of the Public Service that may require our immediate Attention : And we beg leave to aſſure Your Majeſty, that it ſhall be our hearty Deſire to forward Your Majeſty's moſt gracious Purpoſe, by avoiding in our Proceedings all unneceſſary Delay:

We ſincerely rejoice in the Proſpect of the continuance of the general Tranquility ; and it is our firm Reſolution to give, at a Time ſo favourable for ſuch Conſiderations our ſtricteſt Attention to all thoſe Objects that may more immediately affect the internal Welfare and Happineſs of Your People.

We aſſure your Majeſty, that our earneſt Endeavours ſhall not be wanting for the Relief of the Diſtreſſes, which the Poor labour under from the high Price of Corn, if any further Proviſion can be made conducive to ſo deſirable an end.

Permit us, Sir, to congratulate Your Majeſty on the ſafe Delivery of the Queen, and the Birth of a Prince ; and to aſſure Your Majeſty of our unfeigned Joy on any Increaſe of Your domeſtick Felicity ; at the ſame Time that we conſider every Addition to your illuſtrious houſe as a further Security of our Religious and Civil Liberties.

We beg leave to condole with Your Majeſty on the Death of His Royal Highneſs the Duke of YORK, and to teſtify our ſincere Concern for the Loſs of a Prince, whoſe Virtues and amiable Qualities, as they diſtinguiſhed his Life, will ever be held in the moſt grateful Remembrance.

Your Majeſty may be aſſured, that being fully ſenſible of the Neceſſity of improving the preſent Tranquility to the Purpoſe of maintaining the Strength, the Reputation, & Proſperity of this Country, we will chearfully contribute, on our Part to the Succeſs of ſuch Meaſures, as ſhall be thought moſt expedient for the Attainment of that great End ; And that, with this View, we ſhall endeavour to cultivate that Spirit of Harmony and Union which Your Majeſty, in Your paternal Care for the Happineſs of Your People, has moſt graciouſly recommended from the Throne ; and on which the Succeſs of our Councils, and the Public Welfare, ſo eſſentially depend.

My Lords.

" YOUR Readineſs to provide for the Public Services with the Unanimity and Diſpatch ſo neceſſary at this Juncture as well as to avail yourſelves of preſent general Tranquility, in order to promote the internal Proſperity of my People, is highly agreeable to Me ; and I rely upon your Aſſurances, that you will uſe your endeavours to relieve the Diſtreſſes which the poor labour under from the high Price of Corn.

" I thank you for the Joy you expreſs on the increaſe of My Royal Family ; and I feel for the Part you take in My Concern for the unexpected Loſs of My late Brother the Duke of YORK."

Moſt Gracious Sovereign,

WE your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament aſſembled, return Your Majeſty our moſt humble Thanks, for Your moſt Gracious Speech from the Throne.

We beg Leave moſt gratefully to acknowledge your Majeſty's Goodneſs, and Attention to the Convenience of Your People, in calling Your Parliament together at this Time and to aſſure Your Majeſty, that we will endeavour to improve the Opportunity which the preſent happy State of Peace and Tranquility affords, by exerting our utmoſt Abilities in the Proſecution of ſuch Meaſures as may moſt effectually promote the public Welfare and proſperity.

We are equally ſenſible of your Majeſty's paternal Care in the Meaſures already taken by Your Majeſty to alleviate the Diſtreſſes of the poor; and of Your Royal Wiſdom, in recommending the ſame intereſting and important Object to the Conſideration of Your parliament; and we will not fail to take into our moſt attentive Deliberation all ſuch Meaſures as ſhall appear conducive to the Accompliſhment of that great and moſt deſireble End.

It is with unfeigned Joy that we preſume to offer our Congratulations to Your Majeſty on the late Increaſe of Your royal Family by the Birth of a prince; and to aſſure Your Majeſty that we regard as an Addition to the Welfare and Happineſs of this Nation, every Increaſe of that Illuſtrious Houſe, under whoſe mild and auſpicious Government our Religious and Civil Liberties have been ſo happily maintained and protected.

And it is with equal Grief and Anxiety that we reflect on the late untimely Loſs of Your Majeſty's Royal Brother, the Duke of York; whoſe early and ready zeal in his Country's Cauſe ſhewed him worthy of the Heroick Race he ſprang from; and whoſe amiable Virtues, in the more private Scenes of Life, muſt ever make his Memory dear to all who had the Happineſs of approaching him.

We beg Leave moſt humbly to aſſure Your Majeſty, that this Houſe will, with a zeal & Alacrity and becoming the Repreſentative of an affectionate and grateful People readily grant ſuch Supplies as ſhall be requiſite for the ſupport of your Majeſty's Government, for advancing the Honour and Intereſt of this Country, and effectually providing for the Public Safety.

And that our Regard to your Majeſty's Recommendation, as well as the indiſpenſable Duty we owe to thoſe whom we repreſent, will make us earneſtly attentive to the great Object of diminiſhing the National Debt; being convinced that nothing can ſo effectually tend to add real Luſtre and Dignity to your Majeſty's Government, or to give ſolid and permanent Strength to theſe Kingdoms.

With theſe Views, and in theſe Sentiments we will endeavour, with the utmoſt Unanimity and Diſpatch, to promote the Publick Service, and to deſerve, by our ſincere and unwearied Labours for the General Good, that Confidence which it has pleaſed Your Majeſty to repoſe in us; not doubting of your Majeſty's gracious Diſpoſition to confirm and perfect what our true zeal may ſuggeſt, for the laſting Advantage and Happineſs of your People.

LONDON, Nov. 19.

They write from Toulon that 5 armed tartans are now fitting out there, by orders of court, to tranſport a body of French troops to Corſica.

We are told, that the grievances of our merchants reſiding in Portugal, ſo far from being redreſſed, are now continued with a heavier hand than ever; inſomuch that one of them having ſolicited the redreſs of an injury done him, not only his petition was rejected with violence of paſſion, but the merchant himſelf was threatened to be ſent to the gallies if he did not deſiſt from ſtirring any more in the affair.

We are now aſſured from authentic intelligence, that N°. 3379. drawn on Thurſday, is a prize of 20,000l. is the property of Mr. Alder, a Cooper, at Abingdon in Berks. A neighbour had wanted to purchaſe one half of the ticket of him, for which the Cooper demanded 8l, 4s. but the former offering no more than 8l. the bargain luckily broke off to the great advantage of the ſeller. When the Broker, of whom he had purchaſed it, got down there, he broke the matter to him very cautiouſly, raiſing his information by degrees from 20l. to 20,000l. which laſt circumſtance the poor Cooper bore pretty well, tho' not without ſome appearance of ſhock & trembling. His wife conſidered it for a good while, as a joke, but being at laſt convinced of the reality of her good fortune, ſhe produced the ticket pinned up in a piece of brown paper, in an open drawer, and delivered it to her huſband, in order to be put in better cuſtody. To prevent any ill effects which ſuch an unexpected piece of good luck might have upon a mind not prepared to receive it, and likewiſe to free the Cooper from the importunities of the mob, a neighbour has very humanly taken him a little tour into the country, from whence he is to be brought up to London.

Dec. 12. The following changes are confidently talked of to take place in a few days:

Earl of Sandwich to be Secretary of State.

Richard Rigby, Eſq; Secretary at War.

Mr. Wilkes ſet out again for France laſt Sundy morning.

Dec. 15. It is reported that both Houſes of Parliament will adjourn on this day ſen'night for the Chriſtmas holidays.

It is aſſerted that the Britiſh exports to North America, have this year fallen ſhort many Thouſand pounds.

Dec. 17. We hear that a commiſſion is preparing to paſs the Great Seal for appointing a new board of Admiralty.

Letters from New-York, juſt received, adviſe that the inhabitants of that province are going to follow the example of the people at Boſton, by exerting their utmoſt endeavours to promote and encourage their own manufactures in particular, and thoſe of the Britiſh colonies in America in general.

Extract of a letter from Dover, October 3, 1767.

" I don't know what you Londoners are thinking of but this I aſſure you, our good neighbours the French are not idle they are now cutting and widening their canals about Dunkirk and Mardyke, which looks as if they had no great inclination to keep the peace any longer than ſuited their conveniency: And they are conſtantly ſending over ſhoals of their countrymen, who I take for ſo many ſpies, ſome of whom have been ſo impudent as to make drawings of theſe places; and it was but a few weeks ago that I met, not many miles from this place, one of theſe Frenchmen driving a thing before him like a wheelbarrow, and he told me he was going to make a map of this country for us. Very fine indeed, that we cannot do ſuch a thing without their aſſiſtance. If an Engliſhman was to do ſo in France, what would be his fate may be eaſily gueſſed at: For poor Hogarth was taken into cuſtody at Calais, only for copying an arms off one of their gates."

LONDON,

Dec. 3. We hear from Cambridge, that the epidemical diſtemper now raging among the horſes, has infected moſt of the ſtables, in that town; and within theſe few days ſeveral grooms and other perſons concerned in the care of them, have been taken ill in the ſame manner.

The mob which aroſe at Kinderminſter in Worceſterſhire laſt week, amounted to near 2000; they forced the farmers to ſell their wheat at 5s. a buſhel, which before was ſold at 7s. and their butter at 6d. a pound which was ſold for 8d. They paid for what they had, and then went home quietly.

Dec. 22. The Right Hon. the Houſe of Peers are adjourned to Thurſday Jan. 20th, and the Hon. Houſe of Commons to the 14th of the ſaid month.

Dec. 26. 'Tis eſtimated that the enſuing election will coſt the various candidates at leaſt one million ſterling.

Jan. 4. Preparations are making at the old Secretaries office at the cockpit, in order for ſome of the clerks from Lord Shelburne's office, who have the management of the American buſines, to remove there to act under the Earl of Hillſborough, who is appointed Secretary to that department, the buſineſs of the northern department being too much for one ſecretary.

'Tis ſaid the title of Duke of York will be conferred on Prince Frederic, his majeſty's third ſon.

A correſpondent ſays, " many perſons are in raptures with the ſpirited reſolutions (as they call them) of the inhabitants of New-England, not to purchaſe any more goods from hence; but for my part I conſider theſe reſolves as the offſpring of a ſpirit of baſe ingratitude both to the legiſlature of the mother country, and to individuals; to the former it is a very ſcandalous return for their indulgence in the immediate repeal of the ſtamp act as ſoon as it was known to be diſagreable to the Americans; and to the latter, what a pretty requital for the long credit given by them and the loſſes they have ſuſtained, to the abſolute ruin of ſome, and great inconvience of all! was it for this that ſo general a joy prevailed among the people all over England on account of ſo heavy a burthen (as they conceived the ſtamp act to be) having been prevented falling on the ſhoulders of the Americans."

It is ſaid the American colonis are ſparing in no expence to be furniſhed with the beſt Engliſh rams and ſheep in order to promote the breed.

We are informed that there has lately been diſcovered in one of our American colonies, an almoſt inexhauſtable fund of a Saltpetre mine.

There are at preſent more ſhips expoſed to ſale than at any time theſe ten years.

BOSTON. February 25.

In Capt. Jenkins came paſſengers the Capts. Kirkwood, Lyde, and one Mr. Savage, who we hear is recommended to the Commiſſioners of the Revenue, for ſome office in the Cuſtom-houſe.

We are informed by paſſengers in Captain Jenkins, that the ſcarcity of corn and proviſions in England, is very great; that there is much talk of the American manufactures, which is very alarming, eſpecially ſince ſeeing the reſolves of the town of Boſton, and other towns in the province for promoting manufactures.

Letters from London, mention that American affairs will be taken into conſideration on the 16th January, immediately after the meeting of the parliament. No perſon whatever is to be admitted, and the doors to be kept ſhut during the whole time of the deliberations.

Soon after the meeting of the P——, Mr. G—— G——when the Houſe was ſitting produced ſome American news papers, which he ſaid contained doctrine of a dangerous and alarming tendency; and propoſed that the printer ſhould be ſent for, & the author enquired after:—Upon this Mr C——y replied that the gentleman's motion was contrary to the order of the Houſe; that beſide it was only reaſonable before they ſent for printers and authors from ſuch a diſtance, they ſhould make reformation at home among thoſe who were juſt at hand.—It was then put off for 6 months.

By Letters from London, we have Advice that the Univerſity of Edinburgh have conferred a Doctorate in Divinity on the Rev. Mr. ANDREW ELIOT, of this town.

NEW-HAVEN, Febr. 19.

Saturday, Capt. Thompſon Clark of this Port arrived here in 20 Days Paſſage from the Weſt Indies; and informs, that a Brig about 140 Tons (Maſter's Name we don't learn) arrived at Dominica, three Days before he ſailed, and reported, that in Lat. 36, he ſaw the Wrecks of three Veſſels, bottom upwards, one of which was pretty large.

Our other Advices from the Weſt-Indies are, that all the Veſſels from this Port, which ſailed early in the Winter, are arrived at the different Iſlands, and in general carried in their Stock well—that the Markets were very low, good Pork being ſold in ſome of the Iſlands for only eight Dallars per Barrel—that the Crops in the Windward Iſlands were like to be ſhort—and, that the Small-Pox was very riſe at Baſſeterre in St. Kitts, where Inoculation was practiſed with great Succeſs; out of 1500 Slaves Inoculated there, only One (a very old Negro) died. The Black Fever carcarried off, very ſuddenly, great Numbers at that Iſland.

Laſt Wedneſday Morning, about Sunriſe, died, after a lingering Conſumption, in the 37th Year of his Age, Mr. HEZEKIAH COLLYER, of this Place.

[Remainder of the Addreſs to the Freemen, begun in our laſt.]

NOW if this obſervation be reaſonable, what propriety is there in freemen ſo often ſaying (as I have frequently heard them ſay of their neighbours called ſeparates) I heartily wiſh the aſſembly would ſet them off; I am ſorry to have their ſubſtance taken away to ſupport our worſhip. But, brethren, how ſhall a by ſtander believe what you ſay is ſo, when your practice does not agree with your words? for twenty years is paſſed ſince this people have been oppreſſed, their ſubſtance taken by force to ſupport your miniſters, when moſt of them, with all their honeſt labour and induſtry, can ſcarcely ſupport their own miniſters and pay their civil taxes. They have made application to the hon. aſſembly, from time to time, down to the laſt court, aſking nothing of the aſſembly but what is their juſt right, by the law of nature and grace, and no relief given. And what, brethren, have you done, all this while, to get this people releaſed from paying to ſupport your miniſters? Was you hearty, as you ſay, ſhould you not direct your deputies to relieve this people? and more eſpecially becauſe the Moſt High, from whom all your own mercies and bleſſings come, requires you ſo to do ſee Matth. 12. 31.—'Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf.' Luke 6. 31. 'And as ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye alſo to them likewiſe.'—————Now brethren, you know it cannot be loving your neighbour as yourſelf, to ſtrain away their ſubſtance and waſte it at the ſign poſt, for that which your neighbour neither covenanted, eat, drank nor heard for. Neither can you be willing to have the like done to you—your ſubſtance ſtrained from you to ſupport a worſhip you cannot uprightly attend. Why then have you not put in an humble prayer to the aſſembly, whom you have choſen to ſit twice in a year, as a court of equity, to do juſtice to all men? Had you ſo done, there is reaſon to hope that your deſire would be granted, your poor neighbours that are oppreſſed relieved. But if you object and ſay, our miniſters will never conſent to have the ſeparates releaſed from paying rates to them, & the aſſembly will not act counter to them; this objection betrays both you and the aſſembly too, as if the hon. aſſembly was a ſet of men, influenced by a ſet of ambitious, arbitrary clergymen, to act counter to right reaſon, equity and juſtice. For I preſume that the wiſdom of Solomon cannot give a ſufficient reaſon why your neighbours ought not to enjoy the ſacred right of conſcience and an equal ſhare of liberty with yourſelves if as loyal to their king and country (in civil things) as yourſelves, which in general is not queſtioned, &c. Further, if there be any thing in the objection, how do you betray yourſelves, by ſending ſuch men, to act againſt ſcripture and reaſon? and which way can you be innocent, and your garments clean, except you leave ſuch men at home, and chooſe men that you charitably hope, love their neighbours, & are diſpoſed to do to others as they would have done to them in the like caſe, &c. The cry of the oppreſſed is frequently going up from ſecret places, to the God of Juſtice, that he would in his great mercy appear and judge the cauſe of the innocent and oppreſſed. Jer. 21. 12. Therefore men, brethren and fathers, ſeriouſly conſult and ſee what ought to be done in this ſpeaking caſe.

And you will oblige your's to ſerve,

COMPLAINANT. No. VII.

Medecina omnium Artium præclariſſima eſt; verum propter Ignorantiam Eorum qui eam exercent, et ob vulgi Ruditatem, quod tales pro Medicis judicat et habet: Jam eò Res devenit, ut omnium Artium longè viliſſima cenſeatur. HIPPOCR. LEX.

THERE are ſo many ſubjects of complaint in matters relating to the me[illegible] practice of this colony, that, to enter minutely into them, would require a [illegible] volume. I purpoſe at this time only [illegible] preſent a dialogue between Dr. Snakeroot [illegible] Dr. Calomel, who had been brought up together in a long apprenticeſhip of ſix weeks and ſat out about the ſame time into different parts of the country to ſeek their fortune in practice. After mutual congratulations upon meeting one another, the conference went on after this manner.

Snakeroot. But, dear Calomel! you ſay you have got into a conſiderable run of practice——pray tell me how you managed the affair to get a going, and I will give you ſome account how matters work'd with me.

Calomel. With all my heart. Why, I was much peſtered at firſt; there are ſeveral Doctors round about my place that had read much, & underſtood latin, and always talk'd upon the theory, and ſuch as that; and they endeavoured to make the people belive I was an ignorant fellow.

Snaker. Aye, aye! there was a difficulty with me; ſo that I have ſometimes wiſhed with all my heart that I did underſtand ſome of the hard words, and the theory, as they call it. I tried a little to talk in that way, before the Doctors, but they always laugh'd at me for ſaying ſomething that was improper; & ſo I confined that high flown talk to the vulgar. But how did you make out?

Calom. When I firſt went there, it was a healthy time, and I did'nt get ten ſhillings in ten weeks; however, a lucky accident happened after a while——there was a young woman that had a ſmall red pimple, or blood wart upon her cheek, which ſhe was terribly concerned about, fearing it was a cancer, & therefore applied to every new Doctor for his opinion in the caſe. I had the good luck to be applied to among the reſt—ſhe told me it was entirely without pain, and that the Doctors call'd it a Varix. I told her 'twas indeed a cancer, but did not doubt I could cure her; however I could tell by tomorrow morning whether 'twas a cancer or no for I could give her a plaiſter that if it was a cancer, would ſet it a burning, and ſmarting, and bliſtering by tomorrow morning, and in that caſe we muſt loſe no time, but immediately apply to the cure: if it was not a cancer, it would have no effect at all. Upon that I gave her a ſmall plaiſter, well charged with the Spaniſh flies. The next morning the poor girl came to me in the utmoſt conſternation, to ſhew the effect of my plaiſter. I told her "that plaiſter was only for a tryal——'twas what I call'd my cancer trying plaiſter——I could quickly cure the bad effects of that.' I gave her a cerate that as miraculouſly healed it as the other inflam'd it. This gave her and her parents ſuch confidence in my ſkill, that they deſired I would do what I poſſibly could, to avert the fatal impending evil. I conſidered the difficulty, & (perhaps) impoſſibility of removing the little harmleſs pimple, without cutting—I conſidered likewiſe that it might be an advantage to me to have it ſounded about 'that I had cut out a cancer,' and therefore told them "that I doubted it had been of too long ſtanding to be cured without cutting; that I would warrant it to be done with ſafety, and to a final cure.' They conſented, and I performed it to my very great advantage. However, I took care to keep her in hand about a month after the wound was cured, under a notion of rooting it all out of her blood. This, my dear Snakeroot, did the job. The learned Doctors might fret as much as they pleaſed; I got away their practice faſt. You know a cancer is univerſally looked upon one of the moſt dreadful evils that can befal us, and the moſt difficult to be cured, and therefore every little knob, or kernel, or diſcolour'd ſpot that happens, is apt to alarm many people, and ſet them upon trudging away to ſome eminent cancer doctor to take his advice in the matter. Now common fame ſtood my very good friend——it proclaimed all around, that I had a plaiſter that would abſolutely determine whether theſe things were cancers or no, and that, if it proved a cancer, I could cure it. This brought perſons from neighbouring towns, & diſtant ones too, to me for advice; I applied the bliſter plaiſter to determine the matter, as often as it would any ways do for I feared I ſhould betray myſelf if I made cancers much more frequent than they uſed to be; and therefore I eaſed the minds of ſome, by giving for a trial a ſmooth, ſimple plaiſter, that produced no effect at all. This likewiſe ſerved to confirm the infalibility of the experiment: but then I was ſadly puzzled on this account, there were ſundry real cancers came to me, which I knew no more how to cure than a man to the moon; in this caſe I had no other expedient than to pronounce the difficulty too far advanced to be cured; however (I would add) 'there is a poſſibility—I have cured ſome as bad——I will try, and peradventure a bleſſing will attend.' My way was then quickly to decide the caſe with a large quantity of mercury ——the moſt of them indeed have died quickly; but ſome have, to the aſtoniſhment of every body, recovered; ſo that even in theſe caſes my reputation did not ſuffer.—Now you ſee that it was natural for my neighbours to determine that I muſt be a man of extraordinary ſkill, ſince people came ſo far to me, and that if I was ſo ſkilful in cancerous caſes, which are generally accounted the moſt deplorable and obſtinate diſeaſes, I muſt neceſſarily be able to manage other caſes, ſo that I ſoon got into a thriving way.

Snaker. Well, but this was not all the method you took: it never could have held at this rate.

Calom. I don't know but that alone would have done it; but there was another thing that help'd me mightily——the people were quarrelling about a ſituation for a new meeting houſe, about the time that I began to grow ſomething famous, and both parties courted me pretty much. I made my advantage of this, by not declaring directly for either ſide, and ſo kept both parties at play. By theſe means I got them into my books ſo far, that they dare not get out again, and then I declared for the ſtrongeſt ſide, where I remain a man of very great conſequence to this day, and your very humble ſervant.——Now, Sir, give a little narrative of your luck.

Snaker. I never had ſo good luck as you; I never could yet lead a party, nor could I ever get the greater part of the people where I live to employ me. The theoriſts laugh'd at me, and run me down; and I found it was in vain to pretend that I was a learned man: I therefore took another courſe——I rail'd at all learning; condemn'd apothecary's ſhops, and all foreign medicines; ſaid that our great doctors, with mercury, and other pernicious drugs, had kill'd their thouſands; that I practiſed in a ſafe manner, with the roots and herbs of our own country; that every country afforded, by its natural growth, the beſt remedies for all diſeaſes incident to the inhabitants of that country; that the Indians, by a thouſand years experience, had learnt the virtues of the wild produce of this land, and that I had learnt of them, & valued their knowledge more than can be got from all the books in the college library. This did me much ſervice; for it put an end to all diſputes with the Doctors, becauſe I was upon another footing d'ye ſee. It made the good women, that were afraid of mercury and opium, and thoſe dreadful edge tools that the great doctors uſe, careſs me highly: in return for their kindneſs I cried up their ſkill, and applauded motherwort & feverfew to the ſkies, becauſe the good deacon's wife, matron in chief, thought they were excellent. I aſſure you 'tis a great point to get well in with the good old women, in our buſineſs. I did it conſiderably, though not ſo effectually as I could have wiſhed; for I was a good deal deſpiſed by ſome of the beſt people in every place: but I rode round a great deal in ſome of the back ſkirts of all the adjacent pariſhes, and made out to get a pretty good livelihood. But I ſhould have failed of ever getting into half the practice I have now, if I had not confidently affirm'd that I was maſter of moſt of the celebrated noſtrums of our country; and that I purchaſed them (as the chief Captain did the freedom of Rome) with a great ſum. I had got (I pretended) the recipe's of every noted practitioner, regular or emperical. I learnt of the great Dr. B——t to cure the dropſy, of Dr. H-nt----n to cure the conſumption————Dr. H--l taught me his method of curing the cholick. Dr. B--kl-y, in conſideration of ſome love, and a great deal of money, communicated to me all his ſkill in epiliptic caſes. Dr. P-rt-r gave me a great deal of a notion about ſetting bones, (but by the way, I always fail'd when I attempted any thing of this kind, ſo I was cautious.) And I had, in addition to all got Sh-ld-n's receipt for the rickets; and had learnt the Indian way of curing the king's evil. Thus furniſhed with pretence, if not with ſkill, I quickly found myſelf ſo much eſteemed as to get buſineſs enough.

Calom. I give you joy. We'll meet again this evening. Adieu.

LETTER IX.

My dear Countrymen,

I HAVE made ſome obſervations on the Purpoſes for which money is to be levied upon us by the late act of parliament. I ſhall now offer to your conſideration ſome further reflections on that ſubject; and unleſs I am greatly miſtaken, if theſe purpoſes are accompliſhed according to the expreſt intention of the act, they will be found effectually to ſuperſede that authority in our reſpective aſſemblies, which is eſſential to liberty. The queſtion is not, whether ſome branches ſhall be lopt off—The ax is laid to the root of the tree; and the whole body muſt infallibly periſh, if we remain idle ſpectators of the work.

No free people ever exiſted, or can ever exiſt, without keeping, to uſe a common but ſtrong expreſſion, "the purſe ſtrings" in their own hands. Where this is the caſe, they have a conſtitutional check upon the adminiſtration, which may thereby be brought into order without violence: but where ſuch a power is not lodged in the people, oppreſſion proceeds uncontrouled in its career, till the governed tranſported into rage ſeek redreſs in the midſt of blood and confuſion.

The elegant and ingenious Mr. Hume, ſpeaking of the Anglo Norman government ſays——"Princes and Miniſters were too ignorant, to be themſelves ſenſible of the advantage attending an equitable adminiſtration and there was no eſtabliſhed council or aſſembly, which could protect the people, and by withdrawing ſupplies regularly and peaceably admoniſh the King of his duty and enſure the execution of the laws."

The English hiſtory abounds with inſtances proving that this is the proper and ſucceſsful way to obtain redreſs of grievances.——How often have Kings and miniſters endeavoured to throw off this legal curb upon them, by attempting to raiſe money by a variety of inventions under pretence of law, without having recourſe to parliament? And how often have they been brought to reaſon and peaceably obliged to do juſtice by the exertion of this conſtitutional authority of the people, veſted in their repreſentatives?

The inhabitants of theſe colonies have, on numberleſs occaſions, reaped the benefit of this authority lodged in their aſſemblies.

It has been for a long time, and now is a conſtant inſtruction to all governors, to obtain a permanent ſupport for the offices of government. But as the author of "The adminiſtration of the colonies" ſays, "This order of the crown is generally, if not univerſally, rejected by the legiſlatures of the colonies."

They perfectly know how much their grievances would be regarded, if they had no other method of engaging attention, than by complaining. Thoſe who rule, are extremely apt to think well of the conſtructions made by themſelves in ſupport of their own power. Theſe are frequently erroneous, and pernicious to thoſe they govern. Dry remonſtrances to ſhew that ſuch conſtructions are wrong and oppreſſive, carry very little weight with them, in the opinion of perſons who gratify their own inclinations in making theſe conſtructions. They cannot underſtand the reaſoning that oppoſes their power and deſires. But let it be made their intereſt to underſtand ſuch reaſoning—and a wonderful light is inſtantly thrown upon the matter; and then, rejected remonſtrances, become as clear as "* proofs of holy writ."

The three moſt important articles that our aſſemblies, or any legiſlatures can provide for, are——Firſt, the defence of the ſociety: Secondly, the adminiſtration of juſtice. And, thirdly, the ſupport of civil government.

Nothing can properly regulate the expence of making proviſion for theſe occaſions, but the neceſſities of the ſociety; its abilities; the conveniency of the modes of levying money among them: the manner in which the laws have been executed; and the conduct of the officers of government: All which are circumſtances that cannot poſſibly be properly known, but by the ſociety itſelf; or if they ſhould be known, will not probably be properly conſidered but by that ſociety.

If money be raiſed upon us, by others, without our conſent, for our "defence,"—thoſe who are the judges in levying it, muſt alſo be the judges in applying it. Of conſequence the money ſaid to be taken from us for our defence, may be employed to our injury. We may be chained in by a line of fortifications—obliged to pay for the building and maintaining them——and to be told that they are for our defence. With what face can we diſpute the fact, after having granted that thoſe who apply the money, had a right to levy it? For ſurely, it is much eaſier for their wiſdom to underſtand how to apply it in the beſt manner, than how to levy it in the beſt manner. Beſides, the right of levying is of infinitely more conſequence, than that of applying. The people of England, who would burſt out into fury, if the crown ſhould attempt to levy money by its own authority, have always aſſigned to the crown the application of money.

As to "the adminiſtration of juſtice"——the judges ought in a well regulated ſtate to be equally independent of the executive and legiſlative powers. Thus in England judges hold their commiſſions from the crown "during good behaviour" and have ſalaries ſuitable to their dignity, ſettled on them by parliament. The purity of the courts of law ſince this eſtabliſhment, is a proof of the wiſdom with which it was made.

But in theſe colonies, how fruitleſs has been every attempt to have the judges appointed "during good behaviour?" Yet whoever conſiders the matter will ſoon perceive, that ſuch commiſſions are, beyond all compariſon, more neceſſary in theſe colonies than they were in England.

The chief danger to the ſubject there, aroſe from the arbitrary deſigns of the crown; but here, the time may come, when we may have to contend with the deſign of the crown and of a mighty kingdom. What then muſt be our chance, when the laws of life and death are to be ſpoken by judges totally dependant on that crown and that kingdom—ſent over perhaps from thence——filled with Britiſh prejudices, and backed by a ſtanding army—ſupported out of our own pockets, to 'aſſert and maintain' our own 'dependance and obedience.'

But ſuppoſing that thro' the extreme lenity that will prevail in the government thro' all future ages, theſe colonies will never behold any thing like the campaign of chief Juſtice Jefferys, yet what innumerable acts of injuſtice may be committed and how fatally may the principles of liberty be ſapped, by a ſucceſſion of judges utterly independant of the people? Before ſuch judges, the ſupple wretches who cheerfully join in avowing ſentiments inconſiſtent with freedom, will always meet with ſmiles; while the honeſt & brave men, who diſdain to ſacrifice their native land to their own advantage, but on every occaſion boldly vindicate her cauſe, will conſtantly be regarded with frowns. There are two other conſiderations relating to this head, that deſerve the moſt ſerious attention.

By the late act, the officers of the cuſtoms are "impowered to enter into any Houſe, warehouſe, ſhop, cellar, or other place in the Britiſh colonies or plantations in America, to ſearch for or ſeize prohibited or unaccuſtomed goods" or on "writs granted by the ſuperior or ſupreme court of juſtice having juriſdiction within ſuch colony or plantation reſpectively."

If we only reflect, that the judges of theſe courts are to be during pleaſure—that they are to have 'adequate proviſion' made for them, which is to continue during their compliſant behaviour——that they may be ſtrangers to theſe colonies——what an engine of oppreſſion may this authority be in ſuch hands?

I am well aware, that writs of this kind may be granted at home, under the ſeal of the court of exchequer; but I know alſo, that the greateſt aſſertors of the rights of Engliſhmen, have always ſtrenuouſly contended, that ſuch a power was dangerous to freedom, and expreſsly contrary to the common law, which ever regarded a mans houſe as his caſtle, or a place of a perfect ſecurity.

If ſuch a power was in the leaſt degree dangerous there, it muſt be utterly deſtructive to liberty here. For the people there have two ſecurities againſt the undue exerciſe of this power by the crown which are wanting with us if the late act takes place. In the firſt place, if any injuſtice is done there, the perſon injured may bring his action againſt the offender, and have it tried before independant judges who are * no parties in committing the injury. Here he muſt have it tried before dependant judges, being the men who granted the writ.

To ſay, that the cauſe is to be tried by a jury, can never reconcile men who have an idea of freedom, to ſuch a power. For we know that ſheriffs in almoſt every colony on this continent, are totally dependant on the crown; and packing of juries has been frequently practiſed even in the capital of the Britiſh empire. Even if juries are well inclined, we have too many inſtances of the influence of overbearing unjuſt judges upon them. The brave and wiſe men who accompliſhed the revolution, thought the independancy of judges eſſential to freedom.

The other ſecurity which the people have at home, but which we ſhall want here, is this.

If this power is abuſed there, the parliament, the grand reſource of the oppreſt people, is ready to afford relief. Redreſs of grievances muſt precede grants of money. But what regard can we expect to have, paid to our aſſemblies, when they will not hold even the puny privilege of French parliaments——that of regiſtering the edicts that take away our money, before they are put in execution.

The condition above hinted, is this. There is a confuſion in our laws, that is quite unknown in Great Britain. As this cannot be deſcribed in a more clear exact manner, than has been done by the ingenious author of the hiſtory of New York, I beg leave to uſe his words. "The ſtate of our laws opens a door to much controverſy. The uncertainty with reſpect to them, renders property precarious, and greatly expoſes us to the arbitrary deciſion of bad judges. The common law of England is generally received, together with ſuch ſtatutes as were enacted before we had a legiſlature of our own; but our courts exerciſe a ſovereign authority in determining what parts of the common and ſtatute law ought to be extended: for it muſt be admitted, that the difference of circumſtances, neceſſarily requires us, in ſome caſes to reject the determination of both. In many inſtances, they have alſo extended even acts of parliament, paſſed ſince we had a diſtinct legiſlature, which is greatly adding to our confuſion. The practice of courts is no leſs uncertain than the law. Some of the Engliſh rules are adopted, others rejected. Two things therefore ſeem to be abſolutely neceſſary for the public ſecurity. Firſt, the paſſing an act for ſettling the extent of the Engliſh laws. Secondly, that the courts ordain a general ſet of rules for the regulation of the practice.'

* Shakeſpear

* The writs for ſearching houſes in England, are to be granted "under the ſeal of the court of exchequer," according to the ſtatute——and that ſeal is kept by the chancellor of the exchequer 4th Inſt.

How eaſy it will be under this 'ſtate of our laws' for an artful judge to act in the moſt arbitrary manner, and yet cover his conduct under ſpecious pretences, and how difficult will it be for the injured people to obtain relief, may be readily perceived. We may take a voyage of 3000 mile to complain; & after the trouble and hazard we have undergone, we may be told, that the collection of the revenue and maintainance of the prerogative, muſt not be diſcouraged ——and if the miſbehaviour is ſo groſs as to admit of no juſtification, it may be ſaid, that it was an error in judgment only, ariſing from the confuſion of our laws, and the zeal of the king's ſervants to do their duty.

If the commiſſions of judges are during the pleaſure of the crown, yet if their ſalaries are during the pleaſure of the people, there will be ſome check upon their conduct. Few men will conſent to draw on themſelves the hatred and contempt of thoſe among whom they live, for the empty honour of being judges. It is the ſordid love of gain, that tempts men to turn their backs on virtue, and pay their homage where they ought not.

As to the third particular, 'the ſupport of civil government'——few words will be ſufficient. Every man of the leaſt underſtanding muſt know, that the executive power may be exerciſed in a manner ſo diſagreeable and harraſſing to the people, that it is abſolutely requiſite, that they ſhould be enabled by the gentleſt method which human policy has yet been ingenious enough to invent that is, by ſhutting their hands to 'admoniſh (as Mr. Hume ſays) certain perſons ' of their DUTY."

What ſhall we now think, when upon looking into the late act we find the aſſemblies of theſe provinces, thereby ſtript of their authority on theſe ſeveral heads? The declared intention of the act is, 'that a revenue ſhould be raiſed in his Majeſty's DOMINIONS in America, for making a more certain and adequate proviſion for defraying the charge of THE ADMINISTRATION of juſtice and the ſupport of CIVIL GOVERNMENT in ſuch provinces where it ſhall be found neceſſary, and towards further defraying the expences of defending, protecting, and ſecuring the ſaid dominions, &c.'

Let the reader pauſe here one moment & reflect—whether the colony in which he lives has not made ſuch 'certain and adequate proviſion' for theſe purpoſes, as is by the colony judged ſuitable to its abilities, & all other circumſtances. Then let him reflect ——whether if this act takes place, money is not to be raiſed on that colony without its conſent, to make a proviſion for theſe purpoſes, which it does not judge to be ſuitable to its abilities, and all other circumſtances —— Laſtly, let him reflect. whether the people of that country are not in a ſtate of the moſt abject ſlavery, whoſe property may be taken from them under the notion of right, when they have refuſed to give it. For my part, I think I have good reaſon for vindicating the honour of the aſſemblies on this continent, by publickly aſſerting, that they have made as 'certain and adequate proviſion' for the purpoſes abovementioned, as they ought to have made; and that it ſhould not be preſumed, that they will not do it hereafter. Why then ſhould theſe moſt important truths be wreſted out of their hands? Why ſhould they not now be permitted to enjoy that authority, which they have exerciſed from the firſt ſettlement of theſe colonies? Why ſhould they be ſcandalized by this innovation, when their reſpective provinces are now, and will be for ſeveral years, labouring under loads of debts, impoſed on them for the very purpoſes now ſpoken of? Why ſhould the inhabitants of all theſe colonies be with the utmoſt indignity treated, as a herd of deſpicable wretches, ſo utterly void of common ſenſe, that they will not make 'adequate proviſion' for the 'adminiſtration of juſtice' and 'the ſupport of civil government' among them, or for their 'own defence." tho' without ſuch 'proviſion' every people muſt be overwhelmed with anarchy and deſtruction? is it poſſible to form an idea of ſlavery more complete, more miſerable, more diſgraceful, than that of a people where juſtice is adminiſtered, government exerciſed and a ſtanding army maintained, at the expence of the people, and yet without the leaſt dependance upon them? If we can find no relief from this infamous ſituation, let Mr Grenville ſet his fertile fancy again at work as by one exertion of it, he has ſtripped us of our property and liberty, let him by another deprive us of our underſtanding too, that unconſcious of what we have been or are and ungoaded by tormenting reflections, may tamely bow down our necks with all the ſtupid ſerenity of ſervitude to any drudgery, which our lords and maſtes may pleaſe to command.

When the 'charges of the adminiſtration of juſtice.'——" the ſupport of civil government,"——and the expences of defending, protecting, and ſecuring us, are provided for I ſhould be glad to know upon what occaſions the crown will ever call our aſſemblies together. Some few o hem may meet of their own accord, by virtue of their charter; but what will they have to do when they are met? To what ſhadows will they be reduced? the men whoſe deliberations heretofore had an influence on every matter relating to the liberty and happineſs of themſelves and their conſtituents, and whoſe authority in domeſtick affairs, at leaſt, might well be compared to that of Roman ſenators, will now find their deliberations of no more conſequence than thoſe of conſtables.——they may perhaps, be allowed to make laws for yoking of hogs or pounding ſtray cattle. Their influence will hardly be permitted to extend ſo high as the keeping roads in repair, as that buſineſs may more properly be executed by thoſe who receive the public caſh.

One moſt memorable example in hiſtory is ſo applicable to the point now inſiſted on, that it will form a juſt concluſion of the obſervations that have been made.

Spain was once free. Their cortes reſembled our parliaments, no money could be raiſed on the ſubject without their conſent. One of their kings having received a grant from them, to maintain a war againſt the Moores, deſired that if the term which they had given, ſhould not be ſufficient, he might be allowed, for that emergency only, to raiſe more money without aſſembling the cortes. The requeſt was violently oppoſed by the beſt and wiſeſt men in the aſſembly. It was however complied with by the votes of a majority; and this ſingle conceſſion was a precedent for other conceſſions of the like kind, until at laſt, the crown obtained a general power of raiſing money in caſes of neceſſity. From that period the cortes ceaſed to be uſeful———the people ceaſed to be free.

The Memorial of the Memorialiſt, in behalf of himſelf, and the reſt of the Freemen, Huſbandmen, and Tradeſmen, within ſaid Colony. Humbly ſheweth,

THAT ſaid Memorialiſt, for many years, has been a diligent obſerver of the trade and buſineſs of ſaid colony, & with much attention and concern, beholds the country, at this time (as he apprehends) in great danger of falling into a ſtate of abject bankruptcy and poverty, unleſs ſome ſpeedy remedy ſhall be provided. For though our land yields us (by the kind indulgence of providence) all the neceſſaries, and many of the conveniencies of life, yet our trade is ſo contracted, and ſo mercenary, that it is conſtantly raiſing the ſcale againſt us. Our Weſt India trade (which is the beſt we have) drains us of many valuable articles of our country produce, and the returns we have is principally rum, an article, in the conſumption of which, has been, and is, exceeding deſtructive, both to the morals and eſtates of the people. Our furr and leather trade is ſo carried on, that nothing but caſh procures thoſe articles, which, in ſuch a country as this, is always making the ballance againſt us. And as for the goods we have from Great Britain, by the way of Boſton or New-York, they come to us through the third, or fourth, or fifth hands, and is, pehaps, the moſt narrow and contracted trade ever any people (furniſhed with ſo many and ſo good harbours and ſea ports as this colony has to boaſt of) went into and purſued. This low, contracted trade the people of this colony early began with, and all along have managed, againſt themſelves: For by this trade, i. e. to Boſton and New-York, with ſilver money, the traders and ſhopkeepers formerly ſunk the value of the bills of public credit of the New England colonies, more than nine parts out of ten, which worked many evils among the people, ſo that the legiſlature found it neceſſary to put an end to thoſe bills which might have ſerv'd as a medium of trade to this day, had they continued undepreciated. And this Memorialiſt begs leave further to obſerve, that when the charge of the late war came upon us, the ſoldiers trading with our ſhop keepers, they carried off ſo much of our ſilver, that it became impracticable to trade with that as a medium: but a flood of goods coming in among us, every one almoſt traded upon credit, and many vaſtly beyond their income, the country ſeemed, in a few years, to be inveloped in a general deluge of inſolvency. The ſhop keepers, many of them, broke for want of their dues; our lands ſunk about three parts out of four—huſbandmen not able to hire labourers to gather in their crops—tradeſmen not able to procure neceſſary ſtock to carry on their buſineſs, & but very few able to pay their debts—and where ſickneſs came, the patient not able to pay his phyſician.

All theſe, and many more evils, ſtraits and difficulties ariſe amongſt us, by men's trading out of the colony with money, and (as this Memorialiſt humbly conceives) if perſiſted in, will always prevent the people from carrying on any buſineſs to any good effect; and this colony (though rich in ſoil) will remain poor and dependant, and more and more become the ſcorn and deriſion of her neighbours, &c.

Which to prevent, the Memorialiſt humbly propoſes to the Hon. legiſlature of this colony, whether it is not expedient to regulate the trade of this colony, and endeavour to put ourſelves into more reſpectable circumſtances. Therefore the ſaid Memorialiſt humbly propoſes to conſideration, whether it is not expedient that the legiſlature make and paſs the three following particulars (or ſomething ſimilar thereto) into acts or laws of this colony, viz.

1. That no perſons whatſoever, ſhall, for the future, trade out of this colony, but only on effects made or raiſed in this colony.

2. That for the future, no perſon or perſons, trading out of this colony, ſhall not purchaſe any goods or effects, to make merchandize of in this colony, any where but in that place or country where they are raiſed or manufactured; and then ſuch articles will come to us at the prime coſt.

3. That every perſon, or perſons, trading off, into foriegn parts, on the effects of this colony, ſhall bring into this colony, one fifth part of the effects which he or they ſhall ſo export, in caſh, that the ſame may be laid out by ſuch trader, to purchaſe ſuch commodities as are raiſed or manufactured among ourſelves.

Now this Memorialiſt humbly propoſes theſe things to the public for conſideration; and begs leave to enforce the ſame with the following reaſons, viz.

1ſt. It is the duty of the traders in this colony to bring in ſilver and gold into this colony, becauſe they have, by carrying of it out, diſappointed the farmers, the tradeſmen, and themſelves, to that degree, that many of each occupation are ruined in their eſtates, and become inſolvents.

2dly. It is the duty and intereſt of the trader to bring money into the colony, as much as it is the duty of the farmer to raiſe effects: for they mutually ſtand in need of money, for a medium of trade, in all parts of the colony, as much as the trader does in foreign parts.

3dly. Enabling the farmers and tradeſmen, to furniſh the traders with the produce of the colony, will greatly tend to increaſe our merchandize, and promote induſtry among all occupations.

4thly. Unleſs ſomething of this nature ſhall ſpeedily be done; it appears to this Memorialiſt, impoſſible the country can ſubſiſt in any comfortable circumſtances; our traders and ſhopkeepers have ſo drained the country of money, we are ſeized as it were with a general Conſumption and all faces gather paleneſs; and many perſons are no ways able to pay their out ſtanding debts and Country rates which have been due many years.

And here this Memorialiſt, begs liberty further to add, that he pays the tendereſt regard, reſpect, defference, and honour, to the legiſlative body of this colony, eſpecially to the Honourable Gentlemen of the upper houſe of Aſſembly; yet nevertheleſs ſuppoſes it may not be out of character to ſay, that it appears to this Memorialiſt abſolutely requiſite every occupation, buſineſs & calling (which is lawful) be mutually and fairly repreſented and noticed in the general aſſembly.

It appears neceſſary that every trade, calling, and occupation, be encouraged in the ſeveral parts of the colony, otherwiſe the people will in ſome places, ſuffer many diſadvantages, needleſs now to enumerate.—Now this will not be done, unleſs every part of the government be fairly repreſented, As for inſtance: ſuppoſe all the gentlemen of the upper board, were traders and merchants, and perhaps many of them might owe large ſums of money to gentlemen out of the colony; can it be ſuppoſed that ſuch gentlemen would adopt the foregoing plan? No; the ſame contracted trading ſcheme which has brought upon us the many evils we feel for want of a proper medium of commerce will not admit of it.

Therefore it appears to this Memorialiſt, and he flatters himſelf it will appear ſo to the maſs of his brethren freemen of this corporation that our Legiſlature ſhould be compoſed of gentlemen of various occupations ſome of them Traders or Merchants, ſome of them tradeſmen; and it appears moſt neceſſary that one half (at leaſt) of them ſhould be Farmers and Huſbandmen, and they would look carefully after the intereſt of the colony, for it would be their own intereſt; and that (as the proverb is) never lies. That theſe things may be taken into ſerious conſideration, by every freeman, and the foregoing plan adopted, as bound in duty ever prays

N.B. The Memorialiſt begs liberty to propoſe the foregoing Memorial may be communicated to the freemen at their next meeting.

LOVING BROTHER,

"I am glad to hear from you.——I underſtand that you are very much grieved, and that tears run from your eyes.—With both my hands I now wipe away thoſe tears, and, as I dont doub't but your heart is diſturbed I remove all the ſorrow from it, and make it eaſy as it was before. I will now ſit down and ſmoke my pipe.——I have taken faſt hold the chain of friendſhip; and when I give it a pull, if I find my Brothers the Engliſh have let it go, it will then be time for me to let go too, and take care of my family.—There are four of my relations murdered by Stump; and all I deſire is, that he may ſuffer for his wicked action; I ſhall then think that your people have the ſame goodneſs in their hearts as formerly, and intend to keep it there. As it was the evil ſpirit who cauſed Stump to commit this bad action, I blame none of my brothers the Engliſh but him.

My dear Countrymen,

THE conſequences, mentioned in the laſt letter, will not be the utmoſt limits of our miſery and infamy. We feel, too ſenſibly, that any miniſterial meaſures, relating to theſe colonies are ſoon carried ſucceſsfully through the parliament. Certain prejudices operate there ſo ſtrongly againſt us, that it may juſtly be queſtioned, whether all the provinces united will ever be able effectually to call to an account, before the parliament, any miniſter who ſhall abuſe the power by the late act given to the CROWN in America. He may divide the ſpoils torn from us, in what manner he pleaſes; and we ſhall have no way of making him reſponſible. If he ſhould order, that every governour ſhall have a yearly ſalary of 5000l. ſterl. every chief juſtice of 3000l. every inferior officer in proportion; and ſhould then reward the moſt profligate, ignorant, or needy dependants on himſelf, or his friends, with places of the greateſt truſt, becauſe they were of the greateſt profit, this would be called an arrangement in conſequence of the 'adequate proviſion for defraying the charge of the adminiſtration of juſtice, and the ſupport of the civil government.' And if the taxes ſhould prove at any time inſufficient to anſwer all the expences of the numberleſs offices, which miniſters may pleaſe to create, ſurely the houſe of commons would be too 'modeſt' to contradict a miniſter who ſhould tell them it was become neceſſary to lay a new tax upon the colonies for the laudable purpoſe of 'defraying the charges of 'the adminiſtration of juſtice, and the ſupport of civil government' among them.——Thus in fact we ſhall be taxed by miniſters.

LETTER X.

My dear Countrymen,

THE conſequences, mentioned in the laſt letter, will not be the utmoſt limits of our miſery and infamy. We feel, too ſenſibly, that any miniſterial meaſures, relating to theſe colonies are ſoon carried ſucceſsfully through the parliament. We may perceive, from the example of Ireland, how eager miniſters are to ſeize upon any ſettled revenue, and apply it in ſupporting their own power.——Happy are the men and happy the people, who grow wiſe by their misfortunes. Earneſtly my dear countrymen do I beſeech the author of all good gifts, that you may grow wiſe in this manner; And if I may be allowed to take the liberty, I beg leave to recommend to you in general as the beſt method of obtaining wiſdom, diligently, to ſtudy the hiſtories of other countries. You will there find all the arts, that can poſſibly be practiſed by cunning rulers, or falſe patriots among yourſelves, ſo fully delineated, that changing names, the account would ſerve for your own times.

It is pretty well known on this continent, that IRELAND has, with a regular conſiſtence of injuſtice, been cruelly treated by miniſters, in the articles of penſions; but there are ſome alarming circumſtances relating to that ſubject, which I wiſh to have better known among us.

The revenue of the crown there, ariſes principally from the EXCISE granted 'for pay of the army and defraying other public charges in defence and preſervation of the kingdom"—from the tonnage and additional poundage granted "for protecting the trade 'of the kingdom at ſea, and augmenting the 'public revenue"——from the hearth money granted as a "public revenue for public 'charges and expences." There are ſome other branches of the revenue, concerning which there is not any expreſs appropriation of them for public ſervice, but which were plainly ſo intended.

Of theſe branches of the revenue, the crown is only a truſtee for the public. They are unalienable; they are inapplicable to any other purpoſes, but thoſe for which they were eſtabliſhed; and therefore are not legally chargeable with penſions.

There is another kind of revenue, which is a private revenue. This is not limited to any public uſes; but the crown has the ſame property in it, that any perſon has in his eſtate. This does not amount at the moſt to fifteen thouſand pounds a year, probably not to ſeven; and is the only revenue that can legally be charged with penſions. If miniſters were accuſtomed to regard the rights or happineſs of the people, the penſions in Ireland would not exceed the ſum juſt mentioned: But long ſince have they exceeded that limit, and in December 1765, a motion was made in the houſe of commons in that kingdom, to addreſs his Majeſty, on the great increaſe of penſions on the IRISH eſtabliſhment, amounting to the ſum of £. 158,685 in the laſt two years.

Attempts have been made to gloſs over theſe groſs incroachments, by this ſpecious argument,——"That expending a compe-'tent part of the PUBLIC REVENUE in pen-'ſions, from a principle of charity or gene-'roſity, adds to the dignity of the crown, 'and is, therefore, uſeful to the public."— To give this argument any weight, it muſt appear that the penſions proceed from 'charity or generoſity" only—And that it adds to the dignity of the crown to act directly contrary to law.

From this conduct towards IRELAND, in open violation of law, we may eaſily foreſee what we may expect, when a miniſter will have the whole revenue of America, in his own hands, to be diſpoſed of at his own pleaſure. For all the monies raiſed by the late act are to be 'applied, by virtue of warrants under the ſign manual, counterſigned by the 'high treaſurer, or any three of the commiſ-'ſioners of the treaſury.' The 'reſidue' in-'deed, is to be paid into the receipt of the 'exchequer, and to be diſpoſed of by par-'liament.' So that a miniſter will have nothing to do but to take care that there ſhall be no 'reſidue', and he is ſuperior to all controul.

Beſides the burden of penſions in Ireland which have enormouſly increaſed within theſe few years, almoſt all the offices, in that poor kingdom, have, ſince the commencement of the preſent century, and are now beſtowed upon ſtrangers. For though the merit of thoſe born there juſtly raiſes them to places of high truſt, when they go abroad, as all Europe can witneſs, yet he is an uncommonly lucky Iriſhman, who can get a good poſt in his native country.

When I conſider the manner in which that Iſland has been uniformly depreſſed for ſo many years paſt, with this pernicious particularity of their parliament continuing as long as the crown pleaſes, I am aſtoniſhed to obſerve ſuch a love of liberty ſtill animating that loyal and generous nation; and nothing can raiſe higher my idea of the integrity & public ſpirit of a people, who have preſerved the ſacred fire of freedom from being extinguiſhed, tho' the altar, on which it burned, has been thrown down.

In the ſame manner ſhall we unqueſtionably be treated, as ſoon as the late taxes, laid upon us, ſhall make poſts in the 'government,' and the 'adminiſtration of juſtice' here, worth the attention of perſons of influence in Great Britain. We know enough already to ſatisfy us of this truth. But t[illegible]ill not be the worſt part of our caſe.

The principals in all great offices will reſide in England, making ſome paltry allowance to deputies for doing the buſineſs here. Let any man conſider what an exhauſting drain this muſt be upon us, when miniſters are poſſeſſed of the power of affixing what ſalaries they pleaſe to poſts, and he muſt be convinced how deſtructive the late act muſt be. The injured kingdom, lately mentioned, can tell us the miſchiefs of abſentees; & we may percieve already the ſame diſpoſition taking place with us. The government of New-York has been exerciſed by a deputy. That of Virginia is now held ſo; and we know of a number of ſecretary ſhips, collectorſhips, and other offices held in the ſame manner.

True it is, that if the people of G. Britain were not much blinded by the paſſions, that have been artfully excited in their breaſts againſt their dutiful children, the conſiderations would be nearly as alarming to them as us. The influence of the crown was tho't by wiſe men many years ago, too great, by reaſon of the multitude of penſions and places beſtowed by it; theſe have vaſtly increaſed ſince, and perhaps it would be no difficult matter to prove that the people's have decreaſed.

Surely, therefore, thoſe who wiſh the welfare of their country, ought ſeriouſly to reflect what may be the conſequence of ſuch a new creation of offices, in the diſpoſal of the crown. The army, the adminiſtration of juſtice, and the civil government here, with ſuch ſalaries as the crown ſhall pleaſe to annex, will extend miniſterial influence, as much beyond its former bounds, as the late war did the Britiſh dominions.

But whatever the people of Great Britain may think on this occaſion, I hope the people of theſe colonies will unanimouſly join in this ſentiment, that the late act of parliament is injurious to their liberty; and that this ſentiment will unite them in a firm oppoſition to it, in the ſame manner as the dread of the Stamp Act did.

Some perſons may imagine the ſums to be raiſed by it are but ſmall, and therefore may be inclined to acquieſce under it. A conduct more dangerous to freedom, as before has been obſerved, can never be adopted. Nothing is wanted at home but a precedent the force of which ſhall be eſtabliſhed, by the tacit ſubmiſſion of the colonies. With what zeal was the ſtatute erecting the poſt office, and another relating to the recovery of debts in America, urged and tortured, as precedents in ſupport of the Stamp act, tho' wholly inapplicable? If the parliament ſucceeds in this attempt, other ſtatutes will impoſe other duties. Inſtead of taxing ourſelves as we have been accuſtomed to do from the firſt ſettlement of theſe provinces; all our uſual taxes will be converted into parliamentary taxes on our importations; and thus the parliament will levy upon us ſuch ſums of money as they chuſe to take, without any other limitation than their pleaſure.

We know how much labour and care have been beſtowed by theſe colonies, in laying taxes in ſuch a manner that they ſhould be made eaſy to the people, by being laid on the proper articles; moſt equal, by being proportioned to every man's circumſtances & cheapeſt, by the method directed for collecting them.

But parliamentary taxes will be laid on us without any conſideration, whether there is any eaſier mode. The only point regarded will be, the certainty of levying the taxes, & not to the convenience of the people, on whom they are to be levied; and therefore all ſtatutes on this head will be ſuch as will be moſt likely according to the favourite phraſe, "to execute themſelves."

Taxes in every free ſtate have been and ought to be as exactly proportioned as is poſſible, to the abilities of thoſe who are to pay them. They cannot otherwiſe be juſt.—— Even a Hottentot could comprehend the unreaſonableneſs of making a poor man pay as much for defending the property of a rich man, as the rich man pays himſelf.

Let any perſon look into the late act of parliament, and he will immediately perceive that the immenſe eſtates of lord Fairfax lord Baltimore and our Proprietors, which are amongſt his 'Majeſty's other domions' to be 'defended, protected and ſecured' by that act, will not pay a ſingle farthing of the duties thereby impoſed, except lord Fairfax wants ſome of his windows glazed. Lord Baltimore and our Proprietors are quite ſecure, as they live in England.

I mention theſe particular caſes as ſtriking inſtances, how far the late act is a deviation from that principle of juſtice which has ſo conſtantly diſtinguiſhed our own laws on this continent.

The third conſideration with our continental aſſemblies in laying taxes, has been the method of collecting them. This has been done by a few officers under the inſpection of the reſpective aſſemblies with moderate allowances. No more was raiſed from the ſubject, than was uſed for the intended purpoſes. But by the late act a miniſter may appoint as many officers as he pleaſes for collecting the taxes; may aſſign them what ſalaries he thinks adequate? and they are to be ſubject to no inſpection but his own.

In ſhort, if the late act of parliament takes effect theſe colonies muſt dwindle down into common corporations, as their enemies in the debates concerning the repeal of the Stamp Act, ſtrenuouſly inſiſted they were: and it is not improbable, that ſome future hiſtorians will thus record our fall.

'The eigth year of this reign was diſtinguiſhed by a very memorable event, the American colonies then ſubmitting for the firſt time, to be taxed by the Britiſh parliament. An attempt of this kind had been made about two years before, but was defeated by the vigorous exertions of the ſeveral provinces in defence of their liberties. Their behavior on that occaſion rendered their name vary celebrated for a ſhort time all over Europe; all ſtates being extremely attentive to a diſpute between Great Britain, and ſo conſiderable a part of her dominions. For as ſhe was tho't to be grown too powerful by the ſucceſsful concluſion of the late war ſhe had been engaged in, it was hoped by many that as it had happened before to other kingdoms, civil diſcords would afford opportunities of revenging all the injuries ſuppoſed to be received from her.——However the cauſe of diſſention was removed by a repeal of the ſtatute that had given offence this affair rendered the ſubmiſſive conduct of the colonies ſoon after, the more extraordinary; there being no difference between the modes of taxation which they oppoſed, and that to which they ſubmitted, but this, that by the firſt they were to be continually reminded that they were taxed, by certain marks ſtampt on every piece of paper or parchment they uſed. The authors of that ſtatute triumphed greatly on this conduct of the colonies, and inſiſted that if the people of Great Britain had perſiſted in enforcing it the Americans would have been in a few months ſo fatigued with the efforts of patriotiſm, that they would quickly have yielded obedience.

'Certain it is, that though they had before their eyes ſo many illuſtrious examples in their mother country, of the conſtant ſucceſs attending firmneſs and perſeverence in oppoſition to dangerous encroachments on liberty, yet they quietly gave up a point of the Laſt Importance. From thence the decline of their freedom began, and its decay was extremely rapid; for as money was always raiſed upon them by the parliament, their aſſemblies grew immediately uſeleſs & in a ſhort time contemptible; And in leſs that one hundred years, the people ſunk down into that tameneſs and ſupineneſs of ſpirit by which they ſtill continue to be diſtinguiſhed."

MR. PRINTER,

If the following is thought worthy of a Place in your Paper, you have the Conſent of the Author to inſert it. T. M.

WHEN I hear of the propoſal of an armed force, as being neceſſary to keep the American colonies in a dependance on the crown and Parliament of Great Britain, it gives me the greateſt concern imaginable. For though I am conſiderably advanced in age, and have had concern with men of all conditions of life, I never as yet had the leaſt intimation from any American born, that I remember, that they had any inclination to any other, than an entire dependance on the crown of Great Britain, as juſtly eſtabliſhed on the houſe of Hanover, which has been the caſe ever ſince my knowledge of things of a public nature. And I really believe that the firſt mover of ſuch a propoſal was no friend to the preſent government either of Great Britain or America. And as I profeſs myſelf to be a hearty friend to the preſent government of Great Britain, and that of the colony of Connecticut, in America in particular, I beg leave to make a propoſal of a very different nature, viz. That every province in America ſhould by charter be infranchiſed with all the privileges and immunities, which the little colony of Connecticut enjoys——which I am fully of opinion would ſecure an everlaſting dependance of America upon the crown of Great Britain, and an affection for, and love to the mother country, and the preſent government thereof, as firm as mountains of braſs. And why it is not juſt and reaſonable, that all the American colonies, which firſt ſettled themſelves without any coſt either to the crown or nation, ſhould not be ſo infranchiſed, I have not penetration enough to give a reaſon. The reaſons on which I ground my opinion, are ſuch as follow, viz.

When I look into the hiſtories of antient times and nations, I univerſally find the freeſt people the beſt ſubjects, as well as the beſt ſoldiers; and on the contrary, thoſe nations who have enjoyed the greateſt freedom, as the encroachments of thoſe in power gained on the liberties of the ſubjects, ſo in proportion, the ſubjects firſt became indifferent in their ſervice, then averſe to their orders, and finally rebellious and diſobedient. The good ſoldier either becomes daſtardly in the face of the enemy, deſerts his prince's ſervice, or mutinizes, or aſſaſſinates his commander—as alſo, induſtry in the field, manufactures, mechaniſm and arts fail, and deſolation enſues.

And if we look into modern times, and view our Engliſh hiſtory no farther back than the reign of King Cha. I. how unhappy the conſequence of the encroaching principles and practices of Arch Biſhop Laud, the then prime miniſter of ſtate! which, in a ſhort time run all things to confuſion, till all ſaw the neceſſity of [illegible] reſtoration of the ſubjects to their antient liberties. Alſo the wretched ſtate the nation was reduced to, by the ſtretch of the prerogative in King James the ſecond's ſhort reign, brought all people to ſee the neceſſity of a revolution.

And now to coſider the affair under the light thrown in by the conduct of the American provinces, in their loyalty, obedience and good ſoldiery, in the American wars; and herein their loyalty ſeems to keep pace with their civil liberties; for as the New-England colonies, in general, and that of Connecticut in particular, are underſtood to enjoy the greateſt liberties, ſo, on viewing their conduct, they will appear to diſcover the greateſt degree of loyalty, courage, and good ſoldiery. For Connecticut, which ſettled in the year 1636, did not enjoy more than one year's peace with the natives, before they were obliged to enter into the firſt Indian war in New-England; when Connecticut alone, with only 80 men, that number being all that the colony could ſend into the field, with Capt. John Maſon (afterwards Deputy Governor) at their head, to his and their everlaſting honor, ſtruck ſuch an effectual ſtroke, as gave all New-England peace for between 30 and 40 years. And about the year 1690, a little before, and after, the colony of Connecticut exerted itſelf for the relief of Albany in the province of New-York (which by the way was then, and ever ſince, under the immediate government of the crown, and out of the limits of that called New-England) in which 500 men were employed, and the expences to the colony amounted to £.5000 And about the ſame time, the colony ſent forces into the Maſſachuſetts Bay province at ſundry times, for the defence of the county of Hampſhire, in which, beſides the loſs of lives, the colony expended £.2000. (at which time, as I take it, ſilver was at the eſtimation of about 7s. per ounce.) But to omit ſundry other things, that might convey light into the ſubject, that were tranſacted by the New-England colonies, the memorable expedition, formed wholly by and at the expence of the New England colonies, for the reduction of Cape Breton, in the year 1745, is worthy of the notice of the whole nation, it being one of the chief corner ſtones, in the foundation of the general peace of Europe, ſoon after eſtabliſhed.

[The Remainder of this will be in our next.]

SIR,

IN ſearching amongſt ſome old papers which had been in the Cromwell family I found a writing which appears to me to be a copy of the very words which Oliver ſpoke to the Members of the Long Parliament when he turned them out of the Houſe; and as it is a great curioſity, I have ſent it you, exactly as it is written for publication. Yours, &c.

T. IRETON.

Spoken by OLIVER CROMWELL, when he put an end to the Long Parliament.

IT is high time for me to put an end to your ſitting in this place, which ye have diſhonored by your contempt of all virtue, and defiled by your practice of every vice.—Ye are a factious crew, and enemies to all good government. Ye are a pack of mercenary wretches, and would, like Eſau, ſell your country for a meſs of pottage; &, like Judas, betray your GOD for a few pieces of money. Is there a ſingle virtue now remaining amongſt you? Is there one vice you do not poſſeſs? Ye have no more religion than my horſe: Gold is your GOD. Which of you have not bartered away your conſciences for bribes? Is there a man amongſt you that hath the leaſt care for the good of the common-wealth? Ye ſordid proſtitutes! have ye not defiled this ſacred place, & turned the LORD's temple into a den of thieves? By your immoral principles, & wicked practices, ye are grown intolerably odious to the whole nation: You who were deputed here by the people to get their grievances redreſſed, are yourſelves become the greateſt grievance.

Your country therefore calls upon me to cleanſe the Augean ſtable, by putting a final period to your iniquitous proceedings in this houſe; and which by GOD's help, and the ſtrength he hath given me, I am now come to do: I command ye therefore, upon the peril of your lives, to depart immediately out of this place. Go! get ye out! make haſte! ye venal ſlaves be gone! Go! take away that ſhining bauble there, and lock up the doors.

LONDON.

A moſt audacious inſult upon humanity and the laws of this country, having been committed by a certain nobleman and his agent, the following particulars thereof have been made public. A reputable houſe keeper's daughter was inveigled away and ill-treated, by thoſe perſons on the 16th Dec when a well-dreſſed woman and a man, who ſince appears to be a Jew, went to the ſhop kept by the young woman (a milliner) who, with her ſiſter, bore unblemiſhed characters, and after paying for ſome goods, which the woman purchaſed, ſhe, under pretence that a lady of fortune, wanted a conſiderable quantity of millinary goods, inviegled the young woman to the houſe of a great man; Here the young woman waited a long time, expecting to ſee the pretended lady, but at laſt inſtead thereof, ſhe was accoſted by the above great man, who beginning to treat her with indecency, it gave her the firſt alarm of her unfortunate ſituation. At this houſe ſhe was kept a cloſe priſoner ſeveral days during which time ſhe refuſed all ſuſtenance, or once going to reſt, for fear of the unhappy conſequences which ſoon after happened. Her ſeducers finding ſhe could not eaſily be bro't to their wicked purpoſes, notwithſtanding all the great promiſes made her, therefore privately conveyed her down to the great man's country ſeat, where after uſing every probable art and ſtratagem that could be invented to procure her own conſent to be debauched they at laſt ſtripped her naked, and (notwithſtanding the utmoſt efforts ſhe could make) they forcibly put her in bed to her raviſher. In the mean time whilſt this ſcene of iniquity was tranſacting, the parents and friends of this unhappy young woman, were of conſequence greatly alarmed at her long abſence, as it was only pretended ſhe was to go as far as Shoreditch; and, notwithſtanding the ſtricteſt ſearch for many days, they could not get the ſmalleſt intelligence of her ſituation, which cauſed them a trouble and anxiety much greater than can by words be properly expreſſed. However, a very few days ſince, a bank note was ſent from an unknown perſon to the young woman's father, and a letter, in which it was declared, ſhe was well in health but not the leaſt hint of the place of her reſidence was given. From ſome circumſtances, however, attending the receipt of this letter and ſome other informations, the young woman's place of confinement was firſt found out, and afterwards the whole ſcene of iniquity was diſcovered; & thereupon, purſuant to an order obtained from Lord Mansfield, her inhuman keeper was obliged to deliver her up to her afflicted parents. Upon the young womans releaſe, information on oath was directly made before Sir John Fielding of the above particulars, and in conſequence thereof, warrants being iſſued out againſt the parties concerned in this inhuman affair, the wicked woman who firſt inveigled the young woman from her houſe, was ſecured, and being carried before Sir John, an attorney appeared in her behalf, and offered any bail that ſhould be required: but this being juſtly refuſed, ſhe was committed to priſon. Alſo a number of peace officers ſurrounded the above great man's houſe in order to take him into cuſtody if he could be found. Likewiſe meſſengers were diſpatched to the principal ſea ports to ſtop his getting obroad. And it is hoped, that for the ſake of public juſtice, and to prevent the further perpetration of ſuch daring atrocious crimes, that all the parties concerned in this wicked affair will meet with condign puniſhment.

It is reported that the Dutch are, at this time, privately tranſporting large quantities of naval and other ſtores to their Iſlands of Curacoa and St. Euſtatia, in the Weſt Indies, which cauſes much ſpeculation among the Coffe-Houſe Politicians in Holland.

The Dutch are fitting out ſix Frigates of 36 guns each, to go out, as pretended, in company with the Triton man of war, upon a New Embaſſy to the court of Morocco; but it is obſervable, that each of theſe Frigates is to be fully manned, and that they are to carry out nine months proviſions.

We hear that ſtrong ſquadrons of ſhips of war will ſail for the Weſt Indies early in the Spring.

Laſt Saturday Night, we had a violent Gale of Wind, at E. & N. E and an uncommon high Tide, with ſo great a Fall of Snow, that on Monday, ſeveral loaded Sleys and Sleds, came to town.

MR. PRINTER.

I Truſt you will be willing to inform the public with regard to facts, where they have been miſrepreſented. I obſerve in your paper N°. 167, under the head of Litchfield, a falſe repreſentation with regard to a manufacture lately opened at New-Milford, attempting to make New York 40s. Bills, and Spaniſh mill'd Dollars. The manufacture (as the writer is pleaſed to call it) was not opened at New-Milford, but in the bounds of Stratford. As to the dollars, none were ever found at New-Milford; neither were there near one dozen of them confined in a diſtant cage. The Truth is, three men were taken at New-Milford; one of them a tranſcient perſon, the other two late comers from Stratford. The tranſcient perſon and one of the others were releaſed for evidences, and one is ſtill under bonds.——I truſt, every perſon is ready to own that ſuch iniquity ſhould be detected, and right ſuch offenders ſhould be puniſhed, when and where they are found; but muſt think it very unreaſonable, that ſuch falſe repreſentations ſhould be made by way of reflection, upon any town. Neither can I perſuade myſelf, that the public will think it acting the part of the gentleman, or the chriſtian, ſince there is neither truth nor wit diſcovered in the performance.

It muſt be thought a little injurious, for any gentleman to caſt reflections upon any town, becauſe there are found ſome wicked men in it. As murder has lately been committed in Litchfield, I would not therefore inſinuate that a great part of the people have a hand in it: I would rather rejoice to ſee all our towns riſe in oppoſition to all iniquity, and labour to promote friendſhip and harmony.

An aged Father's Advice to his SON.

MY SON,

IN obedience to the great law of nature, I muſt die; therefore, influenc'd by the tender and obligatory principles of a parent, do I give you an epitomy of my own life (in which I obtained promotion) for your directory, and ſample of imitation when I'm gone, wiſhing you proſperity. In my early days, I had a ſincere regard to the practice of virtue, and aim'd to make it public. I was taught a branch of manufactory, by which I comfortably ſubſiſted; and even, while an apprentice, finding a reliſh for preferment, ſtrove to make myſelf popular, in the view of my mates, and (arriving to riper years) left no ſtone unturn'd to appear more ſo to thoſe of influence, whoſe attention, by any means, I laboured to command. In proſecution of which, whenever I found a man who had right to act pro or con, with apparent pleaſure did I ſqueeze his hand, with an "How "do you do? and are you pretty well at "home, Sir?"——And where I underſtood the ballance of family power lay in the hands of the woman, to her wou'd I make my compliments, that the huſband ſhould be conſtrain'd to be my friend: and the language I made uſe of (like that of the oracle) was ever ſo ambiguous, that it would admit of two conſtructions, whereby, upon the diſappointment of any confidant, I could well acquit myſelf of blame, by which alſo every ſollicitor would be pleaſed (conſtruing my words in his own favor) and put me at the head of the claſs of his favourites, on whom he might ſafely depend for obtaining the requeſted boon. And, in fine, I made it the grand principle to keep well eſtabliſhed the noble character of honeſt and orthodox; and in connection with that, like the Vicar of Bray, diſpence with paſſive obedience, and non-reſiſtance, as beſt ſuited the populace. Thus, my Son, have I given you an account of the riſe and progreſs of my political life, by conforming to which, you'll moſt aſſuredly ſatiate your keen appetite for ſupremacy, not forgetting always to be ſenſibly ſenſible of your deſcent, which will cloath you with confidence to put a ſanction on all you ſay, and enable you not only to riſe ſuperior to, but alſo with authority to look down on thoſe, who, by dint of merit, ought to be above you.

From the LONDON CHRONICLE.

AFTER the battle of Bergen in Germany, April the 10th 1759. among the many wounded who were brought into Frankfort upon the Mayne there was the Right Hon. George Charles Dykern, Baron, Lieutenant-General of the Saxon troops in the ſervice of the King of France; he was born of an antient and noble family in Sileſia, April the 10th 1710, ſo that it was juſt on his birth day he received his wound; he was of equal abilities as a miniſter in the cloſet, and a General in the field. In his younger days he went through a regular courſe of ſtudy in the univerſity, and made a great proficiency in philoſophy, eſpecially in mathematics, afterwards he ſtudied polemic divinity till he reaſoned himſelf into an infidel.

During his illneſs he ſhewed not the leaſt deſire of pious company, or ſerious diſcourſe till the ſurgeon let his Valet de chambre know that he could not live long, the man then aſked his maſter, whether he did not chuſe to be viſited by a clergyman; he anſwered with warmth, I ſhall not trouble thoſe gentlemen, I know well myſelf, what to believe and do: His man not diſcouraged continued thus; My Lord, have you ever found me wanting in my duty all the time I have been in your ſervivce? He anſwered No; then replied he, I will not be wanting now, the Surgeons count you paſt hopes of recovery but every one is afraid to tell you ſo, you ſtand on the brink of eternity, pray, Sir, order a Clergyman to be called; he pauſed a little, but ſoon gave his hand to the ſervant, thanked him for his honeſty, and ordered to ſend for me, (Dr. Freſenius, ſenior of the clergy at Frankfort) when I came, the man told me the General was a profeſſed infidel; I went in, and after a ſhort compliment ſaid, I am told, my Lord, your life is near an end, therefore I preſume (without any more ceremony to aſk one plain qneſtion; is the ſtate of your ſoul ſuch that you can entertain a ſolid hope of ſalvation? he anſwered, yes; on what ground you this hope? he replied, I never committed any wilful ſin; I have been liable to frailties, but I truſt in God's mercy, and the merits of his ſon, that he will have mercy upon me. Theſe words he uttered very ſlowly, eſpecially the merits of his Son. I made the following reply; I am apt to believe you are not tainted with the groſſeſt vices, but I fear you a little too preſumtuouſly boaſt of never having committed wilful ſin, if you ſhould be ſaved, you muſt acknowledge your being utterly corrupted by ſin, & conſequently deſerving the curſe of God and eternal damnation; as to your hoping for GOD's mercy through the merits of his Son, I beg leave to aſk you, do you believe God has a Son, that his Son aſſumed our nature in order to be our Saviour, that in the execution of his office he has given ample ſatisfaction for us and recovered our title to heaven?

He anſwered, I cannot now avoid a more minute diſcription of the ſtate of my ſoul: Let me tell you, Doctor, I have ſome knowledge of philoſophy, by which I have choſen for myſelf a way of ſalvation; I have always endeavoured to live a ſober life, to the uttermoſt of my power, not doubting but the Being of all Beings would then graciouſly accept me. In this way I ſtood in no need of Chriſt, and therefore I did not believe on him; but I take the ſcriptures to be a divine revelation: this way of mine I perceive is not the right one; I muſt believe on Chriſt, and through him come to God. I replied You ſay, you take the ſcriptures to be of a divine revelation! He fetch'd a deep ſigh, and ſaid, O God, thou wilt make me ſay, becauſe I take the ſcriptures to be thy word. I ſaid, there are grounds and reaſons enough to demonſtrate the divine orgin of Chriſtianity, as I could ſhew from its moſt eſſential principles, were not the period of your life ſo ſhort; but we need not now that diffuſive method, faith being the gift of God. A poor ſinner tottering on the brink of eternity, has not time to enquire into grounds and reaſons rather betake yourſelf to earneſt prayer for faith, which if you do, I doubt not but God will give it you.

I had no ſooner ſpoken theſe words, but putting off his cap, and lifting up his hands & eyes he cried out, O Almighty God, I am a poor curſed ſinner, worthy damnation; but Lord Jeſus, eternal Son of God, thou diedſt for my ſins alſo, it is through thee alone I can be ſaved: O give me faith, and ſtrengthen that faith. Being extremely weak, he was obliged to ſtop here. A little after he aſked, Is faith enough for ſalvation? Yes, Sir, ſaid I, if it be living faith. Methinks, ſaid he, it is ſo already; I perceive it will be more ſo by and by; let us pray for it.—— Perceiving he was very weak, and to give him ſome reſt, I retired into the next room; but he ſoon ſent to call me; I found him praying; and Jeſus was all he prayed for. I reminded him of ſome ſcriptures, treating of faith in Chriſt, and he was much delighted with them; indeed he was quite ſwallowed up by the grace of Jeſus, and would hear of nothing but Jeſus Chriſt and and him crucified. He cried out, I do not know how it is with me; I never in my life felt ſuch a change; I have power to love Jeſus, and to believe in him, whom I ſo long rejected. O my Jeſus, how merciful art thou to me!

About noon I ſtept home, but he ſent for me directly, ſo that I could ſcarce eat my dinner; we were both filled with joy as the partakers of the ſame grace which is in Jeſus and that in ſuch a manner as if we had been acquainted together for many years. Many officers of the army came to ſee him continually, to all of whom he talked as freely of Jeſus, of the grace of the Father in him, and of the Holy Ghoſt through him; wond'ring without ceaſing at his having found Jeſus, & at the happy change by which all things on this ſide eternity were become indifferent to him. In the afternoon he deſired to partake of the Lord's Supper, which he received with a melting, praiſing and rejoicing heart; all the reſt of the day he continued in the ſame ſtate of ſoul; towards the evening he deſired that if his end ſhould approach, I would come to him, which I promiſed, but he did not ſend for me till next morning.

I was told by his valet that he ſlept well for ſome hours, and then waking, prayed for a conſiderable time, continually mentioning the name of our Lord, and his moſt precious blood, and that he had deſired ſeveral of the officers to make his converſion known to his Court (that of the King of Poland) After ſome diſcourſe, I aſked, Has your view of Chriſt and his redemption been neither altered nor obſcured ſince yeſterday? He anſwered, neither altered nor obſcured, I have no doubt, not even a remote one: It is juſt the ſame with me as if I had always believed and never doubted, ſo gracious is the Lord Jeſus to me a ſinner!—The ſecond day he was unwearied in prayer and exerciſes of faith Towards evening he ſent for me in haſte; when I came I found him dying, and in a kind of a delirum, ſo I could do no more than give him now and then a word of comfort. I prayed afterwards for him and thoſe that were preſent, ſome of whom were of high rank. I then by impoſition of hands, as uſual, gave him a bleſſing, which being done, he expired immediately. A Royal Prince who was there (Prince XAVIER of SAXONY) could not forbear weeping. The reſt of the officers bewail'd the death of their General, yet praiſed God for having ſhewn ſuch mercy to him.

I wrote an account of it without delay to his mother, and had an immediate anſwer; ſhe was a lady of ſeventy-two, of exemplary piety; ſhe praiſed God for his mercy, adding, that he had now anſwered the prayers which ſhe had never ceaſed to offer on his behalf for eleven years.

S. HIERON. Epiſtol. ad Nepot.

AS I was ſmoking my pipe after dinner to day, I began to think of a proper ſubject of complaint for the next paper, when I ſoon found myſelf in ſuch a wilderneſs of human frailties, follies and infirmities that my choice was totally puzzled—no ſooner did I determine to lay my ax to the root of one, than another ſtill more overgrown appeared deſerving of the firſt ſtroke. But I was awak'd from my reverie by the ringing of the bell for lecture, the appointment of which I had before forgot, after adjuſting my hair, and pinching up a little my dirty ruffles which I thought might do for a lecture day when but few people attend, I went to meeting, our parſon happen'd to have the aſſiſtance of a travelling clergyman, a ſtranger to me. He gave us a good ſermon, that is to ſay he communicated good thoughts in good language, but his manner of communicating or delivery was ſo ſhockingly bad as to put me out of all patience, but it had this good effect viz. to fix the ſubject of complaint for the enſuing week; and that is the great deficiencies in elocution that are to be found among our public ſpeakers, eſpecially in the pulpit. I reverence the gentlemen of the ſacred order, and would be far from caſting contempt upon it; but I hope they will excuſe me, if I complain a little of the negligence and affectation which is too apparent in ſome of the order, when they addreſs us from the pulpit. Nor will it, I hope, give offence, if I purſue the following method.

II. Point out ſome of the more obvious cauſes thereof.

III. Humbly propoſe ſome directions for the removal of this cauſe of complaint.

I. I am to conſider ſome of thoſe faults and deficiencies of elocution hinted at. And here I include nothing that is natural and unavoidable. Some have naturally a low, feeble voice, and others have one ſtrong and ſonorous. The organs of ſpeech are ſo form'd in ſome, that they neceſſarily ſpeak grum and hoarſe; while others have a voice femenine and ſhrill; ſo that 'tis impoſſible that every ſpeaker ſhould ſuit the taſte of him who moſt fancies what he calls "a ſoft, eaſy, ſmooth delivery." However, all theſe different voices may be made not only tolerable, but pleaſant, in public ſpeaking, if ſuitable pains and attention were applied in the proper place. All that I pretend to call faults and deficiencies, are ſuch things as are the reſult of negligence or affectation. As, particularly,

1. An affected tone, whereby the ſpeaker draws out his words moderately. Theſe tones are of various ſorts; ſome with quavers, and ſome without——ſome high and tremulous, for ſolemnity, ſome low and whining, for the ſake of melting the audience——ſome are a compound of all the reſt, and paſs, in one ſentence, thro' every note in gamut. Theſe are to rouſe the paſſions, are ſuppoſed by ſome to be the very ection of oratory. An unnatural tone in peaker of any kind, is diſguſtful to a decate and judicious ear, tho' indeed it has its effect upon a great part of the vulgar, that very much affects people. To ſhew how much affected he is himſelf, and how importunate he is, he drawls out his ſupplicatory words in a kind of half crying, dolorous tone. His oratory in preaching is pretty much of the ſame kind, only when he ſays, my dear brethren, or my dear friends, (which is very common) he puts a peculiarly affecting tone upon the word d--e--e--ar. So much for Mr. Cant.

I have laid out ſo much work I can only have time to ſay further, under this particular, that there are ſundry faults that it is impoſſible to deſcribe, unleſs they can be reviv'd in the minds of thoſe who have before been acquainted with them, by mentioning the epithets ſqueakings ſinging, ſolemn, uniform, fainting, &c. and applying them to the general word tone.

2 Another fault that ſome excellent ſermonizers run into is, what I ſcarcely know what to call, unleſs it be "a humdum-monitory," I mean a flat, uniform, invariable method of delivering every thing. They have no diſagreable tone, and take one ſentence by itſelf, we muſt pronounce it read exceeding well: but the miſchief is, ſentences of all ſorts are delivered exactly ſo. This is full as diſagreable to a ſteady audience as a tone. That ſame uniform buz, creates inattention to the beſt matter. A good pronounciation, with proper emphaſis on words, as well as accents on ſyllables, is a good commentary; and the beſt compoſition without it, may either be diſreliſhed, or miſunderſtood, and it is therefore a fault I wiſh corrected.

3. It is not an unknown thing, tho' not ſo common as ſome other faults, to ſpeak too ſlow. This fault is rarely found in young ſpeakers, unleſs it be at the beginning of a ſermon or a prayer. And I muſt confeſs, I have ſometimes ſeen a preacher mount the deſk and work his lips once in about four ſeconds, for near a minute, before a low, diſtant, rumbling noiſe could be heard from that quarter, & in about half a minute after that, it aroſe to an evidently articulate ſound. I never yet could ſufficiently account for this conduct——perhaps it ſprings from caprice, and is to be accounted for on no other footing. Some few have ſo habituated themſelves to a ſlow, ſolemn way of ſpeaking in public, that they read an advertiſement in the ſame manner, to the no ſmall diverſion of ſome perſons of a riſible conſtitution. A man can act the drone in the pulpit, as well as any where elſe; and I imagine it is not improper, under this head, to juſt hint, that there are ſome perſons who ſpoil their public delivery, by careleſly making pauſes in improper places, or by hemming and hawking between periods. And there are others that fill up a vacancy between words, with ſome gutteral noiſe, that in no wiſe tends to edification.

4. 'Tis a general fault among young ſpeakers that they ſpeak too faſt, time and age uſually correct this fault with very little care, however I have this to ſay upon it, I had rather hear a man read a ſermon as faſt as he can clatter, if he does but give me time enough to catch every word, than to have it come with a whine, and be interlarded with hems and haws.

5. A loud, ſonorous, bawling manner of ſpeaking is highly faulty. There are but few voices but will ſufficiently fill one of our meeting houſes without overſtraining——he that goes beyond the natural pitch or ſtrength of his own voice looſes the command of all of the more obvious cauſes of theſe faults——my dearly beloved brethren, do have a little patience with me and I will be as brief as I can.

1. The firſt cauſe lies as deep as their firſt learning to read at ſchool. The good dame that taught them their letters, and carried them along through their pſalter, never underſtood pronounciation herſelf, and always read with a very religious tone, and her pupil has never to this day got rid of the diſadvantages he then received therefrom. 'Tis too commonly tho't of but little conſequence who inſtructs children in reading; but I imagine that notion to be a very great miſtake.

"Children like tender Oſiers take the bow,

A habit of whining, clipping of words, and rattling over ſentences upon the gallop, contracted in childhood, may continue; yea, & if not very induſtriouſly corrected, increaſe during life.

2. It ariſes from a want of a proper acquaintance with the beſt Engliſh authors. How can a man ever expect to ſee the beauties of any tongue, and elegantly communicate his ſentiments in it, unleſs he is better acquainted with the polite and elegant writers in that language, than ſome that enter upon the miniſtry are with the Engliſh? after a boy has had what is called ſchool-learning, that is, has been ſo many winters to the pariſh ſchool as to be able to blunder out a chapter in the bible, he is ſent to ſchool in order to be fitted for college; and that maſter that will engage to get him fit the quickeſt is intruſted with him. Here his whole time is ſpent in poring over the Latin & Greek claſicks, without ſo much knowledge of Engliſh, as to expreſs any proper thanſlation of the author, if he had taken his ſpirit and ſentiment ever ſo well. What college-ſtudies are to one thus fitted is generally known——after graduation he applies himſelf to the ſtudy of divinity, having, in the choice of books, no regard to elegance and neatneſs of compoſition, provided they are orthodox. But as to an acquaintance with the hiſtorical, poetical, political, dramatical authors of his own nation, he has none at all——and even looks with contempt upon them as vain, light and frothy—thus qualified, he ſets out for a publick ſpeaker, and who can wonder that he makes a very contemptible one!

3. Theſe faults begin ſometimes in imitation of a preceptor or paſtor they very much reverence and eſteem; the miniſter they are brought up under, if eſteem'd by them, is made the pattern of their imitation. Infirmities and imperfections are likely to be copied after, in ſuch a caſe, as any thing. This obſervation is ſo common that ſomething in elocution is to be ſeen in moſt of our young preachers, evidently contracted by living with, or ſetting under the miniſtry of ſome one, whoſe peculiarities of that kind are well known. What attempts are evidently made, among the admirers of Mr. Whitefield's oratory, to act and ſpeak like him.——but enough for this time. O

IN the begining of the laſt war, viz. in the year 1755 when the northern colonies raiſed forces to remove the encroachments made by the French, in his Majeſty's dominions in America, Connecticut raiſed 1000 men, and afterwards, in the ſame year, 2000 more, to reinforce the army at lake George, whoſe numbers was more than dou-

jeſty's commander in chief for that year's ſervice. And the colony of Connecticut perſevered to exert themſelves near in the ſame proportion, to the end of the war; the expence of which, up to the year 1762 amounted to more than four hundred thouſand pounds, lawful money, over and above what was refunded by parliamentary grants. In all which ſervices, the colony has ſuffered the loſs of men in proportion to their number of men employed in ſuch ſervice. By all which it fully appears, that loyalty & good ſoldiery generally ſpeaking, keeps pace (as I before expreſſed it) with the freedom & liberty which any province, government or colony enjoys, and fully convinces me, and I think muſt any man of conſideration, that the beſt way to eſtabliſh a dependance of America on the crown and mother country, will be to add to rather than curtail the liberties of the American colonies: and if they were all ſet on a level with Connecticut, with reſpect to liberties and privileges, I have reaſon to believe, that if a war with France ſhould ſoon take place, which is to be feared, the American colonies forwardneſs to exert themſelves therein, would convince the nation, that ſuch a ſtep was far more to their advantage, than all the ſchemes for raiſing revenues for the ſupport of war, or any other purpoſe, at the expence of American liberty, which will, in all probability, be accompanied with the expence of their love to their mother country, and an indifference in, and an averſion to the requiſitions that may be neceſſary in ſuch a war, which, in the end may prove fatal to the nation, as well as America.

But here an objection may ariſe, and ſome may ſay, that America will ſoon grow powerful enough to make a ſeparate ſtate; and will do ſo, and ſet up a ſovereign of their own.

To which I anſwer, of this there is no danger. For, (1.) The colonies being all on a leavel, with reſpect to privileges, there will always be a jealous eye kept open by every province over its neighbour againſt every encroachment that ſhall or may be attempted by one, on the privileges or properties of another. And as their privileges and properties will be entirely ſeparate from, and independant of each other, they will never give up any point of privilege or power, to any man, or number of men, but thoſe of their own province; and ſo their privileges and immunities will forever be kept ſe-form of government will always excite them on all difficulties that may happen, by encroachments of one province, on the privileges or properties of another, to refer the arbiterment thereof to their ſovereign, whereby all parties will be ſure of juſtice; and G. Britain and her colonies, will always enjoy that harmony and good agreement, as well as proper ſuperiority and ſubordination which is found among parents and children, in well regulated families.

LETTER XI.

My dear Countrymen,

I HAVE ſeveral times in the courſe of theſe letters mentioned the late act of parliament, as being the foundation of future meaſures injurious to theſe colonies and the belief of this truth I wiſh to prevail, becauſe I think it neceſſary to our ſafety.

A perpetual jealouſy reſpecting liberty, is abſolutely requiſite in all free ſtates. The very texture of their conſtitution, in mixt governments demand it. For the cautions with which power is diſtributed among the ſeveral orders imply, that each has that ſhare which is proper for the general welfare, and therefore that any further acquiſition muſt be pernicious. * Machiavel employs a whole chapter in his diſcourſes, to prove that a ſtate, to be long lived, muſt be frequently corrected, & reduced to its firſt principles. But of all ſtates that have exiſted, there never was any in which this jealouſy could be more proper than in theſe colonies. For the government here is not only mixt, but dependant, which circumſtance occaſions a peculiarity in its form of a very delicate nature.

Two reaſons induce me to deſire, that this ſpirit of apprehenſion may be always kept up among us, in its utmoſt vigilance. The 1ſt is this, that as the happineſs of theſe provinces indubitably conſiſts in their connection with Great-Britain, and ſeperation betwen them is leſs likely to be occaſioned by civil diſcords, if every diſguſting meaſure is oppoſed ſingly, and while it is now; for in this manner of proceeding, every ſuch meaſure is moſt likely to be rectified. On the other hand, oppreſſions and diſſatiſfactions being permitted to accumulate—if ever the governed throw off the load, they will do more. A people does not reform with moderation The rights of the ſubject therefore cannot be too often conſidered, explained or aſſerted: And whoever attempts to do this, ſhews himſelf, whatever may be raſh and peeviſh reflections of pretended wiſdom & pretended duty, a friend to thoſe who injudiciouſly exerciſe their power as well as to them, over whom it is ſo excerciſed.

Had all the points of prerogative claimed by Charles the firſt, been ſepperately conteſted and ſettled in preceeding reigns, his fate would in all probability have been very different; and the people would have been content with that liberty which is compatable with regal authority. But he tho't it would be as dangerous for him to give up the powers which at any time had been by uſurpation exerciſed by the crown, as thoſe that were legally veſted in it. This produced an equal exceſs on the part of the people. For when their paſſions were excited by multiplied grievances, they thought it would be as dangerous for them to allow the powers that were legally veſted in the crown, as thoſe which at any time had been by uſurpation exerciſed by it. Acts, that might by themſelves have been upon many conſiderations excuſed or extenuated, derived a contagious malignancy and odium from other acts, with which they were connected. They were not regarded according to the ſimple force of each, but as parts of a ſyſtem of oppreſſion Every one therefore, however ſmall in itſelf, became alarming as an additional evidence of tyrannical deſign. It was in vain for prudent and moderate men to inſiſt, that there was no neceſſity to aboliſh royalty. Nothing mentioned in hiſtory, that I recollect, who have been conſtantly watchful of their liberty, and ſo ſucceſsful in their ſtruggles for it, as the Engliſh. This conſideration leads me to the ſecond reaſon, why I deſire that the ſpirit of apprehenſion may be always kept up among us in its utmoſt vigilence.

The firſt principles of government are to be looked for in human nature. Some of the beſt writers have aſſerted, and it ſeems with good reaſon, that 'government is founded on ‡ opinion'

Cuſtom undoubtedly has a mighty force in producing opinion, and reigns in nothing more arbitrarily than in public affairs. It gradually reconciles us to objects even of dread and deteſtation; & I cannot but think theſe lines of Mr. Pope as applicable to vice in politics, as to vice in ethicks,

" Vice is a monſter of ſo horrid mien,
" As to the hated, needs but to be ſeen;
" Yet ſeen too oft, familiar with her face,
" We firſt endure, then pity, then em (brace."

When an act injurious to freedom, has been once done, and the people bear it, the repition of it is moſt likely to meet with ſubmiſſion. For as the miſchief of the one was found to be tollerable, they will hope that of the ſecond would prove ſo too; and they will not regard the infamy of the laſt, becauſe they are ſtained with that of the firſt.

Indeed, nations, in general, are not apt to think until they feel; and therefore nations in general have loſt their liberty: For as violations of the rights of the governed, are commonly not only ſpecious but ſmall at the beginning, they ſpread over the multitude in ſuch a manner, as to touch individuals but ſlightly. Thus they are diſregarded. The power of profit that ariſes from theſe violations, centering in few perſons, is to them conſiderable. For this reaſon the governors having in view their particular purpoſes, ſucceſſively preſerve an uniformity of conduct for attainig them. They regularly increaſe and multiply the firſt injuries till at length the inattentive people are compelled to perceive the heavineſs of their burdens.—They begin to complain and enquire—but too late. They find their oppreſſors ſo ſtrengthened by ſucceſs, and themſelves ſo entangled in example of expreſs authority on the part of their rulers, and of tacit recognition on their own part, that they were quite confounded; For millions entertain no other idea of the legality of power, that it is founded on the exerciſe of power They voluntarily faſten their chains, by adopting a puſilanimous opinion 'that there will be too much danger in attempting a remedy." Or another opinion no leſs fatal, " that the government has a right to treat them as it does." They then ſeek a wretched relief for their minds, by perſuading themſelves, that to yield their obedience is to diſcharge their duty. The deplorable poverty of ſpirit, that proſtrates all the dignity beſtowed by divine providence on our nature—of courſe ſucceeds.

From theſe reflections I conclude, that every free ſtate ſhould inceſſantly watch and inſtantly take alarm on any addition being made to the power exerciſed over them, innumerable inſtances might be produced to ſhew, from what ſlight beginnings the moſt extenſive conſequences flowed; But I ſhall ſelect two only from the hiſt. of England.

" Right is of two kinds, right to power and right to property. It is ſaid that ſome diſputes have lately ariſen between the Merchants at Charlestown So. Carolina, and the Cuſtom Houſe Officers there, and that the Collector was obliged to return to England.

Capt. Purbeck, from North Carolina on the 8th Inſt. about ten leagues E. of Cape-Cod, came athwart a Sloop on her beam ends, full of water; he judged her to be about 70 tons, ſhe had black waiſt and quarters her ſtern painted blue, and cabbin windows white.

Laſt Tueſday Night the Griſt Mill Saw Mill, and Fulling-Mill, belonging to Meſſrs. Tylers, of Wallingford, were entirely conſumed by Fire, together with a Quantity of Grain Flour, Cloth, &c. the whole loſs eſtimated at £. 600 Lawful Money By what Accident they took Fire is uncertain.

Mr. PRINTER,

IN your laſt week's paper is a piece ſign'd ABSALOM, entitled, " An aged Father's advice to his ſon;" which piece, by it's approbation and acceptance to the public, ſeems very well calculated for the meridian of Connecticut in general, and Hartford in particular. The country gentlemen come to town, to read and applaud ABSALOM'S excellence, in picturizing the father and ſon. The colours and repreſentations are ſo lively and natural, that I could not keep my paper: one ſays, " Give me the paper:" Another ſays, " I'll take the paper, Sir, &c" My mind was to have kept it on file; but applications were ſo frequent, for the courſe of the week, that, in order to prevent the trouble of ſo much ſolliciting, I found myſelf neceſſitated, for the ſatisfaction of the country ſollicitors, to give it up.

Being the other evening in company with a number of politicians, the diſcourſe, for a conſiderable time, run upon the uſefulneſs of the periodical productions, which have of late appeared in your Courant.——The COMPLAINANT meets with univerſal approbation and applauſe. The dainty bits he has already given us a reliſh of, only ſerves to whet our appetites for more dainties of the ſame feaſt. Write on, dear Mr Complainant, pray write on. Your fulneſs may ſatiſfy, but can never cloy. Your gentleneſs in reproving the foibles and follies of men, are ſo exquiſitely done, ſuch fineneſs of ſentiment, that he muſt be a dull Hobby Horſe indeed, that can't with pleaſure adore and kiſs the rod that, with ſo fine a touch, corrects bad manners, and introduces good œconomy.

Mr. Complainant having mentioned the word Hobby Horſe, puts me in mind of uncle Toby, whom one of your former complaints noticed. It is now twelve years ſince I converſe with uncle Toby, and twelve years ſince I ſaw Mr. Yorrick. And of all the viciſſitudes and diſappointments that ever attended uncle Toby, none was ſo mortifying as that ever memorable, and never to be forgotten devaſtation, made by the cow's getting into the Bowling Green, and deſtroying the fortification that with ſo much wiſdom, pains and perſeverance, had been contriv'd, drawn and plan'd by uncle Toby, and exactly executed by Corporal Trim. I muſt confeſs I cannot read, write or relate the ſad cataſtrophe of the cow, the Bowling-Green, & the fortification, without ſympathizing with that inimitable, truly worthy and good man, uncle Toby & his faithful Corporal Trim.—

Your again inſerting the aged Father's advice to his Son, and giving this a place in your Courant, will oblige many of your readers, and in particular your Humble Servant,

ABEL.

COMPLAINANT. (No. 9.)

IN purſuing the ſubject begun in my laſt, I come to the IIId. General head, viz. Humbly to propoſe ſome directions for the removal of this cauſe of complaint. And here I ſhall mention but three or four, out of the many that might be brought.

1. Direct. I would humbly propoſe, that all public ſpeakers, in an unprejudiced, impartial manner, obſerve where their own talents lye, and duly cultivate them ; and in the ſame manner to obſerve where they do not lye, and never attempt to cut a dazling figure in thoſe things that 'tis evident nature never deſigned them for. In that diverſity of gifts which the GOD of nature has beſtowed upon mankind, we ſhall find almoſt every man of this calling, poſſeſſed of ſome that may be improved to his own honor and uſefulneſs. And 'tis to be regretted, that men do not obſerve wherein their own proper genius conſiſts, and beſtow pains in improving the ſame, that it may bring forth ſomething valuable, inſtead of laying out themſelves ſo much to bring forth grapes from thorns. If a man finds a natural impediment in his ſpeech, or a certain invincible haſhneſs in his delivery, 'tis proper for him to guard as much as poſſible, againſt the inconveniencies thereof, and he may make a very good inſtructor, and a reſpectable miniſter ; but as ſoon as he ſets out to ſhine as a ſweet, charming orator, he will certainly draw the contempt and ridicule of the judicious upon his own head, and the order he belongs to.

A certain country miniſter, that I eſteem as a man of ſenſe and piety, and whom I have often heard preach with ſatisfaction ; his ſermons at home, were edifying and entertaining, as they were ſolid and perſpicuous : but he had no ſort of faculty at dreſſing up truth in a glittering, florid, or figurative dreſs. This ſaid gentleman was once at Cambridge over the ſabbath, and through the great importunity of the Rev. Mr. Appleton, preached before the college & congregation—but, alas ! the figure he cut was very different from what I ever knew before. He thought ſuch plain language as he uſed to his own congregation would not do before ſuch a learned and polite aſſembly, and therefore undertook to preach what is ſometimes call'd a high flown ſermon ; but moſt contemptible did he make himſelf ! he never preach'd a ſermon in his own pulpit, but would have been vaſtly better reliſh'd at Cambridge than what he preach'd. He attempted to unite the majeſty of Milton, the conciſeneſs of Young, and the jingle of Hervey, in his ſermon, & produced a moſt ſhocking monſter of bombaſt ! This was quite as unnatural and improper, as for a ſtif jointed, clumſy fiſted gentleman to aim at excelling in the graces and elegancies of geſture. We can pity, but we never ridicule a man, for not being poſſeſſed of certain talents that GOD has denied him—but if he attempts to diſplay ſuch talents, in an eminent degree, which nature has evidently denied him, he becomes forthwith a proper object of ridicule. Mr. Pope never thought the gout a proper ſubject of ſatyre ; but when even a Peer of the Realm, crippled with the gout, preſum'd to diſplay his faculties at dancing a minuet, the ſatyric bard boldly ridicules, and records to perpetuity, the folly of a Lord.

I agree with the celebrated author of the Art of Preaching, when he ſays,

"He who by preaching hopes to raiſe a name,
To no ſmall excellence directs his aim.
On every not'd preacher he muſt wait,
The voice, the look, the action imitate."

I ſay, I agree with him as far as the imitation can be carried on without violence to a man's own nature ; but where nature has made any tolerable imitation impracticable, the moſt glaring & diſguſtful affectation takes place. I have curtail'd the doctrine of imitation in my creed, ſo as to bring it down to this, viz. "That we are to imitate no farther than to form and regulate our own faculties by the example of thoſe that excel us in the exerciſe of the ſame faculties." Every man has his own taſte and talents—let him cultivate them, and let others cultivate their's, ſo ſhall we find a beautiful and uſeful variety, in that diverſity of gifts which proceed from the ſame ſpirit. When a man, no ways turn'd by nature for oritorical geſtures, becauſe he is pleaſed with Mr. Whitefield's theatrical manner of conducting in the pulpit, takes upon him to gain applauſe in the ſame manner, he will generally meet with either pity or contempt.

2. Direct. It might be of great ſervice, eſpecially to the younger part of our public preachers, to get a more extenſive acquaintance with books———I don't mean meerly divinity books ; theſe indeed, are to be the grand object of their ſtudies : but the elegant productions of the beſt poets, hiſtorians, politicians and ſatyriſts, might tend greatly to enlarge their ideas, innocently amuſe and direct them, refine their taſte, & mend both compoſition and delivery. How can a man ever expect to excel, or even make a tolerable figure, when he chances to come into polite company, who ſettles down in an obſcure part of the country, with only his bible, concordance, and half a dozen antiquated octavo's, and is, from the time of his ſettlement, ſequeſter'd from all connexions with the literary world, unleſs perhaps, the noiſe of ſome new broached doctrine engages him to borrow or purchaſe the book that contains it ? Some are ready to look upon the time ſpent in reading ſuch books as are mention'd above, as miſ ſpent : but how greatly do ſuch differ from ſome of the greateſt fathers of the church ? St. Auſtin recommends to preachers the reading of profane and heathen authors, who have wrote with elegance and ſpirit. "We have a right" he ſays "to claim all the truths we find in them, as our property, after the example of the Iſraelites, who, by the command of GOD himſelf, plundered Ægypt of her gold and precious garments, without touching their idols." And again he ſays, "We ſhould take from the heathen authors the ſilver, the gold, and ornaments of diſcourſe, and cloath our ideas with them, in order to make the one and the other ſubſervient to the preaching of the goſpel. (De Doct. Chriſt. L. 2. N. 60.) St. Jerom, in his Epiſtola ad Magnum, is much larger upon the ſame head, ſhewing that St. Paul's acquaintance with the Greek poets, was a great advantage to him in his preaching. I have no room for a quotation, but proceed to the 3d Direct. In which I would, with all deference to the clergy, humbly and ſeriouſly propoſe that they take occaſion more frequently to preach before one another, and that the keeneſt criticiſm, and the moſt cordial faithfulneſs, be ever uſed in animadverſions upon the ſermon delivered.——Such faithful words of a friend, might prove of great ſervice in correcting ill habits : they might contain excellent oil to heal, inſtead of a club to break the head. This ſurely may take place at the aſſociations of our Miniſters, and when two or three of them are met at a lecture as is commonly the caſe—I mentioned the matter once to our Miniſter, but he ſhook his head and ſaid "ſundry ſuch preachers as deſerved rebuke tho' they excell'd all their Neighbours, that they aim'd at diſtinguiſhing popular applauſe, and imagined all the congregation bleſſing GOD, that ſuch perſons were appointed to preach."—"Now (ſays the parſon) what can we do with ſuch perſons ? I aſſure you, Mr. Comp. you would not be willing to make one your enemy for life, and yet you muſt, if you do not applaud, inſtead of reprove any part of his performance." I was a little nonpluſs'd at the parſon's account——however, I have this to ſay, if it be true, there ought to be eccleſiaſtical Serjeants appointed to ſtand with their halberts, and keep out of the pulpit all ſuch perſons as thirſt ſo hard for popular applauſe, that they are incapable of reproof and correction.

4. Direct. Let ſome judicious, friendly pariſhioner be intruſted with the liberty of reminding his miniſter of any oddity he may be about contracting in his elocution or geſture in the pulpit—'Tis but ſeldom a man preaches any where except before his own people, moſt of the ill habits and diſagreeable oddities are contracted in his own pulpit, and when they have once taken deep root,

'tis next to impoſſible to eradicate them. A friend therefore of this ſort, might be of great ſervice; however, much caution ſhould be uſed, in the choice of ſuch a friend.

"Ticklish the point, I grant, and hard to find,
To pleaſe the various tempers of mankind.
Some love you ſhould the crabbed points explain,
When texts with texts a dreadful war maintain.
Some love the new, & ſome the beaten path;
Morals pleaſe ſome, and others points of faith.
But he's the man, he's the admir'd divine,
In whoſe diſcourſes truth and virtue ſhine."

☞ Some circumſtances obliged both the Author and Printer of the laſt Complainant, to be a little more inaccurate and uncorrect than we would have choſe——We hope our readers will excuſe ſome defects in orthography, and ſome inadvertencies, that make the ſaid piece, in ſome places, appear unintelligible——intending faults of this kind, ſhall be more carefully guarded againſt for the time to come.

[Remainder of the Farmer's 11th Letter, begun in our laſt.]

HEnry VII. was the firſt monarch of that kingdom, who eſtabliſhed a ſtanding body of armed men.' This was a band of 50 archers, called yeomen of the guard; And this inſtitution, notwithſtanding the ſmallneſs of the number, was to prevent diſcontent, 'diſguiſed under pretence of majeſty and grandeur.' In 1684 the ſtanding forces were ſo much augmented, that Rapin ſays—'The king, in order to make his people fully ſenſible of their new ſlavery, affected to muſter his troops, which amounted to 4000 well armed and diſciplined men.' I think our army, at this time, conſiſts of more than 70 regiments.

The method of taxing by EXCISE was firſt introduced amidſt the convulſions of the civil wars. Extreme neceſſity was pretended, and its ſhort continuance promiſed. After reſtoration, an exciſe upon beer, ale and other liquors, was granted to the king, one half in fee, the other for life, as an equivalent for the court of wards. Upon James the Second's acceſſion, the parliament gave him the firſt EXCISE, with an additional duty on wine, tobacco, and ſome other things. Since the revolution it has been extended to ſalt, candles, leather, hides, hops, ſoap, paper, paſteboard, mill-boards, ſcale-boards, vellum, parchment, ſtarch, ſilks, callicoes, linens, ſtuffs, printed, ſtained, &c. wire, wro't plate, coffee, tea, chocolate, &c.

Thus a ſtanding army and EXCISE have, from the firſt ſlender origins, though always hated, always feared, always oppoſed, at length ſwelled up to their vaſt preſent bulk.

Theſe facts are ſufficient to ſupport what I have ſaid.————'Tis true, that all the miſchiefs apprehended by our anceſtors from a ſtanding army, and exciſe, have not yet happened: But it does not follow from thence, that they will not happen.—The inſide of a houſe may catch fire, and the moſt valuable appartments be ruined, before the flames burſt out.—The queſtion in theſe caſes is not, what evil has actually attended particular meaſures——but, what evil, in the nature of things, is likely to attend them. Certain circumſtances may for ſome time delay effects, that were reaſonably expected, and that muſt enſue. There was a long period, after the Romans had prorogued his command to Q. Publilius Philo, before that example deſtroyed their liberty. All our kings, from the revolution to the preſent reign, have been foreigners. Their miniſters generally continued but a ſhort time in authority ¶; and they themſelves were mild and virtuous princes.

A bold ambitious prince, poſſeſſed of great abilities, firmly fixed in his throne by deſcent, ſerved by miniſters like himſelf, and rendered either venerable or terrible by the glory of his ſucceſſes, may execute what his predeceſſors did not dare to attempt. Henry the fourth tottered in this ſeat his whole reign. Henry 5th drew the ſtrength of the kingdom into France, to carry on his wars there, and left the commons at home, proteſting, "that the people were not bound to ſerve out of the realm."

It is true, that a ſtrong ſpirit of liberty ſubſiſts at preſent in Great-Britain, but what reliance is to be placed in the temper of a people, when the prince is poſſeſſed of an unconſtitutional power, our own hiſtory can ſufficiently inform us.—When Charles the ſecond had ſtrengthened himſelf by the return of the garriſon of Tangier, "England (ſays Rapin) ſaw on a ſudden an amazing revolution; ſaw herſelf ſtripped of all her rights and privileges to Charles the ſecond, which they had ſo paſſionately, and, if I may ſay it furiouſly defended againſt the deſigns of Charles the firſt." This happened only thirty ſix years after this laſt prince had been beheaded.

Some perſons are of opinion, that liberty is not violated, but by ſuch open acts of force; but they ſeem to be greatly miſtaken I could mention a period within theſe forty years, when almoſt as great a change of diſpoſition was produced by the ſecret meaſures of a long adminiſtration, as by Charles's violence. Liberty perhaps, is never expoſed to ſo much danger, as when the people believe there is the leaſt; for it may be ſubverted, and yet they not think ſo.

Public diſguſting acts are ſeldom practiſed by the ambitious, at the beginning of their deſigns. Such conduct ſilences and diſcourages the weak, and the wicked, who would otherwiſe have been their advocates or accomplices. It is of great conſequence, to allow thoſe who, upon any account, are inclined to favour them, ſomething ſpecious to ſay in their defence. Their power may be fully eſtabliſhed, tho' it would not be ſafe for them to do whatever they pleaſe. For there are things, which at ſome times even ſlaves will not bear. Julius Cæſar, and Oliver Cromwell, did not dare to aſſume the title of King. The Grand Seignor dares not lay a new tax. The king of France dares not be a proteſtant. Certain popular points may be left untouched, and yet freedom be extinguiſhed.—The commonalty of Venice imagine themſelves free, becauſe they are permitted to do that they ought not. But I quit the ſubject, that would lead me too far from my purpoſe

By the late act of parliament, taxes are to be levied upon us, for 'defraying the charge of the adminiſtration of juſtice—the ſupport of civil government—and the expences of defending his Majeſty's dominions in America."

If any man doubts what ought to be the conduct of theſe colonies on this occaſion, I would aſk him theſe queſtions.

Has not the parliament expreſſly avowed their intention of raiſing money from us for certain purpoſes? Is not this ſcheme popular in Great-Britain? Will the taxes impoſed by the late act, anſwer thoſe purpoſes? If it will, muſt it not take an immenſe ſum from us? If it will not, is it to be expected, that the parliament will not execute their intention when it is pleaſing at home, and not oppoſed here? Muſt not this be done by impoſing new taxes? Will not every addition, thus made to our taxes, be an addition to the power of the legiſlature, by encreaſing the number of officers employed in the collection? Will not every additional tax, therefore render it more difficult to abrogate any of them? When a branch of revenue is once eſtabliſhed, does it not appear to many people invidious and undutiful, to attempt to aboliſh it? If taxes ſufficient to accompliſh the intention of the parliament, are impoſed by the parliament, what taxes will remain to be impoſed by our aſſemblies? If no material taxes remain to be impoſed by them, what muſt become of them, and the people they repreſent?

* "If any perſon conſiders theſe things, & yet thinks our liberties are in danger, I wonder at that perſons ſecurity."

One other argument is to be added, which by itſelf, I hope, will be ſufficient to convince the moſt credulous man on this continent, that the late act of Parliament is only deſigned to be a precedent, whereon the future vaſſalage of theſe colonies may be eſtabliſhed.

Every duty thereby laid on articles of Britiſh manufacture, is laid on ſome commodity upon the exportation of which from Great-Britain, a drawback is payable. Thoſe drawbacks in moſt of the articles are exactly double to the duties given by the late act. The parliament therefore might in half a dozen lines have raiſed much more money only by ſtopping the drawbacks in the hands of the officers at home, on exportation of theſe colonies, than by this ſolemn impoſition of taxes upon us, to be collected here. Probably, the artful contrivers of this act formed it in this manner, in order to reſerve to themſelves, in caſe of any objections being made to it, this ſpecious pretence—"That the "drawbacks are gifts to the colonies; and "that the late act only leſſens thoſe gifts." But the truth is, that the drawbacks are intended for the encouragement and promotion of Britiſh manufactures and commerce, & are allowed on exportation to any foreign parts, as well as on exportation to theſe provinces. Beſides, care has been taken to ſlide into the act, ſome articles on which there are no drawbacks. However, the whole duties laid by the late act on all the articles therein ſpecified, are ſo ſmall, that they will not amount to as much as the drawbacks which are allowed on part of them only.

If therefore, the ſum to be obtained by the late act had been the ſole object in forming it, there would not have been any occaſion for the 'commons of Great Britain to 'give and grant to his Majeſty rates, and 'duties for raiſing a revenue in his Majeſty's 'dominions in America, for making a more 'certain and adequate proviſion for defraying the charge of the adminiſtration of juſtice, the ſupport of civil government, and 'the expences of defending the ſaid dominions."—Nor would there have been any occaſion for an expenſive board of commiſſioners, and all the new charges to which we are made liable.

Upon the whole for my part, I regard the late act as an experiment of our diſpoſition. It is a bird ſent over the waters, to diſcover whether the waves, that lately agitated this part, of the world with ſuch violence are yet ſubſided. If this adventurer gets footing here, we ſhall quickly be convinced, that it is not a Phœnix; for we ſhall ſoon ſee it followed by others of the ſame kind. We ſhall find it rather to be of the ‡ breed deſcribed by the poet.——

¶ I don't know but it may be ſaid, with a good deal of reaſon, that a quick rotation of miniſters is very deſirable to Great-Britain. A miniſter there has a vaſt ſtore of materials to work with. Long adminiſtrations are rather favourable to the reputation of a people abroad, than to their liberty.

NEW-YORK, April 7.

The Sloop Live Oak, Capt. Hammond, arrived here on Wedneſday the 30th ult. in the afternoon, in 24 days from Penſacola, but laſt from the Havannah, where he ſays the Spaniards were very buſy in erecting many new fortifications; that many Spaniſh veſſels had lately been at Penſacola, and ſeveral others daily expected; and that Capt. M'Mein ſailed from thence about 2 months ſince for London, with a cargo of furs and peltry, to the amount of about £. 28,000 ſterling.

Wedneſday night Capt. Brooks came up from the Bay of Honduras, in 33 days, where he ſays wood is very plenty, and proviſions ſcarce.

BOSTON, April 7.

Laſt Saturday morning between 7 and 8 o'clock, the wind blowing very hard, the top of a houſe in Ann Street, near the Draw-Bridge, catch'd on fire from the chimney; and a young man named Doyle, a native of Ireland, about 25 years of age, lately arrived here from ſea, in throwing a bucket of water in order to extinguiſh the fire, the ladder on which he ſtood ſlip'd, by which means he unhappily fell from off the ſame, and as he was falling ſtruck his head againſt a brick wall, by which he fractur'd his ſkull, and was otherwiſe much bruiſed, ſo that he expired in about 10 minutes without uttering a word.

We hear that———Howe, the famous money-maker, was taken at Cohaſs, and committed to jail in New-Hampſhire government with ſeveral others, but the fellow that made the moulds for caſting dollars, &c. got off. It is ſaid a great number are concerned, and ſent into every province on the continent to paſs away their counterfeits.

NEW-PORT, April 4.

"I have a letter from my friend at St. Euſtatia dated 25th of February, in which is the following Paragraph.——"We have nothing but confuſion here, occaſioned by News which arrived a few days ago from Holland, that is, our Iſland St. Thomas, St. Croix & St. John's, are to be in the hands of the Engliſh in the courſe of the preſent year, in lieu of ſome German dominions, to be ceded on the part of Great-Britain; and never was ſuch a preſſing time ſince I knew the place, for money; little Buſineſs being carried on at preſent, as it is ſaid ſome gentlemen have confirmation and offer to lay five thouſand pounds to one, that St. Euſtatia will be ceded to G. Britain within four months after the 15th of March. Alſo we are credibly informed, by a Sloop which left Guadaloupe a few days ago, of the arrival of ten ſail of ſhips, of 60 & 74 guns, beſides a number of tranſports, and 3 thouſand men; and it is the general opinion of every perſon, that we ſhall have a War ſoon; an expreſs arrived a few days ago from England, and only ſtay'd 24 hours at St Kitts, and ſailed for Jamaica. In the St. Kitts paper there are orders to repair all the Forts; and to ſee that there are proviſions enough for five hundred men on Brimſtone Hill, alſo to get the militia in good order to receive a general who was never in the Weſt Indies before, and now daily expected to go upon a ſecret expedition of which none can judge at preſent.——A Frenchman bought a [illegible] gun ſhip yeſterday, and paid down dollars, amounting to £ 2525 our currency, and ſailed next day for Martinico."

NEW-HAVEN, April 8.

One Iſaac Fraſier, (a notorious Offender, who has already been crop't, branded & whipt twice, in this Colony, for Burglary) was laſt Friday committed to the Goal in Fairfield, for breaking open and robbing the Shop of Samuel Bradley, Eſq; of that Place. Laſt Monday he by ſome means procured Fire, with an Intention as he ſays, of burning a hole, large enough, in the ſide of the Goal, to make his Eſcape at, but the Fire ſoon getting the Maſtery of him and it being the dead time of Night he was, with one Hoyt, a Priſoner for Debt, (they being the only Perſons in Goal) in great Danger of being ſuffocated, but their Cries being heard by a young Woman who happened to be up, in the Goaler's Family, ſhe gave the Alarm juſt Time to take them out alive, but the Fire had got to ſo great a Head that it could not be ſtop't, but ſoon communicated itſelf to the Court-Houſe that adjoined the Goal, and ſoon reduced them both to Aſhes. Mr. Camp, the Goaler, who liv'd with his Family in Part of the Court Houſe, ſav'd the chief of their Furniture. Several of the neighbouring Houſes were much expoſed, but the Night being calm, and the Inhabitants of the Town very active, prevented the Flames from ſpreading any further. The Goal was newly built at a great Expence, and was reckoned the ſtrongeſt Place of Confinement in the Colony.

We hear from Greenwich, that laſt Week, the Wife of one Halock of that Town, was ſafely delivered of three Girls, who with the Mother, (ſaid to be near 50 Years old) are like to do well.

Laſt Monday the Dwelling-Houſe of Mr. Caleb Lewis of Cheſhire, was burnt, with every Article in it, except a Number of Women, who diſcovered the Fire juſt Time enough to make their Eſcape.

HARTFORD, April 11.

Laſt Wedneſday died at Springfield, Mr. Lewis Bliſs, for ſeveral Years Deputy-Poſt-Maſter in that Place.

We hear, his Honor the Governor, has appointed the Rev'd Mr. Richard Salter, of Mansfield, to preach the Sermon, at the General Election, the 12th of May next.—

Laſt Thurſday Night the Houſe of Mr. Timothy Goodman, in the Weſt Society in this Town, by ſome Accident took Fire, and was entirely conſumed, together with all his Houſhold Furniture, Cloaths, &c. which were very rich and coſtly, about 200 Buſhels of Grain, and a conſiderable Sum of Money. The Fire was firſt diſcovered by two of Mr. Goodman's Daughter's, who were aſleep in a Chamber, adjoining that Part of the Houſe in which the Fire broke out, and had only Time to alarm the Reſt of the Family, and ſave their own Lives.

A little Girl about 10 Years of Age Daughter of Mr. Daniel Enſign of Hartland, who liv'd in the Houſe, was not able to get out, but was burn to Death in it.

It is thought the ſevere cold Weather this Seaſon, will prove very detrimental to the Engliſh Grain.—The Inhabitants of this and the neighbouring Towns, are in great Want of Hay for their Cattle, as many Perſons who have a large Stock, have nearly expended all their Fodder.

We hear the Snow in Deerfield, and Towns adjacent, is now upwards of 2 Feet deep on a Level, and froze very hard.

NEW-YORK, March 28.

About 4 o'Clock this morning, a Fire broke out in an old Stable, in the back part of the Houſe of Beverly Robinſon, of this City, in which there was Hay, &c. which was entirely conſumed, and part of the back Kitchen at the Poſt Office damaged. The Wind being pretty high, the Flames communicated to two Store Houſes, in Petticoat Lane, belonging to Mr. Henry Ludlow, and Mr. Theophilact Beach, [illegible] the uſual alertneſs of the Inhabitants, [illegible] was happily ſubdued, without doing any conſiderable damage.

MARCH 31.

On Saturday Night laſt, the Wife of one Snead, (a Cooper, who lives on the College Ground) a ſober Woman of good Character her huſband being from home, lay down on a Bed, in which were two Children, one an Infant ſhe had to Nurſe, the other, her own Son, about two Years old, in order to quiet and get one of them to ſleep ; when falling aſleep herſelf, the Candle by ſome Accident ſet fire to the Curtains, which were burnt, together with the Bed and moſt of the Things in the Room ; but the walls being ſtone, the Fire went out without catching the upper Part of the Houſe.

The poor Woman did not wake till the Bed was in Flames, herſelf much burnt on the ſhoulder, the Infant on the Chin, & her own Child ſo terribly that it died on Sunday Evening.

On the 31ſt of Dec. about two o'Clock in the Morning, about 150 Leagues W. from Madeira, being the Watch of Gilbret Blair, (the Mate) Daniel Denny, Gabriel Birch, & William Johnſon ; Denny being at Helm, and the Mate ſitting on the Deck, Birch in Concert with Johnſon ſplit his Scul with an Ax, and threw him overboard ; when Johnſon running down into the Cabbin, called out to the Capt. (ſeemingly in a relenting manner) that Birch had killed the Mate. Birch immediately followed with the Ax, ſaid that it was Johnſon who had killed the mate, made ſeveral ſtrokes with the Ax at him, and alſo at the Captain, both of whom he wounded ; Johnſon he cut in a terrible Manner on the Head and ſeveral other places, ſo that it was thought he could not live 24 Hours, but the Captain received only a ſlight Cut on the Arm. He endeavoured to get his Sword, but perceived it had been taken away, and it was afterwards found upon the Deck. In the Scuffle, which began immediately after Johnſon and Birch enter'd the Cabin, the Captain was ſoon aſſiſted by a Gentleman Paſſenger who lay in the Mate's Bed, by whoſe Help the two Murderers were at laſt overpower'd and ſecured till Morning, when the Captain put them on board the long Boat, with a ſupply of Biſcuit and Water, a Compaſs and two Oars. After they were on board the Boat, he likewiſe obliged another of the Men (John Grub) to accompany them.——The Captain diſcover'd that this Man knew of the Sword's having been taken from the Cabin und brought upon Deck, and from that and ſeveral other circumſtances had reaſon to conclude he was privy to the whole Conſpiracy.

The weather proved favourable for many Days afterwards, ſo that it is proble the People have been taken up by ſome Veſſel, or got to Madeira, except Johnſon, who was thought to be mortally wounded.

There was no other reaſon to ſuſpect Denny (the man at Helm when the murder was committed) to be concern'd in the Plot, but only that he did nothing to alarm the Captain, gave him no aſſiſtance, nor could give a ſatiſfactory Account of his conduct, when he was taxed with it. He ſeemed continually troubled and uneaſy, and in a few Days after was taken ill and died the ſame Day ; ſo that there was no Witneſs to the Murder. There was than only the Captain the Paſſenger and a Boy to navigate the Veſſel, but on the 27th January, Lat. 31, Long. 45. ſpoke the Ship St. Domingo, Capt. Stevenſon of Liverpool, bound to Cape fear, (all well) who ſupplied him with a hand. And on the 19th Inſtant ſpoke the Betſy Capt. Lightbure, of this Port, fifty five Leagues diſtant, all well.

LETTER XII.

Beloved Countrymen,

SOME ſtates have loſt their liberty by particular accidents : but this calamity is generally owing to the decay of virtue. A people is travelling faſt to deſtruction, when individuals conſider their intereſts as diſtinct from thoſe of the public. Such notions are fatal to their country & to themſelves, yet how many are there ſo weak and ſordid as to think they perform all the offices of life, if they earneſtly endeavour to encreaſe their own wealth, power, and credit, without the leaſt regard for the ſociety, under the protection of which they live ; who, if they can make an immediate profit to themſelves, by lending their aſſiſtance to thoſe whoſe projects plainly tend to the injury of their country, rejoice in their dexterity, and believe themſelves entitled to the character of able politicians. Miſerable men! of whom it is hard to ſay, whether they ought to be moſt the objects of pity or contempt ; but whoſe opinions are certainly as deteſtable, as their practices are deſtructive.

Though I always reflect with a high pleaſure on the integrity and underſtanding of my countrymen, which joined with a pure and humble devotion to the great and gracious author of every bleſſing they enjoy, will, I hope, enſure to them and their poſterity all temporal and eternal happineſs, yet when I conſider that in every age and country there have been bad men, my heart at this threatning period, is ſo full of apprehenſion, as not to permit me to believe, but that there may be ſome on this continent, againſt whom you ought to be upon your guard.

Men who either hold or accept to hold certain advantages, by ſetting examples of ſervility to their countrymen—Men, who trained to the employment, or ſelf taught by a natural verſatility of genius, ſerve as decoy-birds for drawing the innocent and unwary into ſnares. It is not to be doubted but that ſuch men will diligently beſtir themſelves, on this and every like occaſion, to ſpread the infection of their meanneſs as far as they can. On the plans they have adopted, this is their courſe. This is the method to recommend themſelves to their patrons. They act conſiſtantly, in a bad cauſe. They run well in a mean race.

From them we ſhall learn, how pleaſant and profitable a thing it is, to be for our SUBMISSIVE behaviour well ſpoken of at St. James's or St. Stephen's, Guildhall or the Royal Exchange. Specious fallacies will then be dreſt up with all the arts of deluſion to perſuade one colony to diſtinguiſh herſelf from another, by unbecoming condeſcenſions, which will ſerve the ambitious purpoſe of great men at home, & therefore will be tho't by them to entitle their aſſiſtance in obtaining them to conſiderable rewards.

Our fears will be excited ; our hopes will be awakened.

It will be inſinuated to us with a plauſible affectation of wiſdom and concern, how prudent it is to pleaſe the powerful—how dangerous to provoke them—and then comes in the perpetual incantation that freezes up every generous purpoſe of the ſoul in cold, inactive expectation—“ that if there is any requeſt to be made, compliance will obtain a favourable attention.”

Our vigilance and our union are ſucceſs & ſafety. Our negligence and our diviſion are diſtreſs and death. They are worſe—They are ſhame and ſlavery. Let us equally ſhun the benumbing ſtillneſs of over weening ſloth and the feveriſh activity of that ill-informed zeal, which buſies itſelf in maintaining little, mean, and narrow opinions. Let us with a truly wiſe generoſity and charity baniſh and diſcourage all illiberal diſtinction, which may ariſe from differences in ſituation forms of government, or modes of religion. Let us conſider ourſelves as MEN—FREEMEN—CHRISTIAN FREEMEN—ſeperated from the reſt of the world, and firmly bound together by the ſame rights, intereſts, and dangers. Let theſe keep our attention inflexibly fixed on the GREAT OBJECTS, which we muſt continually REGARD, in order to preſerve thoſe rights, to promote thoſe intereſts, and to avert thoſe dangers.

Let theſe truths be indelibly impreſſed on our minds—That we cannot be happy without being free——that we cannot be free, without being ſecure in our property——that we cannot be ſecure in our property, if without our conſent, others may, as by right, take it away——that taxes impoſed on us by parliament, do thus take it away——that duties laid for the ſole purpoſes of raiſing money are taxes——that attempts to lay ſuch duties ſhould be inſtantly and firmly oppoſed——that this oppoſition can never be effectual, unleſs it is the united effort of theſe provinces——that, therefore, benevolence of temper towards each other, and unanimity of counſels are eſſential to the welfare of the whole——and laſtly, that for this reaſon, every man amongſt us, who in any manner, would encourage either diſſention, diffidence, or indifference between theſe colonies, is an enemy to himſelf and to his country.

The belief of theſe truths, I verily think, my countrymen, is indiſpenſibly neceſſary to your happineſs. I beſeech you, therefore, “ † teach them diligently unto your children, and talk of them when you ſit in your houſes, and when you walk by the way and when you lie down, and when you riſe up.”

What have theſe colonies to aſk, while they continue free ? Or what have they to dread but inſidious attempts to ſubvert their freedom ? Their proſperity does not depend on miniſterial favors doled out to particular provinces. They form one political body, of which each colony is a member. Their happineſs is founded on their conſtitution ; in unabated vigour thro'out every part. A ſpot a ſpeck of decay, however ſmall the limb on which it appears, and however remote it may ſeem from the vitals, ſhould be alarming. We have all the rights requiſite for our proſperity. The legal authority of Great-Britain may indeed lay hard reſtrictions upon us ; but, like the ſpear of Telephus it will cure as well as wound. Her unkindneſs will inſtruct and compel us, after ſome time, to diſcover, in our induſtry and frugality, ſurprizing remedies——if our rights continue inviolated. For as long as the products of our labour, and the rewards of our care, can properly be called our own, ſo long will it be worth our while to be induſtrious and frugal. But if, when we plow—ſow—reap—gather and threſh, we find that we plow—ſow—reap—gather——and threſh for others whoſe PLEASURE is to be the SOLE LIMITATION, how much they ſhall take, & how much they ſhall leave, why ſhould we repeat the unprofitable toil ? Horſes and oxen are content with that portion of the fruits of their work, which their owners aſſign to them, in order to keep them ſtrong enough to raiſe ſucceſſive crops ; but even theſe beaſts will not ſubmit to draw for their maſters until they are ſubdued with whips and goads. Let us take care of our rights, & we therein take care of our property. “ Slavery is ever preceded by ſleep. Individuals may be dependant on miniſters, if they pleaſe. States ſhould ſcorn it——And, if you are not wanting to your ſelves, you will have a proper regard paid you by thoſe, to whom if you are not reſpectable, you will infallible be contemptible. But——if we have already forgot the reaſons that urged us with an unexampled unanimity, to exert ourſelves two years ago——if our zeal for the public good is worn out before the homeſpun cloaths which it cauſed us to have made——if our reſolutions are ſo faint, as by our preſent conduct to condemn our own late ſucceſsful example——if we are not affected by any reverence for the memory of our anceſtors, who tranſmitted to us, that freedom in which they had been bleſt——if we are not animated by any regard for poſterity, to whom by the moſt ſacred obligations we are bound to deliver down the invaluable inheritance. Then indeed, any miniſter——or any tool of a miniſter——or any creature of a tool of a miniſter——or any lower Inſtrument of adminiſtration, if lower there be, is a perſonage whom it may be dangerous to offend.

‘I ſhall be extremely ſorry, if any miſtakes my meaning in any thing I have ſaid. Officers employed by the crown are, while according to the laws they conduct themſelves intitled to legal obedience and ſincere reſpect. Theſe it is a duty to render them ; and theſe no good or prudent perſon will withhold. But when thoſe officers through raſhneſs, or deſign deſire to enlarge their authority beyond its due limits, and expect improper conceſſions to be made to them, from regard for the employments they bear, their attempts ſhould be conſidered as equal injuries to the crown and people, and ſhould be courageouſly and conſtantly oppoſed. To ſuffer our ideas to be confounded by names, on ſuch occaſions, would certainly be an inexcuſable [illegible], and, probably, an irremediable error.

† Deuteron. vi. 7.

We have reaſon to believe, that [illegible] of his majeſty's preſent miniſters are goo[illegible], and friends to our country; and it ſeem[illegible] unlikely, that by a particular concurrence of events, we have been treated a little more ſeverely than they wiſhed we ſhould be. They might not think it prudent to ſtem a torrent. But what is the difference to us whether arbitrary acts take their riſe from miniſters, or are permitted by them? Ought a point to be allowed to a good miniſter, that ſhould be denied to a bad one The mortality of miniſters is a very frail mortality. A* may ſucceed Shelburne——A* may ſucceed a Conway.

We find a new kind of miniſter lately ſpoken of at home——"The miniſter of the houſe of Commons." The term ſeems to have peculiar propriety when referred to theſe colonies, with a different meaning annexed to it, from that in which it is taken there. By the word 'miniſter' we may underſtand not only a ſervant of the crown, but a man of influence among the commons, who regard themſelves as having a ſhare of the ſovereignty over us. The miniſter of the houſe may, in a point reſpecting the colonies, be ſo ſtrong that the miniſter of the crown in the houſe, if he is a diſtinct perſon, may not chuſe, even where his ſentiments are favourable to us, to come to a pitched battle upon our account. For though I have the higheſt opinion of the deference of the houſe for the King's miniſter; yet he may be ſo good natur'd as not to put it to the teſt, except it be for the meer and immediate profit of his maſter or himſelf.

But whatever kind of miniſter he is, that attempts to innovate a ſingle jota in the priviliges of theſe colonies, him I hope you will undauntedly oppoſe; and that you will never ſuffer yourſelves to be either cheated or frightened into any unworthy obſequiouſneſs on ſuch emergencies you may ſurely, without preſumtion, believe, that ALMIGHTY GOD himſelf will look down upon your righteous conteſt, with gracious approbation. You will be a 'Band of brothers,' cemented by the deareſt ties, and ſtrengthened with inconceivable ſupplies of force and conſtancy, by that ſympathetic ardor, which animates good men confederated in a good cauſe. ————Your honor and welfare are moſt intimately concerned; and beſides, you are aſſigned by divine providence, in the appointed order of things, the protectors of helpleſs unborn ages, whoſe fate depends upon your virtue. Whether they ſhall ariſe the noble and indiſputable heirs of the richeſt patrimonies, or the daſtardly and hereditary drudges of imperious taſk maſters, you muſt determine.

To diſcharge this double duty to yourſelves and to your poſterity, you have nothing to do, but to call forth into uſe the good ſenſe and ſpirit of which you are poſſeſt. You have nothing to do but to conduct your affairs peaceably——prudently——firmly——jointly. By theſe you will ſupport the character of freemen, without loſing that of faithful ſubjects, a good character in any government, one of the beſt under a British government. You will prove that the Americans have that true magnanimity of ſoul, that can reſent injuries, without falling into rage; and that tho' your devotion to Great Britain, is the moſt affectionate, yet you can make proper diſtinctions, and know what you owe to yourſelves, as well as to her. You will at the ſame time that you advance your intereſts, advance your reputation. You will convince the world of the juſtice of your demands, and the purity of your intentions. While all mankind muſt with unceaſing applauſes confeſs, that you indeed deſerve liberty, who ſo well underſtand it, ſo paſſionately love it, ſo temperately enjoy it, and ſo wiſely, bravely & virtuouſly aſſert maintain and defend it.

"Cerre ego libertatem, quæ mihi a parente meo tradita eſt, experiar: Verum id fruſtra an obrem faciam in veſtra manu ſitum eſt, Quirites.

For my part, I am reſolved to contend for the liberty liberty delivered down to my anceſtors; but whether I ſhall do it effectually or not, depends on you my countrymen.

"How little ſoever one is able to write, yet when the liberties of one's country are threatned, it is ſtill more difficult to be ſilent."

Is there not the ſtrongeſt probability, that if the univerſal ſenſe of theſe colonies is immediately expreſt by reſolves of the aſſemblies in ſupport of their rights, by inſtructions to their agents on the ſubject, and by petitions to the crown and parliament for redreſs, theſe meaſures will have the ſame ſucceſs now, that they had in the time of the Stamp-act?

A FARMER.

By ſeveral Veſſels which have arrived at Boſton, from London, ſince our laſt, and have bro't Prints to the firſt of March, there is the following Articles of Intelligence, viz.

WHITEHALL, Feb. 2, 1768.

THE King has been pleaſed to iſſue his commiſſion under the Great Seal, authoriſing and impowering Richard Sutton, William Blair, & William Fraſer, Eſqrs, or any two of them, to execute the office of Keeper of his Majeſty's Privy Seal, and during the ſpace and term of ſix weeks, and alſo to grant, during his Majeſty's pleaſure, to the Right Hon. William Earl of Chatham, the ſaid Office of Keeper of his Majeſty's Privy Seal, from & after the ſaid term of ſix weeks or other ſooner determination of the ſaid commiſſion.

LONDON, Feb. 6.

There is an account by the way of France that the Spaniards and Portugueſe have entered with united Forces into Paraguay the Jeſuits oppoſed them with an armed force, but that after a ſharp and obſtinate fight, 130 of the brethren were made priſoners, and directly hanged on the ſpot.

Feb. 10. It is ſaid that the patriotiſm of a certain N——n will ſhortly be reſtored to its ancient ſplendor & unrivalled luſtre, by his procuring a pardon for a noted exile; and thereby reſtoring to his country a patriot who has ſuffered more for it than perhaps any one in the preſent age or nation.

The partizans of Mr. Wilkes give out that he will ſoon be appointed Governor of the Bahama Iſlands.

The affairs of our colonies being at length, moſt happily for them, as well as for the mother country, put under the direction of a Nobleman, long diſtinguiſhed for his great abilities & his truly patriotic ſpirit, who has thoroughly ſtudied them, perfectly underſtands them, and pays a due regard to their importance it is juſtly hoped that many groſs abuſes therein, which have been too long overlooked, or connived at, will now be rectified, and many new and ſalutary regulations introduced, which are greatly wanted.

Feb. 13. Laſt Tueſday night Mrs. Griffinbergh, charged by Miſs Woodcock with being aiding to Lord Baltimore in a rape upon the ſaid Miſs Woodcock, ſurrendered before Sir John Fielding and William Kelynge, Eſq; at the Public Office in Bowſtreet & was on the evidence of Miſs Woodcock committed to New Priſon, Clerkenwell.

Feb. 29. Laſt night there was a grand Levee at the Duke of Newcaſtle's, in Lincoln's Inn Fields.

Yeſterday Richard Sutton, William Blair, and William Fraſer, Eſqrs. were ſworn in before the Privy Council to execute the Office of Keeper of the Great Seal for ſix Weeks, or further, during his Majeſty's pleaſure.

It is now thought that the Parliament will break up on Thurſday ſe'night.

March 1. We hear there is a reconciliation between two noble perſonages not only in their famalies, but in the miterial way, which it is thought will cauſe ſome changes in the adminiſtration.

We hear the writs will be iſſued for a new Parliament the 12th of next month.

Private letters from Rome mention that it was expected not only the Society of Jeſuits but even the Inquiſition itſelf, would ſoon be aboliſhed in the dominions of his Holineſs, notwithſtanding the preſent oppoſitions by ſeveral Cardinals.

Among the many advantages which will reſult to the Iriſh from the duration of their Parliaments, it is not by any means the leaſt, that it will greatly diminiſh that diſtance and ſupercilious haughtineſs with which the men of fortune of that kingdom have hitherto behaved to their ſuperiors.

BOSTON, April 14.

We hear that Chriſt's Church at the North End, have made Choice of the Rev. Mather Byles of New-London, for their Miniſter; that he accepted the ſame, and is ſoon expected in Town to embark for orders.

NEW-YORK, April 14.

HARTFORD, April 18.

The Freemen of this Town, at their annual Meeting, laſt Monday, made Choice of Col. John Pitkin, and John Ledyard, Eſq; to repreſent them in the General Aſſembly at this Place, in May next.

We hear from Suffield, that laſt Week the Houſe of —— Auſtin, of that Place, was entirely conſumed by Fire.

 Complainant, (No. 10) came too late for this Day's Paper.

Hartford, (W. Diviſion) April 11th 1768.

Of the Remains of a young Woman, that periſhed in the Flames in this place, laſt week, tho' almoſt all the Bones were entirely conſumed, and no Traces of Fleſh to be found, yet the Liver was found, & all the Effect the Fire had upon it, was only to ſcorch the ſuperficial and external Part of it—upon being pierced upon the convex and concave Side, it emitted freſh Blood, and I imagine, was ſo little hurt by the Fire, as to be capable of affording a proper anatomical Notion of a human Liver—a few Years ago two Inſtances exactly ſimilar to this happened at Wintonbury——

Now, if any Gentleman of Speculation, and philoſophical Abilities, will ſatisfactorily account for this Phænomenon, and ſhew why ſuch intenſe Heat as will not only conſume the muſcular Fleſh, but the moſt ſolid Bones, will have ſo little Effect upon the Liver, he will probably oblige the publick, as well as his Humble Servant,

THE BEST OF

COD FISH,

TO be Sold, very reaſonable, either for Money or Grain, By JOSEPH BARRET,

Hartford, April 18, 1768. n3

Mr. GREEN.

From the South Carolina Gazette, dated the 30th July, 1753.

Mr. TIMOTHY,

A FEW weeks ago I had a letter from a friend in the country, preſſing me for ſome account of ELECTRICITY, of the ſtructure of the Leyden Bottle, of the uſe and effect of ſharp Points when oppoſed either to the Prime Conductor or electrified Clouds, & particularly for an account of the electrical Kite, &c. Not being equal to this taſk impoſed by my inquiring friend, I ſent him the letters of the modeſt and ingenious Mr Franklin to Mr. Collinſon, F. R. S and the ſame well authenticated relation of the kite, which was lately publiſhed in one of your papers, with the names of ſome of the perſons preſent at Dr. Lining's experiment; and to theſe with a few remarks of my own, I referred him for information; And withal told him, that many ſharp Points were now erect in Charles Town, and that hitherto (as far as I could learn) they had not been productive of any noxious effects; on the contrary, that although, of late, the lowering ſky & heavy clouds have threaten'd much Thunder and Lightning, yet, excepting once, we have had no near, and conſequently no dangerous effuſion of Lightning ——With regard to that flaſh which lately ſplit the maſt of a ſchooner at Mr. Motte's wharf, I informed him, that it darted from a cloud (not a very large one) which came towards the town from the N. E. in which direction we had no ſharp Point communicating with earth or water, whereby to attract and carry off its fluid—— Had the motion of the cloud been from N. or N. W. poſſible Mr. Wragg's or Dr. Lining's ſharp points would have robbed the cloud of its charge, and prevented execution on the maſt——I obſerved, that as this cloud was not a very large one, its atmoſphere was probably not ſo extenſive, as in any extreme part thereof to be within the ſphere of attraction of any of thoſe points ——Hence I accounted, by conjecture, for that one ſtroke of Lightning and remark'd that this ſingle inſtance, ſo circumſtanced, inſtead of furniſhing an argument againſt the power and efficacy of ſharp Points, is rather a demonſtrative proof, that more are wanting, eſpecially in the circumjacent parts of the towns.--That if the iron ſpindle on the top-maſt of the ſchooner had terminated in a ſharp point, communicating with the water by iron or braſs wire, it is more than probable, that the maſt would have thereby been preſerved, from damage; and that the cloud would have gently diſcharged its Lightning, without any crack or exploſion.——I concluded my letter by obſerving, that many of our acquaintance were ſtrong Anti Electricians; & that ſome of them from a religious principle, had cenſured the erecting of ſharp points as a preſumptuous meddling with heaven's artillery; and that inſtead of drawing down ſafety, they wiſhed it might not be a means of drawing down the divine diſpleaſure.——To this letter my friend favoured me with an anſwer; but as probably his animadverſions, as well as my own, upon this new ſubject, are too weak to be expoſed, I muſt for the preſent keep them at home; Only Sir, I ſhall inform you, that my friend is enraptured with Mr. Franklin, is perſuaded into a ſtrong belief of that gentleman's electrical tenets, and is convinced, by his experiments, of the truth and ingenuity of his hypotheſis.——He concludes his letter in theſe words—— "The author of my being has been pleaſed to afford me a certain portion of reaſon and intelligence, and has implanted in my nature a ſtrong & active principle of Self love or Preſervation. Having now, by the help of my reaſon, ſo inveſtigated the truth of this new hypotheſis of Mr. Franklin, that I am ſatisfied of the cauſes of Thunder & Lightning; how the flaſhing clouds ſtrike terror and frequently pour deſtruction upon us, and by what means (thro' the divine bleſſing) we may be relieved from this awful danger, can I heſitate a moment, in gratifying my inherent deſire of Preſervation by erecting the ſalutary pints? preſumtuous, it can never be, unleſs the points are uſed in defiance of omnipotence; A thought too big with impiety to be harboured in the moſt abandoned breaſt; a thought which no one can entertain, who is not equally ſunk in ignorance and depravity. I apply ſharp Points as a remedy, againſt a partial, a natural evil, as I would apply an antidote againſt poiſon; and when, by a rational inquiry, I become perſuaded of the virtues of both, that the one is as likely to prevent, as the other is to remove the evil; not to rear the Point, would be equally irrational and improvident, as not to apply the antidote. Thoſe Anti-Electricians which you ſpeak of, and who pretend to be actuated in their cenſure by a religious principle, would do well to conſider that the fruit of religion is charity; that charity, which inclines the mind rather to ſuſpect its own lack of penetration, to blame the remiſſneſs of its own reſearches after truth, than judge unfavourably of the conduct of others eſpecially in matters doubtful or intricate. And I leave it to their own reflection, whether a rational inquirer after, and embracer of the truth, or he, who wilfully remains in ignorance or obſtinately reſiſts conviction, and breaks the bounds of charity, is more likely to incur the divine diſpleaſure. Let us, my friend, raiſe our ſharp Points; Let us at the ſame time bleſs God, for the new and wondeful diſcovery, ſo beneficial to the inhabitants of this and every warm climate; and while nature puts on her ſable dreſs, when lightnings flaſh and thunders roll and earth and air is trembling with the ſhock, let the renewed goodneſs of God excite our higeſt praiſe, and point our ſouls in grateful adoration to the great preſerver of men.

Yours, &c. BENEVOLUS.

COMPLAINANT. [N°. 10]

But looks, thro' Nature, up to Nature's GOD.
POPE

WHAT I ſhall this week complain of, is a matter ſerious and intereſting; and as the author is hearty and ſerious in writing, he hopes his readers will be ſo in the peruſal. The ſubject is, "The great and growing neglect of family prayer in this country." Some perhaps ſmile, when they conſider ſo ludicrous a writer gravely entering upon ſo unfaſhionable a ſubject——a ſubject that nearly touches ſome of the genteeleſt perſonages: But I value not a ſneer— 'tis not barely foibles, but vices that are prevalent among us, that I mean to complain of. Wherefore, whoever thou art (whether a poor labourer, or an opulent merchant) that acknowledgeſt a GOD and a divine revelation, and doſt not pay homage to him in thy houſe, prepare to receive reproof.

I choſe Mr. Pope's words for my motto, becauſe this is a duty conformable to the faith of every ſect, ſo that a man need be no ſlave in performing it. Nay, not only the profeſſing chriſtian acts abſurdly, in this omiſſion; but the very Deiſt, that views GOD only in nature, ought (and muſt, if he acts conſiſtently) look up to nature's GOD. The chriſtian world has univerſally acknowledged the decency, propriety and duty, of uniting in ſocial worſhip, morning and evening:—Hence we find the Roman Catholic church, and the reformed Epiſcopal church of our nation, dividing their public ſervice on this plan, and laying it out, not only for the Lord's day, but for every day in the month:—Hence we find the national authority of Great-Britain, enjoining daily, ſocial worſhip, at theſe ſeaſons, in cathedrals and colleges:—Hence likewiſe, it has been a general (and for ought I know, invariable) rule, in the inſtitution of free ſchools in England, "That prayers be offered at the opening and cloſing of the ſchool daily." I am not about to labour hard, in proof of the reaſonableneſs of public worſhip. I take it to be an unneceſſary taſk. What I have here adduced, is to ſhew the propriety of devoting ſome part of the morning and evening to this duty. The daily ſacrifice under the law, ſhews the univerſal conſent of GOD's church in this matter. Now, if ſocial worſhip be a duty, and morning and evening, ſeaſons of peculiar propriety to engage in it, may we not deduce the unreaſonableneſs of neglecting this in private families? Every reaſon that holds good for ſocial prayer in any community whatever, holds good in a ſtronger degree with reſpect to thoſe ſmall communities called families. If any one urge "That we have, as members of a country, town, or pariſh, common wants to make known, common dangers to deprecate, & common mercies to return thanks for," I am ſure I may urge the ſame with greater force, when I apply it to a family. The connexion by which the members of that community are bound together, is the ſtrongeſt and tendereſt of any connexion in life; ſo that if one member ſuffer, all the members ſuffer with it, in a ſenſe that is not true of any other community. Death, and ſickneſs, in any of the family, or any other diſaſter, affects a family in a manner more intereſting than it can a town or neighbourhood. How deplorable is it then, to find perſons, that own a GOD, and worſhip him in the church, diſregarding his providential hand, and refuſing to acknowledge their dependance upon him in a familiſtick character! If I am challenged to produce a poſitive text of ſcripture that they diſobey, I have only to refer them to the clergy, whoſe buſineſs it is to open the bible, and tell them that the duty ſtands fairly bottomed upon the nature of the relation between GOD and man, upon the nature of communities, and the rational foundation of ſocial worſhip in general. And I aſſure you, my readers, however ludicrous, antick a fellow you may account me, I have ſeriouſneſs enough in me to bewail from my ſoul, ſo growing a neglect of ſo plain a duty. The neglect is attended with no ſcandal, for the polite world ſet the example, & the meaner ſort follow it; nay, 'tis grown ſomething common to neglect at meals to pay to GOD, what we look upon a compliment due to a friend that invites us to dinner. I am not pleading up for the long, puritanical exerciſes of the table and family, that have given juſt diſguſt to ſome; neither do I think that emergencies may not frequently excuſe an omiſſion of family prayer———What I complain of, is a wilful, habitual, total neglect of it. How ridiculous 'tis to ſee ſuch perſons conſtantly attending church, as tho' they were more concerned for the town, than their own houſhold! to ſee them offering up their children in baptiſm, when, as a family, they live without GOD in the world; yet theſe perſons, when they, or their children, are dangerouſly ſick, are ready enough to have prayers made for them—to ſeek help in adverſity, where they think not of looking in proſperity!—'Tis, I confeſs, exceeding ſhocking (at leaſt to me) to ſee a baptized, chriſtian family, go on together, ſeven years an end, and never once addreſs (as a body) the GOD they have avouched! K

It may look like the modern epilogues of grave tragedies, to add what follows; but there is no treaſon in it, & ſo I tack it on.

I Preſume that it cannot be conjectured by any, that, in this paper, I mean any particular perſonal application.—and I declare now, that I never did, nor ever will, in any of my papers, point ſatyre or reflections at any one perſon in my mind, nor at any particular ſex, calling or profeſſion of mankind—I mean to expoſe bad characters, let them belong to what ſex, or calling they will. Our ſea faring gentlemen therefore have no right to determine their order in general ſtruck at, in the picture of Capt. Spritſail*; I eſteem the order as eſſential to the commerce, and intereſt of this country; and I ſolemnly declare that, as I aim'd at no particular perſon, I expected it would be diverſion and entertainment, inſtead of diſguſtful to that particular claſs of men. For the ſame reaſon I think it injurious to make perſonal Application of the dialogue between Dr.* Snakeroot, and Dr. Calomel to any practitioner: I have heard it done, and diſapprove of it; for upon the honor of an author, as that paper was all ſpun from my own invention, committed to paper, and ſent to the preſs in one hours time; ſo (if I am not miſtaken) no one particular practitioner came into my mind for an original of any part of it, except a ſmall part of what relates to the I—ns. 'Tis I think, likewiſe hardly kind in the ladies, to think I have handled them any ways roughly, or indelicately; ſince Melander's ſpouſe is the only female character I have ever touched; the foible of her Husband is placed in as ſtrong a light by the ſide of hers, and another male character, of the ſame ſtamp, marches before her. The author hopes all will excuſe his plainneſs, being ſenſible of his own follies and imperfections, as one of the human kind.———I'll tell you a ſtory from old father Æſop, for my own mortification.

"A Crab fiſh once her daughter told,
(In terms that favour'd much of ſcold)
She could not bear to ſee her go,
Sidle, ſidle, to and fro.
What a rope ails the wench? quoth ſhe,
When ſo much money has been paid,
To poliſh you like me;
It makes me almoſt mad to ſee
You're ſtill ſo aukward an ungainly jade,
The daughter ſmil'd, and look'd aſkew,
She anſwer'd————————
Partly, as moſt folks daughters do:
Madam, your ladyſhip, quoth ſhe,
is pleas'd to blame in me,
What, on enquiry, you may find,
Admits a paſſable excuſe,
From a proverb much in uſe,
That cat will after kind."

LONDON, Jan. 29.

Extract of a letter from Paris, January 21,

"The new year commences with an account of the tragical affair that has juſt happened to our Ambaſſador at the court of Naples: the fact is this—The Viſcount de Choiſeul, our ſaid Ambaſſador, unhappily caſting his tender regard towards a young Lady of that place, of a good family, before engaged to the Count de Conitz, the emperor's ambaſſador, and taking advantage of the Count's abſence, preſſed this fair Italian Lady with the moſt ardent profeſſion of love, and to forward his ſuit, overwhelmed her with preſents; but all in vain, ſhe ſtill proving inexorable. One day in a fit of rage and deſpair, he drew his ſword and plunged it three times in her body; ſome ſay ſhe died in the ſpot others that ſhe is not dead, but mortally wounded; However, the King of Naples, informed of this ſhocking ſcene, diſpatched a courier hither, and our King immediately ordered his ſaid Ambaſſador home, and he is ſince ſent to the Baſtile, [illegible] his melancholly tranſaction has ſo affected the Duke De Praſlin, (the Viſcount's father) that he has been at the point of death with grief on this ſad occaſion, and is ſtill unable to attend any buſineſs; nor has been at court ſince the begining of the year."

It is the opinion of many judicious perſons that paying ſo great a compliment to the colonies as appointing a Secretary of ſtate on purpoſe to tranſact all buſineſs relative to them will be one effectual means to bring about a good underſtanding between them and the mother country, being calculated to reſtore harmony and natural good-will, & of courſe to baniſh thoſe bickerings and animoſities which have for a long time paſt unhappily ſubſiſted between them.

Mr. PRINTER,

AS hiſtory ſeems the fountain of knowledge, or at leaſt, that by which all arts and ſciences have been very much improv'd, am very much oblig'd to the author of the ſtory of the young woman's liver, that was ſo unfortunately burnt at Hartford——and ſhould hold myſelf ſtill more oblig'd, if the ſame writer, and indeed every ingenious practitioner (altho' he has not his medical character illuſtrated by his ſacerdotal) would freely and truly communicate all the curious phænomena they meet with. As I have but a ſingle moment, and ſhan't pretend to invade the province of the learned, ſhall only, by way of anſwer to his queries, obſerve,

Firſt, That the liver is cover'd by the muſcular fleſh and bones, and conſequently they muſt be burnt, before the fire can affect the liver

Secondly, That the muſcular fleſh, in the generality of ſubjects, being interſpers'd with the Membrana Adipoſa, has conſiderable fat in it, and the bones likewiſe, contain a large quantity of oil—but the liver is a meer congeries, or ſyſtem of blood veſſels and bile, covered with a thin membrane, and has but a little fat, if any——And blood, tho' it will ſoon be inſpiſſated by heat, will not eaſily burn——Shall leave the ſubject to be further enlarg'd upon, by gentlemen of ſpeculation, and philoſophical abilities, and conclude by ſubſcribing myſelf, your conſtant reader,

I take this Opportunity of returning my unfeigned Thanks, for the Kindneſſes conferred on me, and my Family, by the Neighbourhood, in which we were ſo happy as to reſide, while we liv'd in Hartford. THOMAS GREEN.

In Praiſe of HUSBANDRY.

FARMING, or huſbandry, is the Method of Life our Creator firſt aſſigned us. It is of that Nature as muſt often raiſe in us good Reflections, and turn our thoughts towards him. Every Seaſon and every change of Weather, in the Seaſon, awakens in us the Conſideration of his Providence, and a more than common Senſe of our Dependance on his Bleſſing, from the perpetual Occaſion we have of obſerving and reflecting how he gives us our daily Bread. A man cannot be buſied in the offices of huſbandry (they conſiſt of ſo great Variety) without many things coming under his Obſervation, from which divine, moral, and philoſophical Concluſions are ſo natural and obvious, that if he will avoid making them he muſt ſhut his Eyes againſt the Light of the Sun.

If we conſider Huſbandry in Regard to our temporal Good, provided it be carried on with induſtry and Judgment, it is a ſure way to improve our Fortunes, and indeed the only Way the landed Gentlemen can take. It is therefore to be wiſhed they would exhort their Children early to think of it with Emulation, and enter into it as a School of Profit and Education. If they were gently led to ſtudy agriculture and perſued it as they ought, it would be ſo far from bringing them into Contempt, and excluding them from uſeful Knowledge, that they would find it the beſt School of Education, and the fitteſt to prepare them for the Service of their Country It is a vaſt field of Science the Farmer is exerciſed in, and undoubtedly muſt be a very great Advantage to him, and give him Weight in Aſſemblies, by furniſhing him with ſolid Arguments in moſt of the Affairs of Life, & enabling him to deliver his Opinion clearly & confidently on what he thoroughly underſtands and knows.

Again, it is productive of Long life and Health. The Nerves and all the Solids of the Farmers and labourers Bodies are generally much ſtronger than thoſe of Gentlemen who live an idle and unactive Life, their Fluids much purer and unmixed, their Bones conſolidate eaſily, and ordinary Medicines work more ſucceſsfully on their Diſeaſes than the moſt ſovereign Specificks upon Perſons of higher Quality. As they are leſs paſſive therefore in their Conſtitutions, they often ariſe at their Fullneſs of Years, which Gentlemen, who are not exerciſed in Country Employments, ſeldom reach.

Laſtly, when we conſider a judicious Farmer, ſurrounded with different Topicks of Huſbandry; when we review him remote from the troubleſome Scenes of Fraud, Malice, Vanity, and Ambition, cultivating domeſtick Virtue, cheriſhing the Principles of univerſal Benevolence, and diſpenſing Friendſhip to all around him, with looks of chearful Innocence, and Words that ſpeak an elegant Simplicity; we cannot conceive a human Being more happy, or a Character more amiable, and more truly dignified. Such a Figure ſtands like an antient Patriarch, commanding Love and Veneration. All his conduct is upright, all his Aims are directed to the Purpoſe of Humanity. If we compare him to a Stateſman, how much happier is he than the firſt Miniſter of the beſt Monarch! Whilſt a Miniſter fleeces a whole People, our Innocent Farmer is employed in ſhearing his Flock; from which he exacts nothing but Superfluity and encumbrance. The firſt Operation produces Murmers and Diſcontent; the laſt is attended with Mirth, Feſtivity and Profit. The Farmer uſes no Corruption, but Manure; he hatches no Intrigues, but Poultry; he brews not Miſchief, but Beer; he fears no Blaſts of Envy, though he dreads the Blaſts of Heaven and inſtead of fortyfying Caſtles he fences Fields, becauſe he hath no enemies but Vermin.

COMPLAINANT: [N°. 11]

And is it wiſe when Youth with Pleaſure flows,
To ſquander the Reliefs of Age, and Pain?
ARMSTRONG.

OF all earthly bleſſings, there is none to be preferred to HEALTH. Without this, the other enjoyments of Life looſe their reliſh. Neither honour nor wealth can eaſe racking pain; the daintieſt food becomes loathſome to the ſickly nauſeating ſtomach, and diſguſtful to the cruſted, taſteleſs mouth. A man becomes incapable of ſerving his generation, or enjoying the good things of life himſelf. 'Tis therefore ſtrange that thoſe who are bleſſed with a naturally robuſt and firm conſtitution take ſuch direct meaſures in their early days to impair and weaken the ſprings of nature, lay in foundation for remorſe in future life, and bring on the infirmities of old age before the meridian of their days. Youth is the ſeaſon wherein a good animal conſtitution may be confirmed & fitted for comfort, uſefulneſs and long life. The naturally weak and tender are obliged to take care of themſelves; they ſuffer ſo immediately under any exceſſes that they are compelled to circumſpection, and hence it comes to paſs that they frequently live more comfortably, and longer, than thoſe of a robuſt conſtitution, who from vain confidence of their vigour are apt to deſpiſe all rule and order.—I look upon it matter of Complaint, that when perſons arrive to the days of their youth with a firm, vigorous conſtitution, they deſtroy, in the gay days of pleaſure & health, an ineſtimable bleſſing they are betruſted with, which was deſigned to ſupport them under unavoidable infirmities and burdens. In a country ſo thinly peopled and where hard labour is ſo neceſſary, this is a public evil. I don't take it that any of them deſign to ruin their health; no: nature ſeems to ſtand unmoved amidſt ſo many ſhocks, that they vainly imagine nothing can hurt them, & therefore from a vain oſtentation of their vigour & abilities, ſet themſelves upon feats that have caſt down many wounded. Now and then indeed there is an iron nature that is impregnable, and this encourages others to contemn all rules of reſtraint, as whimſical & fabulous. As to the courſes of debauchery, they certainly lead to a miſerable life, & an untimely death—the night-rambling, rake, and epicure is frequently hurried, by ſome fierce diſeaſe, into an untimely grave; or, if ſome of the ſons of riot, alarmed at the decline of health, ſtop ſhort before they have quite deſtroyed the ſprings of life; yet the enfeebled, enervated ſprings will never (or very ſeldom) recover their former force and elaſticity, ſo that they lead a diſpirited, crazy, dying life, tedious and gloomy to themſelves, and troubleſome to all about them; tranſmitting originally feeble conſtitutions to their unhappy offſpring. I entered upon this ſubject upon the ſpecial requeſt of a very worthy and virtuous, but unhealthy gentleman, who aſſured me "that all his complaints were the conſequence of a free, unguarded manner of living in his youth."

Perſons ſhould (I confeſs) rejoice in the days of their youth; and enjoy the [illegible] nal pleaſures that are peculiarly adapted to that gay period of life: but they ſhould always be directed by the rules of virtue and a due regard to their future health and reputation. As to downright habitual drunkenneſs, I am not about to take notice of that, ſince it is too groſs a charge to fix upon the moſt of our young men of any rank & the pernicious conſequences, thereof are too manifeſt to need any animadverſions of this nature—I am not likewiſe about to call all thoſe that come within the bounds of this complaint, profligate or debauched: no; many of fair characters are taking ſteps in their juvenile days to impair, and weaken the ſprings of nature. When a practice of meeting almoſt every night or frequently with company in a warm room in a public houſe and breaking up after a very generous glaſs late at night; I ſay when ſuch a practice prevails for any conſiderable time, nature is much expoſed by going into the cold & damp air of the night, and 'tis ten to one if the ſtomach, ſtimulated by the good cheer of the evening is not loaded with a midnight animal ſupper——this practice is what the fair ſex is but little expoſed to; but there is another as bad, and that is, when after a chearful dance & rich entertainment thro' a great part of the night, they unguardedly ruſh all glowing and ſweating, into the night air and have perhaps a conſiderable diſtance to ride or travel. How evedently, how piteouſly does nature complain of the ſhock the next morning! & how ſurely muſt ſhe ſink under it, if juſt ſuch a practice was continued for any conſiderable courſe of time! far be it from me to condemn dancing, and a virtuous, recreating, modeſt familiarity between the ſexes in their juvenile days——I would rather enhance all their rational pleaſures; and remove all thoſe ingredients in them which are a preſent alloy, and productive of future pain—when a company does not break up till the body is exhauſted and weakned with the exerciſe, till nature proclaims her wearineſs by gaping mouths and half-cloſed eyes, when the candles ſeem to dance and flirt before them and their heads ſwim or ake, then to go, in a ſweating, relaxed, febrile ſtate, into the dewy night, & perhaps (to cloſe the diverſion) ſet ſhivering, gaping and yawning with a partner in a cold room till towards morning. When a company do thus, they have more pain than pleaſure; every ſcene of ſuch diverſion is like a tug of Sampſon's, at the pillar of the houſe of Dagon; & would plainly, if purſued ſteadily, bring down roof and all. Another pernicious practice which young ladies run into, as well as the other ſex, is ſpending ſo much time thro' ſummer evenings, either in walking the ſtreets, or ſetting on ſtoops & door ſteps, uncovered and expoſed to the noxious dew. I know that after a ſultry day there is ſomething inchantingly inviting in the coolneſs of a moon-ſhine evening; but fatal maladies and lingering diſeaſes frequently follow too great an indulgence of this kind.—'tis frivolous to confute this by referring to ſome that have been remarkable for it, and yet have received no damage; that alters not the nature of the thing—It proves not that intemperance is ſafe & tends to long life, becauſe ſome few have lived to old age in a wretched courſe of it. But few would be willing to be blown up by gun powder, becauſe one man eſcaped unhurt when Hartford ſchool-houſe was demoliſhed. In fact it is as probable that the multiplied hyſterical diſorders, that appear in a thouſand different ſhapes, among ſo many of the [illegible] of the fair, ſpring from this ſource, as [illegible] that tea-drinking to which ſo many are ready to impute them—In ſhort, immoderate & often repeated watching, by way of [illegible] ſhip, or company keeping, have their bad effects upon animal nature. That exceſs in theſe matters are capable of doing miſchief, I believe, any one will grant.

"He without riot, in the balmy feaſt of life, the wants of nature has ſupply'd,

Dec 24. Letters from Paris of the 8th inſt adviſe, that the Abbe de Chappe is to make a voyage to different places in the South Sea, in order to obſerve the paſſage of Venus over the ſun's diſk (an uſeful and valuable phænomenon for aſcertaining the true diſtance of the ſun from the earth) which will happen in 1769, as it did in 1761, agreeable to the prediction of Mr. Halley, near 80 years ago. It will not be viſible again for ſome ages, after 1769.

The following receipt as a cure for hunger is ſaid to be practiſed by a good woman in this city. At eight in the morning, (as ſoon as ſhe riſes) a pint of two penny purl. At three, a glaſs of rum or brandy. At five, tea or coffee, with muffins. At nine, a hot ſupper, with a pint of porter. After ſupper ſome warm punch.—When in bed, a glaſs of brandy.

Dec. 26 On Sundy laſt died, at Winey in Oxfordſhire, John Palmer, aged 93 and Joſeph Palmer, aged 85.—Theſe two brothers were old batchelors, and afforded a ſtriking inſtance of the inſufficiency of wealth to confer happineſs. Tho' bleſt with affluence, their inſatiable thirſt for more, conſtantly excited artificial wants & formed new ſchemes of penury: they even denied themſelves the common neceſſaries of life; kept no ſervant; from a perpetual adherence to this maxim, "It is better to have a little than nothing." In their domeſtick ſcenes they were unparrallelled prodigies of ſilth & naſtineſs ; all rules of decency were trampled upon, and the ſtrongeſt efforts of miſery and confuſion exhibited : they conſtantly lodged together in the ſame room ; and about April laſt were both taken ill ; & what is very remarkable, after languiſhing alternately, and denying themſelves the needful reſtoratives, they expired as above on Sundy morning laſt, within ſeven minutes of each other.

CHARLESTOWN, (South Carolina.)

March 28. Laſt wedneſday morning between 8 and 9 o'clock, the houſe of Mr. Thomas Legare, in Bedon's alley, was ſtruck, and aſtoniſhingly ſhattered, by lightning.—The ingenious Mr. Johnſon having favoured us with the particulars, and ſome remarks we make no doubt of their proving acceptable to the public.

" My curioſity has prompted me to viſit many buildings, &c. ſtruck by lightning, but I have never ſeen any, where the violence of that deſtructive meteor was ſo amazingly great, as at Mr. Legare's houſe. The gable of the eaſt end is ſo ſhattered as to render it neceſſary to be taken down ; the doors and windows, with their caſes, are torn to peices ; and wainſcotting, beauſets, furniture and other materials inſide of the houſe demoliſhed and driven in all directions, with a violence inconceivable to perſons who have not ſeen the marks which they have impreſſed on whatever oppoſed their paſſage. It has been a prevailing opinion, which I have alſo endeavoured to propagate, that perſons in the middle of the chamber would receive no damage, though the houſe ſhould be ſtruck by lightning : Though I ſtill believe this to be true, with regard to the immediate effect of lightning upon their bodies, yet, I am well convinced, from what I have ſeen in Mr. Legares houſe, that no perſons could have remained in any part of the chambers, there affected, without the moſt inevitable deſtruction, from the violence with which the different materials were ſcattered in all directions. The lightning divided in a number of ſtreams, and it is ſurpriſing to obſerve with what facility theſe ſtreams were conducted from one place to another ; ſometimes by a bolt or hinge, and not infrequently by a ſingle nail. One of the principal ſtreams paſſed through a gun which ſtood in the corner of one of the chambers, without any conſiderable damage to any part of the metal work : This affords the moſt ſatisfactory proof that a rod of metal, properly applied, would have ſaved the whole houſe and furniture from aſtoniſhing deſtruction.——Happily none of Mr. Legare's family received any hurt, they all being in the other end of the houſe ; but a negro wench the property of Mr. Cato Aſh, having taken ſhelter under a balcony, was killed on the ſpot."

The exploſion was ſo great as to occaſion ſeveral Perſons in other adjacent Houſes to be thrown from their Seats, and it is ſaid, that Mr. Legare and two of his Sons were ſtunned by it, but recovered very ſoon after it.

We hear from Warwick in this Province, that on the 9th Inſtant, the Dwelling Houſe and Barn of Mr John Mays of that Place was conſumed by Fire together with all his Furniture, and what is very melancholly, his eldeſt Son, about 3 years old, was burnt to Death.

As Mr. H——'s Queſtion reſpecting the young Woman's Liver [ſee Connecticut Courant, No 173] has been inſerted in the ſeveral News Papers publiſhed in Boſton the following Anſwer to it is taken from One of them, viz.

"DOſſie, in his Philoſophic Elements of experimental Chymiſtry, accounts for burning by the theory of commenſtruation, violent ruſhing of the nitrous principle in the air to combine with the phlogiſton, i e oily or ſulphureous matter in the inflamable body.——If this ſhould be found true, it readily ſolves Mr. H's quæſitum, reſpecting the Liver's reſiſting the force of a fire that conſumed the bones, which are very full of oil.——The few arteries which ſupply the Liver with blood, and that with a languid propulſe, never fix much animal glue or phlogiſton to any part of his ſubſtance, as is evident from its ſlight coheſion, however conſiderable its denſity.——It ſeems indeed an entire congeries of infinitely ſmall glands, filled with a ſaline ſaponaceous matter, not only incombuſtible, but more powerful in extinguiſhing fire than water itſelf in equal quantity.——Neither are the form, bulk and denſity (aforeſaid) of the Liver inconſiderable in this queſtion."

Containing the freſheſt Advices, Both Foreign and Domeſtick.

At a Meeting of the Freemen of the Town of LEBANON, in the Colony of Connecticut, April 11, 1768, the following Letter was reported viz

SIR,

THE Freemen of this Town, intereſted in and ſenſibly affected with the calamity and diſtreſs to which they, in common with their American brethren, are and muſt be ſubjected by the operation and conſequences of ſeveral acts of the Britiſh parliament, impoſing various duties, &c. whereby their property is to be taken from them and applied without their conſent, for the expreſs purpoſe of raiſing a revenue to the Crown, have ſeen with ſenſible pleaſure your generous efforts in the glorious cauſe of endangered liberty; wherein, with clear knowledge and ſolid argument, you have vindicated the rights of America, demonſtrated that any attempts to deprive her of them are inconſiſtent with the Britiſh conſtitution, and equally impolitic and injurious; wherein, with penetrating ſagacity and certain preſcience, you have warned her of the infinite danger of an indolent acquieſcence in principles which, extended to their genuine length, will end in the total ſubverſion of her conſtitutional freedom, and an utter alienation of thoſe kind affections, which, but for hard and unequal meaſures, would laſt forever, equally ſtrong and mutually beneficial to this and the mother country; with juſt and perſuaſive eloquence have you ſtrengthened the hands and encouraged the further needful exertions of the generous multitude, engaged in that noble cauſe, aſſerted its righteouſneſs, and pointed out the beſt and, we truſt, ſure means of obtaining redreſs, while juſtice and candor are partners of the Britiſh throne; but whether they ſucceed or not, your excellent & judicious letters exhibit the true intereſt and only remaining policy of theſe colonies, to ſo clear and conſpicuous view, that they cannot fail to reap important advantage from your prudent & wiſe inſtructions.

Permit us, therefore, reſpected Sir, amidſt applauding millions, to pay you the ſmall tribute of our warmeſt thanks for your generous and truly patriotic labours, to penetrate the vail of your modeſt retirement and congratulate you as One born for the moſt noble & exalted purpoſe, & as having erected a monument which will laſt when thoſe of marble and braſs are mouldered to duſt, and tranſmit a grateful remembrance of the FARMER to the lateſt poſterity.

THE above letter was unanimouſly accepted by the Freemen of ſaid Town, and ordered to be publiſhed. Atteſt.

W. WILLIAMS, Town Clerk.

Inſtructions of the Freemen of the Town of Lebanon, in Connecticut, to Major William Williams and Capt. William Sumner, Repreſentatives of ſaid Town, at the General Aſſembly to be holden at Hartford the ſecond Thurſday in May next.

Gentlemen,

THE Freemen of this Town being ſenſibly affected with the general calamities in which our country is involved eſpecially ſome late acts of the Britiſh legiſlature, impoſing certain duties on ſundry American imports, for the purpoſe of raiſing a revenue which, as they grant away our property without our conſent, we humbly conceive, unhinge the Britiſh conſtitution and ſap the foundations of American liberty; alſo the uncommon ſcarcity of a circulating medium of trade, whereby our buſineſs is impeded, our debts increaſed, and great ambarraſſments brought upon ourſelves and country: We think ourſelves in duty bound to give the following Inſtructions to our Repreſentatives.

In the firſt place, That you exert your utmoſt abilities and influence in the General Aſſembly of this Colony to be convened at Hartford in May next, that an humble Addreſs may be paſſed by the Aſſembly to the King's ſacred Majeſty, repreſenting our duty and loyalty, the grievances we labour under, and imploring relief from the unconſtitutional burdens impoſed on us; and for the like ſalutary purpoſe that ſuitable Remonſtrances and Letters, requeſting aſſiſtance, be wrote and forwarded as ſoon as may be, to thoſe gentlemen in the adminiſtration who have heretofore ſhewn themſelves friendly to America, our Agents, and other Gentlemen at the Britiſh Court, whoſe ſentiments of juſtice and humanity may probably be influential to our obtaining redreſs.

And in order to prevent the encreaſe of poverty and impending ruin, we inſtruct you to endeavour to diſcountenance the importation of all unneceſſary articles of conſumption, to encourage Frugality and Induſtry, the raiſing of Wool and Flax, to promote the manufacturing of Iron, and endeavour to your utmoſt that ſuitable encouragement may be given by our legiſlature for the ſpeedy erecting and eſtabliſhing of Glaſs-Works in this Colony, and any other manufactures, as the wiſdom of our honorable Aſſembly ſhall judge meet.

All other prudential matters reſpecting the welfare and happineſs of this community, we refer to your wiſdom and fidelity, which we truſt will be exerciſed in the diſcharge of the important truſt repoſed in you; as in theſe times of general diſtreſs, we naturally turn our eyes to the Guardians of our Rights and the Fathers of their people.

A Letter from the Merchants of the Town of Norwich, in Connecticut, to the ingenious Author of certain patriotic LETTERS ſubſcribed a FARMER.

MUCH ESTEEMED SIR,

FROM an anxious concern for the happineſs of our Country, glowing with the warmeſt effuſions of a grateful heart, the Merchants of the Town of Norwich beg leave to addreſs you and depoſite this teſtimony of their friendſhip for ſo wiſe & virtuous a benefactor.

When Death ſeemed ſo ready as to leave but a fearful hope of ſafety, your kind work revived our drooping ſpirits, and, we may ſay it with the voice of all, ſaved a ſinking land.

The juſtneſs of your thoughts, the plaineſs and energy of your ſtile animated by the noble and exalted ſpirit which breathes thro' the whole of your Letters, all join to admire the greatneſs of your mind, while we extol the unbounded goodneſs of your heart.

Poſterity, who muſt reap the fruits of your toil in the fields of Freedom, will raiſe in every boſom an altar to your memory; The numerous herd; the bending harveſt; the buſy ſtreet; the ſwelling ſail; the peaceful ſhade; the ſocial fireſide; and all the various pleaſures of the year, ſhall hand thy name to ages yet unborn.

Forgive us dear Sir, if we intreat you ſtill to bleſs us with your watchful care; and O! may you live, long live—that future infancy may be taught by thee.

A LETTER to a FRIEND.

SIR,

IN anſwer to your queſtion of the 3d inſt. "Are not public tranſgreſſions of the divine law, that fall out in the church, to be treated according to Mat. xviii 15 16 17?" I anſwer, no. For I humbly conceive Chriſt gave that rule to his church, only to teach them in what manner they might lawfully make a private, obſtinate tranſgreſſor of his law, a public example of wickedneſs, in order to his conviction, repentance and reformation, or elſe excommunication; that his church might be kept pure from private as well as public tranſgreſſions, but never was intended to be a rule to teach them in what manner they might lawfully make a public tranſgreſſor of his law, a public example of wickedneſs, who hath already made himſelf ſo, in order to his conviction, converſion, and reformation. For v. 17, 'Tell it to the church,' that is, publiſh his tranſgreſſion, that he may be dealt with in the ſame way and manner as though he had publicly committed it, or as public tranſgreſſors are to be dealt with. But how is that? I anſwer in the words of Saybrook platform, "As the honor of the goſpel, and the nature of the ſcandal ſhall require." But my deſign is not here to point out a form, but only to ſhew the inconſiſtency of that doctrine, which ſuppoſes that public and private are ſynonimous terms, and therefore, that all tranſgreſſions of the divine law, whether of a public or private nature, are to be treated in one and the ſame manner, that is, according to Matt. 18. 15, 16, 17. But I have never read that paſſage of ſcripture thus, If thy brother ſhall treſpaſs againſt thee in a public manner, go tell him his fault in a private manner, between thee and him; but if he will not hear thee, take with the one or two more &c.

Scripture, reaſon, and common ſenſe, teacheth that a city ſet on a hill cannot be hid.— And ſince it is impoſſible, in the nature things, that a thing is, or can be made public and private, at one & the ſame time, in one and the ſame place, and in one and the ſame ſenſe it is doubtleſs contrary to ſcripture, reaſon and common ſenſe, to try to make it ſo, or even to treat it as tho' it were ſo.— It is very agreeable to ſcripture, reaſon and common ſenſe, that in the civil œconomy, an open, public tranſgreſſor of the divine law; may be rebuked in an open and public manner; but why it may not be done in the eccleſiaſtical, for my part I cannot conceive; they being both of divine inſtitution, there is nothing, as I conceive, more agreeable to ſcripture, reaſon and common ſenſe, than that the church may lawfully rebuke an open, public tranſgreſſor of the divine law, in an open and public manner, without taking all thoſe ſteps pointed out in Mat. 18, 15, 16, 17 for private tranſgreſſors only. And the apoſtle gives the reaſon for it; for ſaith he: them that ſin (that is publickly) rebuke before all, that others alſo may fear.

Now you will eaſily ſee, if you take my ideas right, that I have ſaid nothing to diſſuade any man from adviſing his brother, timely offering goſpel terms of reconciliation with the church, and people which he hath publickly offended; if he in his own beſt judgment and conſcience, ſhall think it moſt for the glory of God, all things conſidered; otherwiſe he may neglect it. For I look upon it caſe of conſcience, in which a man may, or may not act, according as the nature and circumſtances of the tranſgreſſion may require; and therefore that the church, as an eccleſiaſtical body, have no right, even (in caſe of neglect) much leſs for not taking thoſe ſteps pointed out in Mat. 18, 15, 16, 17. But this rule, in caſe of private tranſgreſſions, is ſo plain that he that runs may read.

I agree with the platform, that "the rebuking of an offending member, in order to conviction, is in caſe of private offences to be performed according to Mat. 18. 15. 16, 17, and in caſe of public offences openly before the church, as the honour of the goſpel, and the nature of the ſcandal ſhall require." It is doubtleſs true that private tranſgreſſions are to be treated agreeable to Mat 18 15, 16, 17, and public tranſgreſſions agreeable to 1 Tim. 5. 20. But if theſe are not two diſtinct rules, but only one, then I readily own if one brother ſin before all, & another rebuke him before all, he alſo becomes a tranſgreſſor before all. But how to reconcile theſe two rules, and make them but one, I muſt confeſs I know not, without firſt doing violence to my reaſon, and then ſay, when the apoſtle ſaith, them that ſin rebuke before all, he don't mean before all, but between him an thee alone. And that place of ſcripture when compared with the other, muſt be read thus; them that ſin rebuke before all, between him and thee alone. And altho' theſe two paſſages of ſcripture, conſidered ſeperately, are very different in their ſenſe and meaning, yet conſidered in connection and conjunction together, mean but one and the ſame thing. So the ſame may be ſaid concerning the eaſt and the weſt. Strange doctrine this! yea woderous ſtrange! but where it prevails no wonder the innocent ſuffer.

But why them that rebuke before all, ſhould only ſuffer diſcipline, and not them that ſin before all, is another great miſtery.

And now, ſir, perhaps you will think it ſtrange that any ſhould attempt to ſignify that they ſtill believe that the diſtinction made in ſaybrok platform, is agreeable to the word of God; and that there ought to be a diſtinction kept up betwixt public, and private offences, in the diſcipline of the church of Chriſt, ſince we have heard the conſociation of——county don't think ſo; and what they deſerve that do.—

But if the doctrine which I have attempted to vindicate, hath a greater tendency to juſtify the wicked than the contrary to condemn the righteous, I want ſome better evidence to convince me of it, than a threat of diſcipline,—But if a man deſerves diſcipline for only believing one paragraph of the platform, what would he deſerve ſuppoſing he ſhould believe the whole of it.

But to conclude this letter: If public tranſgreſſors imagine that the point of this ſword is too ſharp, I hope it will make them more cautious of running againſt it. I am,

Your's &c.

Extract of a letter from Montſerrat, dated March 21.

"Our troubles here are paſt expreſſion, occaſioned by a moſt horrid and deeplaid plot of the Negroes, for cutting off all the white inhabitants. This rebellion, which was to have been executed in an inſtant, all over the Iſland, on the night of St. Patrick, or the next, when the people were engaged in balls was happily diſcovered by a poor white woman. The fellow who informed her, was immediately taken apprehended, and put to the torture to extort a confeſſion, which he obſtinately bore a conſiderable time without having the deſired effect; but upon finding us ſtrongly on our guard, and ſeing no probability of ſucceſs, he voluntarily confeſſed the whole, and impeached a great number of his confederates. We have upwards of fifty already in cuſtody, who are obliged to be confined on board the ſhips. As we go on, I am afraid we ſhall have but few negro men, left on the iſland. We are ſtrongly fortified having eight pieces of cannon in town, and about fifty wall pieces mounted in our paſſes. We are greatly fatigued, having but a hand ful of men, and continually under arms. I can ſafely ſay I have not had 10 hours ſleep this 7 days paſt.

"I have only to tell you, that this packet carries the King's orders to Sir William Johnſon, to ſettle the boundary with the Indians. My Lord Shelburne made a point of getting it done, before he gave over the American part of his office to Lord Hillſborough, who is now a 3d Secretary of ſtate for that department, a very able man, & a friend to the colonies."

Extract of another letter from London, of the ſame date.

"We have had a very hard winter, and abundance of ice in the river; it has done conſiderable damage to the ſhipping, carrying ſix or ſeven teir all adrift together; there were not leſs than 40 or 50 ſail adrift at once: I was one among the reſt.——Such another night I never ſaw or heard; we hardly knew which way to go to be ſafe from maſts & yards, or ſomething falling on us; but happily I received no other damage worth mentioning.

A very beneficial Branch of Trade has been neglected in this Province, that is, Whaling; but we now have ſome Hopes of ſeeing it revived, as Mr Robert Murray, and Meſſ'rs Franklins, have at their own Expence, fitted out a Sloop for that Purpoſe, which ſailed laſt Sunday; to Holland, a Merchant that is not concerned in the Whale Fiſhery, is deſpiſed by all the trading Part of the country. And we are told that the Iſland of Nantucket alone, laſt Seaſon, got Oil, &c. to the amount of 70 000l.

We hear from Shrewſbury, in New-Jerſey, that the Week before laſt, one Mr —— of that Place, being plied with ſtrong Liquor by thre Females, till he was intoxicated, they then proceeded very deliberately to deprive him of his manhood by C——n, which they effectually performed. The Crime he was charge with, was for depriving his Wife of Favours that he bountifully laviſhed upon his Neighbours. The Operators were, his Wife, his Wife's Mother, and one other Woman. He is in a fair Way of recovering and the Women are all in cuſtody.

LONDON, Jan. 14.

THE following extraordinary ſtory is confidently talked of at the weſt end of the town as authentic—That ſome nights ago Commiſſioner *, of his Majeſty's dock-yard at P——, had dreamt, that his gardner was digging a very deep pit in the middle of his garden, at the back of his houſe in that yard, to bury a corpſe, which had affected him to ſuch a degree, that he waked his lady and told her the ſtory; that ſhe, as is cuſtomary on ſuch occaſions, ridiculed all dreams as fabulous, and deſired him to go to ſleep again. He did ſo, and was again diſturbed by the ſame dream, and awaking in great confuſion and perturbation of mind, told his lady that he could not reſt in quiet, and therefore now determined to go into the garden; that when he had come to the ſpot his dream had pointed out to him, he actually found the gardner at work digging ſuch a pit; and that, upon aſking him his reaſons for working that time of the night, and of the uſe he intended it for, he after faultering in his ſpeech, and ſome apparent confuſion at ſeeing his Maſter told him, that it was for a cucumber bed—The C——r told him of the improper ſeaſon of the year, as well as the time of night, he not expecting his ſervants to be out of their beds at ſuch untimely hours, and that, in the mean time, he looked round him, to ſee if any thing was there, which might probably have been conveyed into this pit; but that, on ſeeing nothing, & the fellow growing ſurley, he returned back into the houſe. In going up ſtairs, he met a maid ſervant, dreſſed out very neat, and all in white; and then he aſked her where ſhe was going, and what ſhe ment at being dreſſed ſo; that ſhe, after ſome heſitation, told him ſhe was only going down ſtairs; but this not proving ſatisfactory, he took her into the parlour, locked the door, and there inſiſted on knowing the intention of her errand; that after ſome evaſion, and making ſeveral excuſes, ſhe fell on her knees and wept, and then aſſured her maſter, that on a promiſe of forgiveneſs ſhe would relate the whole....She then ſaid, that the gardener, on a promiſe of marriage, had often cohabited with her, and had got her with child; that ſhe had often preſſed him to make her an honeſt woman, & that preceeding evening he had aſſured her that he would make good his promiſe, by taking her away on horſeback, a little out of town, and that, after the ceremony, they would return to the houſe before the family were up; that for this very purpoſe ſhe was to meet him at that hour, about two in the morning, in the middle of the garden. Her maſter, being apprehenſive of the fellow's intentions, ordered her not to go there, but to return immediately to her bed; that when ſhe was gone, the C——r went again to the garden, but the fellow was gone & has not been heard of.

Laſt Friday Evening came on here, and continued all that Night and beſt part of the next Day, a moſt violent Storm from the S. E. attended with Snow & Rain, which as the Tides were extremely high, has done conſiderable Damage to moſt of the Wharves in Town, and ſeveral ſtores adjoining them. The Damages ſuſtained by the Inhabitants of this Town are difficult for us to enumerate. The following are a few amongſt many of which we have not yet learnt the Particulars, viz. Three of the Windows of St. Paul's Church blown down and entirely demoliſhed; a Breaſt Work belonging to the Navy Yard partly deſtroy'd, and other Damage, it is ſaid to a conſiderable Amount—Two Houſes in Gottingen, and one Houſe in Iriſh Town, blown down and deſtroy'd; ſeveral Veſſels and Boats were ſunk and drove aſhore, and others drove from their Anchors. Beſides many Articles of conſiderable Value waſh'd from the Wharves. It is ſuppoſed the loſs occaſioned by this Storm cannot be leſs than 3000l.

BOSTON, May 5, 1768.

On Friday laſt the Rev'd Mr. Mather Byles, and Family came to Town, accompanied by ſeveral Gentlemen.

The Anniverſary Dudleian Lecture is to be preached at Harvard-College on Wedneſday next, at 3 o'clock P. M. by the Rev'd Mr. Barnard of Salem.

We hear that laſt Friday Afternoon, the Fire-wards of this Town ſeized ſix half Barrels of Gunpowder, which had been put on board a Veſſel then lying to, and grounded at one of the Wharves here, contrary to an expreſs Law of this Province.

NEW-YORK, May 5.

We hear that Dr. John Weatherſpoon, a very learned, pious, and eminent Divine of the Church of Scotland, is appointed Preſident of the College of New-Jerſey, and is upon coming over this Spring, by the Way of New-York, to fill up that important Place.

Seven Families of Engliſh Farmers, (ſome of them Men of conſiderable Property) conſiſting of 43 Perſons, beſides Servants, are come over in Capt. Smith, in order to ſettle in theſe Parts. We have not heard their particular Reaſons for leaving England. They propoſe to go conſiderably into the Buſineſs of the Dairy, eſpecially in the Manufacture of Cheeſe. On Monday laſt they ſail'd with their Effects, in a large Sloop for Albany.

NEW-PORT, May 2.

By the Veſſels arrived here laſt Week from Saltertuda, we have Advice, that the Captain who went in the Man of War to convoy the Fleet from Barbados to Saltertuda, finding a Number of Veſſels there, loaded with Salt, ordered them to be unloaded and all their Salt divided among the Fleet under his Convoy; and that Salt was very ſcarce; Alſo that the owner of two Sloops, which were unloaded as above, immediately ſold his Veſſels, and was determined to proſecute the Captain of the Man of War, for his arbitrary, Proceedings, of which he informed him, who replied he was obliged to act as he had done, by orders of the Admiral or looſe his Commiſſion.

Boſton, May 2.

Laſt Thurſday came on to Trial at His Majeſty's Interior Court of Common Pleas for the County of Suffolk, an Action of Treſpaſs wherein Mr. John Gill, of this Town Printer, was Plaintiff, and Mr. John Mein, Bookſeller, Defendant, for an Aſſault & Battery; when after a long Hearing the Jury found a Verdict in favour of the former, of one Hundred & thirty Pounds Lawful Money Damages, and Coſts of Court. From which Judgment we hear both Parties appealed to the next Superior Court.

HARTFORD May 9.

Laſt Monday Sir WILLIAM JOHNSON, Bart. came to Town from Albany and next Day proceeded on his Journey to New London, from whence he was going to New York.

To the PRINTER.

AS I am a friend to the rights and privileges of the Freemen of this colony ſecured to us by charter, I have lately read it over and over again, to ſatisfy myſelf whether our practice quadrate with it; and earneſtly requeſt, that any gentleman of the law, well acquainted with our conſtitutional rights and privileges, would be pleaſed to make proper anſwers to the following queries, which will oblige many of your readers, and, among others, your conſtant reader,

An honeſt Freeman.

Queſt. 1. BY our charter, what are we to underſtand by a General Aſſembly of the Governor and Company, and of what members doth it conſiſt?

Q. 2. What clauſe, part or paragraph of our charter, gives to the Governor and Aſſiſtants of this colony, a right to ſit in General Aſſembly, in a houſe ſeparate from the Repreſentatives of the Freemen, or veſt them with a controuling power, or a right to negative the unanimous votes of the repreſentatives of the Freemen, either in matters of legiſlation, or the election of the public officers of the government?

Q. 3. If the Governor, and majority of the Aſſiſtants preſent, may negative the unanimous choice made by the whole repreſentative body of the Freemen, is not the plain ſenſe & meaning of the charter this——That the whole body of Freemen, by their repreſentatives, may in General Aſſembly make choice of ſuch officers as they pleaſe, provided the Governor (and, as it may happen) three only of the Aſſiſtants, ſhall give them leave; and whether this can be approved, to the true intent, and meaning and deſign of the charter?

Q. 4. Are not the votes of the council & Repreſentatives of the Freemen counted promiſcuouſly, in the election of all officers choſen by the Aſſembly, both in the province of the Maſſachuſetts Bay, and colony of Rhode-Iſland?

Q. 5. What part or paragraph of our charter enables the General Aſſembly of this colony, to limit the votes of the Freemen, in their election Aſſiſtants in May, to the twenty perſons nominated in October?

Q. 6. As all Freemen are under the ſolemnity of an oath to vote for thoſe perſons who, in their conſciences they think will conduce to the beſt good of the government, may they, conſiſtent with a good conſcience, vote for thoſe perſons in May, which they could not conſcientiouſly vote for in October?

Q. 7. If they may not, is not the limiting the votes of the Freemen to twenty perſons, an abridgment of one of the eſſential Rights of the Freemen of this colony, and unconſtitutional?

Q. 8. What ſentence or paragraph of our charter gives the Governor and aſſiſtants an Excluſive right to appoint Sheriffs of the ſeveral Counties in this colony without the concurrant votes of the freemen by their repreſentatives.—

LONDON, Feb. 1.

The Hon. R. Lee, Eſq; and Sir Thomas Stapleton, Bart. the two members for the city of Oxford, received a Letter from the Mayor and Aldermen of that city, informing them, that unleſs they paid down the ſum of 7 thouſand 5 hundred pounds ſterl. they ſhould not be choſen to repreſent that city in the enſuing parliament, to which the following noble and patriotic anſwer was returned—That they would never buy them as they never intended to ſell them.

The Letter was laid before a certain great aſſembly, and judged an high and flagrant breach of the privilege of the houſe & tending to ſubvert the freedom and independance of parliament, and by virtue of an order of the houſe, the above mentioned perſons were brought up to London and committed priſoners to Newgate, but being ſoon tired of their lodgings, they preſented a petition to the houſe, expreſſing their unfeigned ſorrow for their heinous offence, and humbly repreſenting that the continuance of their confinement would be of the utmoſt ill conſequence to themſelves and families, and that ſome of the Petitioners being in a very bad ſtate of health, their lives were in eminent danger; and therefore praying the houſe to take their unhappy circumſtances into conſideration.—Accordingly, the day following, they were brought to the bar of the houſe where they, upon their knees, received a reprimand from the Speaker, and were ordered to be diſcharged, paying their fees.

The SPEECH of the SPEAKER of the Houſe of Commons,

When he reprimanded Philip Ward, late Mayor of the City of Oxford; John Treacher, Sir Thomas Munday, Thomas Wiſe, John Nicholes, John Philips, Iſaac Lawrance, Richard Tawney, all of ſaid City; Thomas Robinſon and John Brown, late Bailiffs of the ſaid City; upon their Knees, at the Bar of the ſaid Houſe upon Wedneſday the Tenth Day of February, 1768.

Philip Ward, John Treacher, Sir Thomas Munday, Thomas Wiſe, John Nicholes, John Philips, Iſaac Lawrance, Richard Tawney, Thomas Robinſon, John Brown;

THE Offence of which you have been guilty has juſtly brought you under the ſevere Diſpleaſure of this Houſe. A more enormous crime you could not well commit: ſince a deeper Wound could not be given to the Conſtitution itſelf, than by the open and dangerous Attempt which you have made to ſubvert the Freedom & Independence of this Houſe.

The Freedom of this Houſe is the Freedom of this Country, which can continue no longer than while the Voices of the Electors are uninfluenced by any baſe or venal Motive. For if abilities and Integrity are no recommendation to the Electors; if thoſe who bid higheſt for their Voices are to obtain them from ſuch deteſtable Conſiderations; this Houſe, will not be the Repreſentatives of the People of Great Britain. Inſtead of being the Guardians and Protectors of their Liberties, inſtead of redreſſing the Grievances of the Subject. This Houſe itſelf will be the Authors of the worſt of Grievances: They will become the venal Inſtruments of Power to reduce this happy Nation, the Envy and Admiration of the World, to the loweſt State of Miſery and Servitude. This is the abject condition to which you have attempted to bring your fellow Subjects.

Many Circumſtances concur to aggravate your Offence. The Place of your Reſidence was a ſingular Advantage. You had at all Times the Example of one of the moſt Learned and reſpectable Bodies in Europe before your Eyes. Their conduct in every Inſtance but eſpecially in the Choice of repreſentatives in Parliament, was well worthy your imitation.

You are Magiſtrates of a great City. In ſuch a Station, it was a Duty peculiarly incumbent upon you to watch over the Morals of your Fellow Citizens; to keep yourſelves pure from venality; and to prevent, by your Influence thoſe under your Government from being tainted by this growing and peſtilential Vice. How have you abuſed this Truſt! You yourſelves have ſet the infamous Example of Proſtitution, in the moſt public and daring Manner.

Surely you muſt have felt ſome Remorſe from the generous Diſdain with which your corrupt Offer was rejected by your Repreſentatives. They thought, and juſtly thought, that a Seat in this Houſe, obtained by a free independent Choice of their Conſtituents, was the higheſt Honour to which a Subject can aſpire; and that diſcharging their Duty as ſuch repreſentatives, was the nobleſt of Services. Sorry I am to ſay, that theſe Conſiderations do not appear to have had the leaſt Weight with you.

However, you have at leaſt acknowledged your Guilt; and by your Petition Yeſterday you ſeem conſcious of the Enormity of your Offence. This Houſe, in the terror of its Judgments, always thinks upon Mercy; nor do they ever inflict Puniſhment but for the ſake of Example, and to prevent others from becoming the Objects of their Reſentment.

The Cenſure paſſed upon you will, they hope, have that Effect. You are now the Objects of their Mercy; & are brought to the Bar to be diſcharged.

May you be penetrated with a due Senſe of their Juſtice and Lenity! May you attone for your paſt Offence by your conſtant Endeavours to make a right Uſe of the invaluable Privileges which you enjoy as Electors! Conſider theſe Privileges as a ſacred Truſt repoſed in you. Diſcharge it with integrity.

But, before you riſe from your preſent Poſture I do, in Obedience to the Commands of this Houſe, REPRIMAND you.

I am now to acquaint you, that you are diſcharged paying your fees.

THE

Connecticut COURANT:

Containing the freſheſt Advices, Both Foreign and Domeſtick.

COMPLAINANT. [No. 12.]

So to the eye the ſpeckled ſerpent wears
A ſhining, beauteous form; but deep within,
Foul ſtings and deadly poiſons lurk unſeen.
DODSLEY.

AT my firſt entering into the world, in the character I have aſſumed in this paper, I declared my intention of avoiding (however miſcellaneous in other reſpects my performances were to be) all things relating to ſtate affairs——my correſpondents therefore, that have ſuggeſted ſome ſubjects of this nature, and deſired me to write upon them, will excuſe me, if I declare not only my incapacity, but utter averſion to meddle or make with any grievancies proceeding from the conduct of any legiſlative body, whether national or provincial; or the juridical determinations of any conſtitutional board, civil, eccleſiaſtical, or military—that is, in print; for you know I have frequently told you, that I complain hard enough of theſe things at home. For the ſame reaſon, my humourous correſpondent, who deſires me to complain of ſome proceedings of an eccleſiaſtical body, muſt excuſe me; his own genious, I imagine, will furniſh him to write with more ſpirit and emphaſis upon the ſubject, than I am capable of: however, if he only means a diſſertation upon eccleſiaſtical tyranny in general, 'tis quite probable I ſhall take an opportunity to gratify him; for I abhor it, not only as the bane of all ſocial enjoyments, but of religion itſelf——

The young lady who deſires a Complaint upon the conduct of "perjured, faithleſs men," ſhall be heard and regarded with pleaſure: whether ſhe has been unfortunate herſelf, in perfidious treatment from ſome beloved Falſe One, or whether ſhe ſympathizes with ſome forſaken friend, matters not; this day's paper ſhall be devoted to her——And becauſe I cannot introduce the matter in a better form, I will do it in the very words of her billet.

"To the COMPLAINANT.

"SIR,

"AS you have taken upon you of late to complain of ſome of the groſs irregularities of the preſent age, I hope you will be willing to ſpeak a few words, as to the injuſtice of young people to one another, and of the men in particular, to thoſe of my own ſex. I mean as to breach of promiſe in love affairs: Never, Sir, could you exert yourſelf on a more noble ſubject, than when preſenting a mirror for faithleſs, flattering, and perjured men to view themſelves in: you may repreſent them, Sir, as bad as you pleaſe, without fear of doing them injuſtice. If you comply with my deſire, you will greatly oblige

"Your Humble Servant, &c."

[illegible] dear girl! I have not half room enough to draw this ſort of creatures at full length; if I had, you'd find the picture as black as you could wiſh. 'Tis amazing that men of ſenſe and honor (at leaſt in other reſpects) can glory in the character of a Lovelace, as exhibited to the world by Mr Richardſon. They manifeſt truth, honor, benevolence & gratitude to the reſt of the world; but, to the moſt amiable of the human kind, their whole deportment is a complication of falſhood, perjury, cruelty and ingratitude. Our Maker, upon forming mankind male and female, ordained marriage for the comfort, felicity, and orderly continuance of the human ſpecies; and in order that theſe important ends be anſwered, he implanted in them in general, that combination of fancy, deſire and eſteem, which we call love, and which, when duly directed towards a proper object, and meeting with an equal return, is an eſſential ingredient of connubial felicity. The fair ſex are generally obſerved to be poſſeſſed of, and actuated by more tender and delicate ſenſations and paſſions than the other; and indeed, this is one great bleſſing; it ſeems neceſſary to ſupport them under all the toils and burdens to which the conjugal ſtate neceſſarily expoſes them. Were it not for this, how poorly able to bear the ſolitude, the infirmity, the watchings, &c. that muſt neceſſarily be the portion of her that bears, and brings up children!—Sufficient evidence of a virtuous, tender paſſion, previous to marriage, in a woman, gives her intended huſband the beſt ſecurity of his expected felicity; it affords a pleaſing proſpect of her acting with kindneſs, tenderneſs & compaſſion, as wife, mother, and miſtreſs; it is a double ſecurity for her fidelity; and gives him full warrant to determine that ſhe will be faithful to his intereſt, a pleaſant companion in health, and a careful, aſſiduous nurſe in ſickneſs. What ſhall we think then, of thoſe that take pains not only to rob a family, and a world, of ſuch a bleſſing, but plunge a worthy, tender ſoul, into a melancholly (and perhaps diſgraceful) uſeleſneſs, and bring a laſting, an irretrievable gloom upon a family that never injured them? I challenge any man living to produce, upon the principles of either chriſtianity, morality or honour, any tolerable excuſe for treating the fair ſex with perjury, ingratitude and cruelty, that will not equally excuſe them in conduct of the ſame nature towards the other ſex—nay, I affirm that they are entitled to a conduct implying greater tenderneſs, confidence and protection than the other ſex. The natural delicacy, and many unavoidable diſadvantages of their ſex, oblige us in humanity and faithfulneſs to a peculiar concern for their welfare and protection. Indeed, the greateſt rakes, acknowledge this, in a vaſt ſhew of cringing compliſance; but even then, ſeven abominations are in their hearts. How abſurdly does that gentleman act, who can be ſo exceeding kind and tender, in helping a young lady into her chaiſe, and yet ſcruples not to bring an everlaſting cloud of melancholly upon her ſpirits, diſhonour upon her name, and a final period to all her earthly comfort!

See, in poor, abandon'd Florella, the gloomy remains of beauty, wit and gaiety!—the wreck of fortune!—the trophies of a hard hearted ſpoiler! Say, cruel Bellmour! how has ſhe merited this at thine hands? Was it becauſe ſhe loved thee, and believed thee honeſt, when thou wert a villain?—Was it becauſe there was too much honeſty in her own heart, to permit the ſuſpicion of perfidy in thine? Thou haſt made that innate, conſtitutional tenderneſs, which would have made her a rich bleſſing to a kind huſband, the engine by which thou haſt wro't her deſtruction. A gloom which 'tis pain to behold, ſets inceſſantly upon that countenance, which once ſparkled with gaity and vivacity. And, though formed by nature for the chearful ſcenes of life, ſhe abandons herſelf to a uſeleſs ſolitude. If love be ſtrong as death, & jealouſy cruel as the grave; I think it moſt infernal diverſion, to ſet theſe two paſſions at variance in a tender, female ſoul, and then ſet down to enjoy a ſight of the conflict, as if it were a cock match!—There is ſomething too laſting and intereſting in this matter to make a jeſt of: however, I will conclude, with one word of advice to my fair correſpondent, and all the reſt of her ſex, viz. "Always keep your own hearts ſoug, till you are ſure of your gentleman."

PHILADELPHIA, April 21.

Extract of a letter from London dated Feb. 18.

"We have the ſatisfaction of informing you, that from the preſent appearance of things, the intereſt of the colonies is here conſidered to be more free from enemies than for ſome time paſt; indeed many people aſſert, that thoſe who have been the moſt bitter, are changing their force. The new Secretary of ſtate for America, gives ſtrong aſſurances of his good-will towards you, and we hope time will evince benefits to accrue from the creation of this new office, which by many is much exclaimed againſt as an extention of the power of the crown. On the other hand, others are ſtrongly of opinion, that the colonies will reap advantage heretofore, as every body will know where to apply for relief and aſſiſtance, which heretofore was difficult to be aſcertained from whom it was to be expected, The conduct of your neighbouring province appears to be diſpenſed with. And had not the conduct of the aſſociators at Boſton cauſed ſevere reflections on them, matters would now wear a tolerable aſpect. But we are really of opinion, that theſe people are giving a handle to their enemies at this juncture purſuing a meaſure ſo incompatible with their intereſt."

Friday laſt arrived at New-York the Earl of Halifax Packet, Captain Jefferies, in 7 Weeks from Falmouth, by whom we have the following Advices, viz.

LONDON, March 5.

A Report is very current, that all the French ports are ſhut up, and that 40.000 troops have ſurrounded Paris. The true reaſon of theſe very precautionary meaſures have not tranſpired; but ſome report them to be only occaſioned by a robbery lately committed on a nobleman in the French adminiſtration, to the amount of a million of livres, while others, perhaps with more probability, reflecting on the ſtate of health of a certain great perſonage, as lately mentioned in the papers, are not without ſuſpicion that they may have ſomething more important for their object.

A letter from Lancaſhire informs us, that the towns of Lancaſter and Preſton are almoſt deſtroyed by the mobs. General Burgoyne was reduced to the neceſſity of fighting his way out of Preſton, ſword in hand. Many poor ſouls have loſt their legs & arms, and not a few their lives.

March 10. By letters from Paris an account is received of the death of the Queen of France; upon which event, it is ſaid that city was ſurrounded by the ſoldiery to prevent the emigration of the manufacturers, which has uſually been very great there on occaſion of long mourning. Her Majeſty, who was the daughter of the late King Staniſlaus of Poland, was born June 23, 1703, and married his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty in Sept. 5, 1725.

A letter from Lancaſhire ſays, "To ſuch a degree has faction raged here, that had all the ſhips in the adjoining river been men of war, and had bombarded the towns & doors of every individual houſe of both parties, they could not poſſibly appear in a more ruinous and ſhattered ſtate. But at Preſton the ſcene is ſtill much worſe, where laſt week an enraged, unthinking mob (computed at about 3000(entirely demoliſhed and levelled ſeveral good and genteel houſes together with the Poliſh Chappel. In other places, they have broke to pieces clocks, cheſts, chairs, and in ſhort, all ſorts of houſhold furniture, dragged feather beds into the ſtreets, ripped them up, and threw aloft the feathers; whereby great numbers are reduced to the laſt extremity."

In the courſe of the laſt Seſſions, 112 publick and private Bills received the Royal Aſſent.

It is reported that a certain celebrated Perſon has lately written a very penitential Letter to a great Perſonage; and that in conſequence thereof, a free Pardon either has been or will be made out, that the Penitent may offer himſelf a Candidate to repreſent a great City in Parliament.

Among the many Bills paſſed the laſt Seſſions of Great Britain, are the two following.

The Bill to amend and render more effectual in his Majeſty's Dominions in America, an Act of this Seſſion, for puniſhing Mutiny and Deſertion, &c.

The Bill for more eaſy and effectual Recovery of the Penalties and Forfeitures inflicted by acts, relating to the Trade and Revenues of the Britiſh Colonies in America.

The Queen of France was tho't, the Beginning of this Month, to be in imminent Danger, and had the Sacraments adminiſtered by the Biſhop of Chartreſs, her Majeſty's 1ſt Almoner. According to the laſt advices, dated the 5th, her Majeſty was then better, having had ſome Reſt at Night, and not being ſo much diſordered as ſhe had been with her Cough.

Yeſterday the Parliament was diſſolved by Proclamation, and this Day the Writs will be ſent to all the returning Officers for the Counties, Cities, and Boroughs, throughout the Kingdom, for electing a new Parliament.

It is really true that Mr. Wilkes has procured a Pardon; it is no Secret thro' what Influence it has been obtained. The parliamentary Rolls furniſh a Precedent that an Outlaw may be choſen a Repreſentative without a Revoking of the Outlawry; but as no man would chooſe to be under that Predicament who could avoid it, the Price of Mr. Wilkes's Pardon was his Promiſe, on Honour, not to ſtand for the Neighbour City of this great Metropolis.

NEW-YORK, May 12.

Extract of a letter from Montreal dated April 16.

Laſt Monday night about 11 o'clock, a fire broke out in one of the upper ſtreets, about the middle of this town, occaſioned by a lighted candle being carried into the ſtable of Monſ Giaſſon: The flames took their courſe from near St Lawrence's gate, and went through the provoſt's, Mr. Grozier's, Jacob's, and the black Siſters nunnery, raging with ſuch violence, that in about two hours upwards of 80 houſes were conſumed, and 107 families diſlodged; and 'tis thought, had it not been for the Chateau, which was ſlated, and by that means ſtopped the fury of the flames, the whole town would have been conſumed. The loſs is not yet known, but I imagine it will amount to near 25,000l. ſterling.

Laſt Wedneſday Morning, about 5 o'Clock, died at Enfield, the Reverend Mr. PETER RAYNOLDS, Paſtor of the Church of Chriſt in that Place, in the 68th Year of his Age, and 43d of his Miniſtry.

Laſt Friday, the wind blowing very hard from the S. W. the Houſe of Mr. Samuel Porter of Kenſington took fire, and was conſumed to aſhes immediately, together with all the furniture, proviſions, cloaths, &c. which it contain'd.——Mr. Porter and his wife, with all the near neighbours, were ſome miles diſtance from home, on a viſit, or for diverſion, ſo that no aſſiſtance could be had, till all was conſumed. From the houſe the fire was ſoon communicated to a large new barn belonging to Mr. Richard Hubbard, on the oppoſite ſide of the ſtreet, which was alſo ſoon conſumed, together with a young calf, and five or ſix ſwine. Mr Hubbard's houſe, which was but a few rods from the barn, took fire ſeveral times; but by the vigilance and activity of a great number of people, (which by this time had aſſembled) it was extinguiſhed. From theſe buildings, the fire took to the fences, and bore away with amazing rapidity before the wind, and in its courſe catch'd another houſe and barn, but happily they were both preſerv'd.——The fire ſtill continued to rage, in ſpite of the utmoſt exertion of a great number of people, till it came to a wide path that headed it, where it was overcome, and entirely extinguiſhed.

The Hon. JOSIAS LYNDON, Eſq; Gov.
Hon. NICHOLAS COOKE, Eſq; Dep Gov.
Henry Ward, Eſq; Secretary.
Oliver Arnold, Eſq; Attorney General.
Joſeph Clarke, Eſq; General Treaſurer.

Mr. PRINTER,

Your inſerting the following Extract of a Letter from a Gentleman of Diſtinction in New York, in your next Paper, will not be unſeaſonable, perhaps, but probably agreable to others of your Readers, beſides,

Your's, P. N.

——"HAVE you ſeen Dr. Chandler's pamphlet, in favor of the introduction of American Biſhops? We are told, that prelacy is become quite generous and innoffenſive, but a late inſtance ſhould put our church on their guard. Our's at New-York, lately aſked the King for a charter, to ſave our eſtates from falling into private hands, and the bones and ſepulchres of our anceſtors from being ſold. A laudable end, and reaſonable requeſt! And yet it was denied in privy council, laſt Auguſt, the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury being preſent, and the ghoſtly father of London, was an open ſollicitor againſt us at the board of trade. In a word, the decree ſays, it is not expedient that we ſhould have greater immunities than we enjoy by the act of toleration. Will your churches admit that they hold their privileges by this baſe tenure? All ranks of diſſenters here (tho' improperly ſo called) are in conſternation at this unſeaſonable inſtance of prelatic partiality. And if this is the ſpirit of the hierarchy, how cogent the reaſons for our bearing the moſt public teſtimony againſt the introduction of a powerful order of men, who may drive us as far to the weſtward, from our preſent habitations, as they once drove our fathers. I wiſh you would make this anecdote known—you may depend upon the fact, for we have an authentic copy of the royal diſmiſſion of our petition.——"

TO BE SOLD,

A Convenient Dwelling Houſe in Litchfield, with two acres of good land & a ſmall orchard thereon, about a quarter of a mile Weſt of the Court Houſe, on the great road from Hartford to Albany, with a fine large ſtream running about ten rods from the door, very convenient for a cloathier, blackſmith or tanner. Said houſe is two ſtories high with a lintean, having three fire places on the lower floor, and one in the chamber, with an extraordinary good cellar under the whole, lately occupied by Timothy Stanley, jun. For conditions of ſale, enquire of Reuben Smith, or Lynde Lord, in ſaid Litchfield.

From Lloyd's Evening Post.

Letter from a Gentleman in Ireland, to his Friend in London.

Dublin, Dec. 28, 1767.

My dare Phelim,

I Dare ſay you have been long expecting to hare from me, becauſe when I left your big city I promiſed to give you a ſmall account of our doings here.

Devil burn me, but I'd rather be in Dublin Caſtle juſt now than in Heaven. You may talk of your Halifaxes, and Northumberlands, but they are nobody, hony! to our L—d L———t.

By Jaſus, but this L—d T——, is a ſwate fellow, & lives as grand as the Mogul, or our couſin O' Neil, and he's always after pleaſing us.

Upon my conſcience, he has no more pride than a beggarman.—You may ſee his awn ſelf talking to the poor ſoldiers, and giving away handfulls of money every hour in the day upon Eſſex-Bridge. Good luck to him; he's a deviliſh honeſt fellow, and loves claret, (as my Lord Mayor ſays,) as well as if he had been born in Ballyſhannon.

Devil burn me, but he's very deſarving, for he ſtrives all he can to pleaſe us. Would you believe it now? He's going to let his wife lye in of a fine Iriſh boy, and ſhe ſays he ſhall be foſtered in Trinity College. Bleſſings on her ſwate face! ſhe's as charming a crature as any in Dublin, and is always a giving away mate and money, & balls, and Bergummy.

Upon my conſcience, we can't find fault neither with any of his houſhould: The Steward & Comptroller are both big enough to be haros, and never aſy but when they're making one drink and ate proſperity to Ireland; and as for the Secretaries, Chaplins, & Gentlemen, they can make ſpaches, ſarmons and varſes, and ſhoot, and play upon the fiddle. Long life to them all.

Devil burn me my dare Phelim but I wiſh very often for you and my couſin, MacDermot, on a Tueſday night, to dance a lilt at the Caſtle, and to trim the ſhampain.

My ſervice to Peggy Mac Culloch, and deſire her to be after ſend[illegible] me a round of London brawn[illegible] which I'll return her a Dublin [illegible] ſpun.

I am your ſincere couſin,
SULLIVAN O'NIEL.

PHILADELPHIA, April 21.

Extract of a letter from Detroit, dated Feb. 26, 1768.

"Nothing extraordinary has happened hereabouts this winter; a few Indians killed as uſual, by one-another, when drunk, and a Huron by a Frenchman; he had the aſſurance to go into the man's houſe and miſbehaved very much, the Frenchman wanted him out, on which he run his knife into his ſide the Frenchman's brother being cloſe by took up a billet and knocked out his brains with it; the nation ſeems ſatisfied and the Frenchman is recovering.—Two traders, Rogers and Hambach, have been murdered by the Indians lately at St. Joſeph's and Miamis: The Indians, it is thought, intended doing ſome miſchief, perhaps only to get ſome preſents, as they know the more miſchief they do the better they are paid to make it up."

N. B. "The governor of Machilimanack, Major Rogers, is in cloſe confinement there, for treaſonable machination; he is to be ſent priſoner down the country as ſoon as the ſeaſon permits: We don't yet know, for certain, what he has been guilty of."

Extract of a letter from Fort Pitt, April 6, 1768.

"An expreſs arrived here the night before laſt; by whom we learn, that the Indians have, ſince the 9th of laſt Jan. murdered three traders, at different places, ſome diſtance from Detroit. One of them I have been very well acquainted with for many years; his name was Frederick Hambach, a German; he ſerved two campaigns in the capacity of an officer among the provincial troops, and after they were reduced he became an Indian trader. On the night of the 9th of Jan. being juſt arrived at his houſe, in an Indian village on the Miamiſs river, with a new cargo of Indian goods, from Detroit, ſix Indians who he ſuppoſed came to trade with him, lodged in his houſe all night; in the morning they aſked him ſome queſtions about his goods, particularly about his liquors. He told them he had plenty of every thing they wanted except liquor, of which he would let them have a hearty drink, as ſoon as it could come to hand, in the courſe of trade, but had none for ſale. After finding out where the goods were, they tomahawked him in cold blood, without having taſted liquor of any kind or being otherwiſe provoked, & went afterwards to demand the goods of a Frenchman, that had them in poſſeſſion, living about ſix miles diſtance, on the ſame river, whom they compelled by threats to give them up. The expreſſes ſay, that the goods were afterwards reſcued. The other trader, they ſay, was a relation of Major Rogers, and was killed at St. Joſeph's, about the beginning of February laſt. Theſe two traders, already mentioned, are all that are taken notice of in the letters from Detroit; but the expreſſes ſay, that they ſaw the corpſe of another trader, at ſome diſtance on this ſide Detroit, who was murdered by a Frenchman that lives intirely with the Indians.—Pondiac's gang are charged with all theſe late maſſacres, tho' he is ſaid to have been abſent theſe 6 months paſt.

The general opinion is, both at this poſt and Detroit, that the Indians will have ſcalps by way of revenge; It is ſaid there was an Indian murdered, not long ago, by white men, near Detroit. It is thought they will not come to a rupture. There is a grand treaty to be held here ſoon, after which their real intentions will be diſcovered.

Fort Pitt, April 8. Col. Croghan is arrived, and the Indians are coming in faſt to the treaty.

THE Connecticut COURANT

Containing the freſheſt Advices, Both Foreign and Domeſtick.

LONDON, March 12.

Yeſterday his Majeſty went in ſtate to the houſe of [illegible] and gave the royal aſſent to twe[illegible] public and private bills; after which his Majeſty made the following moſt gracious SPEECH from the Throne.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"THE Readineſs with which you entered into the Views I recommended to you at the Opening of this Seſſion and the Aſſiduity with which you have applied yourſelves to the Diſpatch of the publick Buſineſs, give me great Satisfaction. At the ſame time, the affectionate Concern you have ſhewn for the Welfare of your Fellow Subjects, by the ſalutary Laws paſſed for their Relief in reſpect to the high Price of Proviſions, cannot fail of ſecuring to you their moſt grateful Regard.

"I have nothing new to communicate to you in relation to foreign Affairs. The apparent Intereſts of the ſeveral Powers in Europe, as well as the expreſs Aſſurances I have received from them, leave me no room to doubt of their Diſpoſition to preſerve the general Tranquility. And, on my part, you may reſt aſſured, that every Meaſure that is conſiſtent with the Honour of my Crown, and the Rights of My ſubjects, ſhall be Readily directed to that moſt ſalutary Purpoſe.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons

"Your Cheerfulneſs in granting the neceſſary Supplies, and your Attention to the Eaſe of my good ſubjects in the manner of raiſing them, equally demand my acknowledgment. I ſee, with Pleaſure, that you have been able to proſecute your Plan for the Diminution of the National Debt, without laying any additional Burthen upon my People.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"As the time limited by Law for the Expiration of this Parliament, now draws near, I have reſolved forthwith to iſſue my Proclamation for diſſolving it, and for calling a new Parliament. But I cannot do this, without having firſt returned you my thanks, for the many ſignal Proofs you have given of the moſt affectionate Attachment of my Perſon, Family, and Government, the moſt faithful Attention to the Public Service, and the moſt earneſt Zeal for the Preſervation of our Excellent Conſtitution. When the vigorous Support which you gave me during the War, I have been enabled, under the Divine Providence, to reſtore to my people the Bleſſings of Peace, you continued to exert yourſelves, with equal Alacrity and Steadineſs, in purſuing every Meaſure that could contribute to the Maintenance of the Public Safety and Tranquility; which you well underſtood could no otherwiſe be preſerved, than by eſtabliſhing, on a reſpectable Foundation, the Strength, the Credit, and the Commerce of the Nation. The large Supplies you have from Time to Time granted, and the wiſe Regulations you have made for theſe important purpoſes, will, I am perſuaded, be found to have been productive of the moſt beneficial Conſequences.

"In the approaching Election of Repreſentatives, I doubt not but my People will give me freſh proofs of their Attachment to the true Intereſt of their Country; which I ſhall ever receive as the moſt acceptable Mark of their Affection to me. The Welfare of all my Subjects is the firſt Object.—Nothing therefore has ever given me more real concern, than to ſee any of them, in any Part of my Dominions, attempting to looſen thoſe Bonds of Conſtitutional Subordination, ſo eſſential to the Welfare of the whole. But it is with much ſatisfaction that I now ſee them returning to a more juſt Senſe of what their own Intereſt, no leſs than their Duty, indiſpenſibly requires of them; and their giving me the Proſpect of continuing to reign over an happy, becauſe an united People."

The election for Members for this city is appointed to come on next Wedneſday at Guildhall.

The Lords of the Treaſury have appointed Lancelot Grave-Berry, Eſq; Collector of the Cuſtoms of the port of Beaufort in North-Carolina.

'Tis conjectured, that the cauſe of the extraordinary procedure, of the city of Paris being ſurrounded by 40,000 men, is owing to ſome great treaſonable crime like that of Damiens.

Yeſterday many gentlemen at Lloy'ds, & other coffe-houſes near the Royal Exchange offered to give five, ten, and at laſt fifteen guineas, to as many as would accept of it, to have 100 guineas in return if John Wilkes, Eſq; ſhould be choſen Member of Parliament to repreſent this city; for which it's ſaid he intends to declare himſelf a candidate, having got a pardon.

We are told from Skipton, that laſt Monday ſen'night a mob from Kildwick, Bradley Sutton, &c. conſiſting of upwards of 400 men, aſſembled in the neighbourhood of Siſden, where they behaved very irregularly, breaking windows, and treating many of the Inhabitants in a ſhameful manner, ſparing neither age nor ſex.

Feb. 19. They write from Rome, that the King of the Sicilies, as heir of the Houſe of Farneſe, has laid claim to the Church & Convent of Jeſus, occupied by the Jeſuits in that City. The palace, with the church belonging to it, is one of the moſt ſuperb buildings in Rome, and is always the reſidence of the General of the Order.

Letters from Leghorn, dated Jan. 23, ſay, "A Colonel in the ſervice of France, hath lately ſet out from Antibes to Baſtia, in order to have a conferrence with General Paoli at Carte, on affairs of importance.—Almoſt every action of that great General affords a proof of his wiſdom or benevolence the crew of a Genoeſe ſhip, laden with corn, which was wrecked on the coaſt of San Fiorenzo, have been received on ſhore & treat with the utmoſt humanity."

Letters from Conſtance ſay, that an Architect of that City has invented a machine for the conſtruction of bridges & cauſeways, by which ſixteen men can do as much as two hundred. The Court of Germany, having cauſed trial of it to be made on the Danube, and being ſatisfied with its ſucceſs, have rewarded the Inventor with 20,000 florins, & a medal of gold.

Feb. 20. We hear that his royal Highneſs the Duke of Glouceſter will ſhortly be appointed Governor General of the Iſle of Man, & all the dependencies thereunto belonging.

Orders are given for augmenting the Royal regiment of Artillery at Woolwich, to their full compliment of men, on account of ſeveral draughts that are to be made early in the ſpring for foreign garriſons.

A humane member of a great aſſembly, we hear, intends bringing in a bill to prohibit under ſevere penalties all brutal diverſions, ſuch as cock-fighting, bull-bating, &c. &c. for the future.

Several proſecutions, we hear, are depending in the courts againſt foreign Agents for inveigling our Artificers out of the kingdom,

A bet of 1,000 guineas was actually made this week, that there would be, at leaſt 50 Nabobs (as the gentlemen who have made their fortunes in the Eaſt Indies, are now pleaſantly and perhaps not unemphatically, called) elected and admitted members of the next enſuing parliament.

Feb. 4 The froſt was ſo ſevere from the beginning of laſt month, that travellers paſſed over the Rhine both on foot and horſeback, and notwithſtanding a thaw of three weeks that river is not yet open: Though the ice was broke 4 different times, it faſtened again, and by the rapidity of the current had in ſome places formed heaps 30 or 40 feet high, ſo that the inhabitans are apprehenſive of great inundations. At Keyſerworth and Duſſeldorp the waters have riſen ſeveral feet, the river being ſtill faſt from the former place to Arnheim.

It is given out here as a matter of fact, that the Marquis de Brunoy, ſon of M. de Montmartel, has remitted 100 000 livres to the Intendant of Montauban, to be diſtributed among the poor in his generality —— So generous an action cannot be made too public.

March 8. Yeſterday John Wilkes, Eſq; was admitted to the freedom of this city, in the Muſicians company, in order to his being one of the candidates for the city of London, at the enſuing general election.

A correſpondent writes; "The conditions of Mr. W—'s pardon mentioned in the daily papers, are not true; for no propoſals were made, or reſtraints laid on him, farther than a ſtrict compliance with his own voluntary promiſes." Our correſpondent adds, "Tho' Mr. W—— may have been too incautious in ſome of his writings, I firmly believe, that ſuch incaution aroſe meerly from a zeal for the honour and ſervice of his country; & that few in this kingdom poſſeſs a larger ſhare of real genuine patriotiſm than Mr W——s."

The election for the city of Oxford comes on next Thurſday.

The conteſt is ſo very ſtrong and violent in the boroughs of Lancaſter and Northampton, the city of Carliſle, and the county of Cumberland, that it is thought even the loſing candidates will ſtand at not leſs than 18.000l. each.

So ſmall a progreſs has bribery and corruption made in this virtuous and diſintereſted age, that we have it affirmed to us, as a notorious fact that in a corporation not quite an hundred miles from Northampton the purchaſe of a vote, has not quite ariſen to 100 pounds.

'Tis ſaid that a Diſſenting Clergyman of great eminence, intends conforming ſpeedily to the eſtabliſhed church of the kingdom.

Extract of a letter from Stockholm, Feb 12.

"Bankruptcies become daily more frequent in this kingdom. There has juſt happened ſuch an one as we never before had an example of, viz. that of an entire city (Nicarleby in Finland) the magiſtrates of which, and all the inhabitants excepting a ſingular merchant named Regratier, have declared themſelves inſolvent to the Parliament of Abo. Three-fourths of the inhabitants of the town of Vaſa are alſo reduced to the ſame extremity."

'Tis ſaid a noble Lord at the head of a certain military board in a neighbouring nation, will ſhortly be requeſted to reſign.

By a nice calculation made, not leſs that 15 000 l. a day is ſpent, for upwards of 30 days together on account of the general Elections of Gr. Britain.

We are informed that ſome very intereſting advices have juſt been received from N. America.

We hear that 200l. was lately given at a certain borough in the weſt, for twelve pair of breeches, and that 150 guineas were diſdainfully refuſed for a groaning cheeſe.

The gentlemen who have given one guinea, for 100. in caſe Mr. Wilkes is returned for the city of London, have now inſured themſelves at 25 guineas from paying that ſum, ſo great is the expectation of his ſucceeding; and we hear a reſpectable Al——n of the city intends to ſupport his intereſt.

The bets run high at the weſt end of the town, that Mr. Wilkes be returned one of the members for the city of London.

It is ſaid the letter to a great perſonage was preſented by the D. of N. and a permiſſion of return was granted upon condition that there is no perſonal appearance at C—t.

We are informed that many hundred livery men have determined to give John Wilkes their ſingle votes, as the only effectual means of ſerving him.

'Tis ſaid that a great Perſonage is again pregnant.

The Addreſs of John Wilkes Eſq. to the Guild of Berwick, April 16. 1754.

Gentlemen.

I Beg your leave to offer myſelf a candidate to repreſent you in parliament; I came here with the utmoſt pleaſure, to make you a tender of my ſervices, from the aſſurances I had received of your ſteady attachment to the cauſe of liberty. I early embark'd in the ſame generous cauſe, and have always had it near my heart. I am thoroughly ſenſible of the excellence of the conſtitution of this happy country, and my utmoſt efforts ſhall be exerted for the preſervation of it. In this, and every other caſe, I hope to be your faithful Repreſentative; & while I am delivering your ſentiments, and diſcharging my duty to my conſtituents I ſhall have the ſatisfaction of a cauſe I have ever valued beyond every thing. If I am ſo happy as to ſucceed I aſſure you, Gentlemen, I ſhall ever be watchful over the intereſts of this nation general, but the good of this corporat ſhall have my particular attention. It ſh always be my favorite ſtudy. My warmeſt endeavors ſhall be employed for you, and I ſhall eſteem myſelf happy in every opportunity of doing you a real ſervice. Gentlemen I come here uncorrupting, and I promiſe you I will never be corrupted. As I never will take a bribe, ſo I never will offer one. I ſhould think myſelf totally unworthy of the great and important truſt I am now ſoliciting if I ſought to obtain it by the violation of the laws of my country, I hold them ſacred; and I think the happineſs and ſecurity of every man, depends on the obſervation of them. Gentlemen, I have no private views. My ſole ambition is to ſerve my country, and to contribute to the preſervation of the invaluable privileges this nation enjoys, beyond any in the world. I ſhall act ſteadily on theſe principles, and therefore I hope for the honour of your protection and encouragement, and ſhall endeavour to convince you of my ſincereſt regards and warmeſt wiſhes."

We are informed, that the new Parliament will meet early in the month of May next, for the diſpatch of buſineſs.

In your laſt you mentioned the much lamented death of the Rev. Mr. Raynolds——ſome account of that excellent man, will be expected in your next, pleaſe therefore to inſert the following.

THE REV. MR. PETER RAYNOLDS, paſtor of the church of Chriſt in Enfield, was born at Briſtol, November, 1700, ſon of Capt Peter and Mrs. Mary Raynolds. Being deſigned for public uſefulneſs, in ſome learned profeſſion, was put to ſchool early, was admitted into Harvard college in 1716. He ſo conducted, through the courſe of his academical education, as that he commanded the love of his cotemporaries, the approbation of his inſtructors, and with an unblemiſhed character, and the reputation of a good ſcholar, received the honors of that ſeminary, firſt in 1720, his ſecond degree, 1723 ——— For ſome time after his graduation, he vigorouſly purſued his ſtudies at college—in this period he applied himſelf more eſpecially to the ſtudy of divinity, and to good purpoſe. And though he had good accompliſhments, in all reſpects, for the ſacred work of the miniſtry, yet ſo great was his diffidence in himſelf, and ſo awfully important did the work appear, that it was with difficulty he was perſwaded to engage in it. But in what particular part of the Lord's vineyard, was it deſigned that he ſhould exhibit one of the faireſt characters that has been ſeen, perhaps in the preſent age? Why, the event ſhews, it was at Enfield. The church and people at Enfield, gave him a unanimous invitation to ſettle with them in the work of the goſpel miniſtry. After due deliberation, and good advice, he conſented, and was regularly ſet apart to the ſacred work, in that place, 1725. This buſineſs, great and ſolemn as it is, was his proper element, his delight. In this was he willing to ſpend, and be ſpent. And in his accompliſhments for it, he was not a little diſtinguiſhed. He had a good natural genius cultivated by a moſt intenſe application, even to his dying day—gave the higheſt evidence of a ſupreme love for his great Maſter, delight in his work, a moſt ſincere love to precious ſouls, eſpecially of his own charge, and was indefatigable in his labours, for their eternal good; "ſpeaking not theirs, but them." In his more private adminiſtrations, it may be received as an undoubted fact, that he was judicious, painful, compaſſionate and pertinent; in the pulpit, rational, grave, ſolemnly ſtriking, and pathetic. He had always "beaten oil for the ſanctuary." As he had a great affection for the doctrines of grace, ſo he took a particular pleaſure in opening and confirming them, in a method well calculated to mend the heart, reform and regulate the practice of men—Had an uncommon dexterity at accommodantig his diſcourſes to ſpecial occurrences in providence, and by the beſt judges, is ſaid to have been an excellent preacher. And on all occaſions, common and ſpecial, had, in an eminent degree, the gift of prayer. He would often pour out his ſoul to God, in that holy exerciſe, with ſuch pertenency, and ardor of affection, as ſenſibly touched his audience, and had a tendency to make them partake of the ſame ſpirit. In fine, as a chriſtian miniſter, he has left an unblemiſhed character, for he both taught and practiſed the pure doctrines of Chriſt. Among the gentlemen of his profeſſion, eſpecially in his neareſt connections, he was a father and brother indeed, a ſure and able friend. Among all that knew him, he was remarkable for his meekneſs and humility, charity, benevolence and affability—greatly given to hoſpitality. Strangers were ſoon charmed with his courteous deportment, and the more they knew him, the more reaſon they had to love him. In his family he was pleaſant and agreable, and knew how to "command his houſe after him." Madam Raynolds enjoyed in him for above 40 years, one of the moſt tender and affectionate huſbands in the world—the children, a moſt kind, faithful, prayerful, exemplary father. The ſabbath preceding his death, tho' ſomewhat indiſpoſed, yet he performed the uſual ſervices of the day, and adminiſtered the ſacrament—on Tueſday night, the pain in his breaſt, of which he was much indiſpoſed before, increaſing, he was obliged to be helped out of bed, about 12 ——— Symptoms increaſing, and apprehending approaching death, he kneeled down (his uſual poſture in devotion) made a moſt affectionate, conciſe and comprehenſive prayer for himſelf, his dear wife, children and flock. After this, he deſired to retire into his ſtudy, where, it is more than probable, he uſed to have ſweet communion with God, and no doubt, it was a deſire of a repetition of former interviews, that induced him, under diſtreſſing pain, to go up and down a pair of ſtairs. After a little abſence, he returned from his ſtudy, and as he came out of it, the ſweat was obſerved to ſtand in great drops on his face, and kneeling he prayed as before, ſaying much the ſame words; and then, being helped on to the bed, he gathered up his feet, and, without a ſtruggle fell aſleep in Jeſus, about 5 o'clock, on Wedneſday, the 11th of May, in the 68th year of his age, and 43d of his miniſtry. His funeral was attended on Friday following, by a vaſt concourſe of people—— The Rev'd Mr. Stephen Williams of Springfield, preached a ſeaſonable and an affecting diſcourſe, on the ſolemn occaſion, to a learned and crouded audience, from 1 Theſſ iv. 13.

And now, one would be ready to think, ſuch an excellent man, and miniſter, ſhould go through the world, without oppoſition from men; to be ſure, we ſhould not expect that a party ſhould form againſt him, in his own pariſh, be the occaſion of great trouble to him, in his advanced age, and of his ſorrowing for them as he was going out of the world: but it is publickly known (otherwiſe it would not have been mentioned here) that the good gentleman, Mr. Raynolds, for ſeveral years, and eſpecially in the cloſe of life, met with great trials from a ſeparate party, and favourers of it, in his own pariſh. This was a great grief to him—it broke his heart, for he was of a very tender ſpirit, loved his people, and was a great friend to order. Indeed, that there ſhould be a ſeparation from Mr. Raynolds, was juſt matter of aſtoniſhment. "What! ſeparate from Mr. Raynolds, the moſt unexceptionable man in the world! O ſtrange! this cannot be juſtifiable," was the ſay of the moſt conſiderate far and near—yet this awful affair, and the miſchievous conſequences of it, were ſo prevalent, as that it was found neceſſary to call an able council. Accordingly a council was called, and convened at Enfield, but a few days before Mr. Raynold's death.—— Upon a fair hearing, and mature deliberation, on all matters, it appeared to the whole council, that they who had ſeparated, were utterly inexcuſeable, in ſo doing—that Mr. Raynolds was worthy of no blame, nor could he, in any one inſtance, be juſtly blamed. And there is full authority to ſay this. The prudence and integrity with which Mr. Raynolds conducted, both before, and thro' this whole affair, was truly commendable. And how worthy of remark is it, that ſo reſpectable a council ſhould be called, to hold up, in public view, the innocency and integrity of that good man, to wipe away all ſuſpicion of fault that might otherwiſe have happened juſt before he died. It ſeems, God would not let his ſervant die, till he had "brought forth his righteouſneſs as the light," and his innocency as the noon day. This being done, God ſoon diſmiſſed him from his troubles, to his reward. He is now "where the weary are at reſt."—— May much of that excellent ſpirit ſo conſpicuous in him, deſcend and reſt upon all of his profeſſion, unto the end of the world.—— On a review of the character now given of Mr. Raynolds, will not every wiſe, conſiderate perſon ſay, "O! that I might die the death of the righteous, and that my laſt end might be like his."——

Laſt Lord's Day Evening between 10 & 11 o'clock, a ſmall Shock of an Earthquake was felt in this and ſome of the neighbouring Towns, attended with a rumbling Noiſe.

Saturday came to Town from Virginia, Charles Stuart, Eſq; Caſhier and Pay maſter of his Majeſty's Revenues and Cuſtoms in America.

By Capt. Brown in a ſhort paſſage from the Weſt-Indies, we are informed, that the Lieutenant Governor of Daminico, Mr. Dewar the Collector, and a number of other gentleman, going on board a man of war lying off in the road, a plank of the boat in which they were, ſtarted, on which ſhe ſunk, and two of the gentlemen were immediately drowned. The Lieutenant-governor, who could not ſwim, got on the back of one of the ſailors, who kept him above water for ſome time, but he being ſoon exhauſted, told the Lieutenant governor, that he muſt quit his hold or they ſhould both go down together. The Governor begged to be ſupported a little longer, but the ſailor finding himſelf ſinking, ſhook him off, and he was inſtantly drowned. The people on board the man of war having ſeen the boat ſink, immediately ſent their's to relieve them, which took up Mr. Dewar and the others.

We hear from Deerfield, that on Thurſday the 12th Inſt the houſe of one ——— Arms of that place, took fire from a Joiner's Shop that ſtood near it, and was entirely conſumed——— but what is moſt affecting, the Wife of ſaid Arms periſhed in the Flames.

The next Day, a terrible Fire broke out in Norfolk, and the wind being high, it ſpread in the Woods and Fences, and burnt all before it, for Five Miles in Length, about one and half in breadth——— One Houſe, uninhabited, was burnt to the Ground, but, by the activity of the Inhabitants, no other Houſe was burnt, although the Meeting Houſe, together with ſeveral other Houſes took Fire ſeveral times. It is ſaid the Roads in that Town are all ſhut up, 'till Fences can be made round the Fields, which were laid open by the above Fire.

Mr. Printer. Cornwall, May 4, 1768.

By inſerting the following you may give the curious an opportunity to ſearch after the cauſe, and give a ſolution of this phænomenon.

THIS morning, at ſun half an hour high, was ſeen by Elijah Steele, and ſundry others (the air being ſmoaky or hazy) a dark ſpot in the ſun, about the bigneſs of half a dollar, about one third part from the upper ſide of the ſun; which was obſerved till after 9 o'clock A. M. by the help of ſmoak'd glaſſes, as the air grew more clear, and the ſun got up higher; in which time it had moved about half way from whence it was firſt obſerved, towards the top of the ſun.

An Account of a baſe and barbarous Stratagem practiſed by a Mooriſh Prince.

HISTORY records a very ſingular and cruel ſcheme of politics projected and executed by Mahomet Ahmebi, king of Fez, a prince not more remarkable for his ambition than his refined craft and Hypocriſy. He had a long war to maintain againſt ſome neighbouring nations who refuſed to ſubmit to his tyranny. He gained over them ſeveral victories, but having afterwards loſt a battle, wherein he had expoſed his troops with a blind fury they were ſo diſpirited that they refuſed to go againſt the enemy. To inſpire them with courage, he practiſed the following ſtratagem.

Having aſſembled ſecretly a certain number of officers who were beſt affected to him, he propoſed to them conſiderable rewards if they would be ſhut up for ſome hours in graves, as if they had been killed in battle: that he would leave them a ſufficient vent for breathing, and that when, in conſequence of a ſuperſtitious deſign cunningly to ſpread thro' the army, they ſhould happen to be interrogated, they were to anſwer, that they had found what their king had promiſed them; that they enjoyed the rewards of martyrdom, and that thoſe who ſhould imitate them by fighting valiantly, and ſhould die in that war, would enjoy the ſame felicity. The thing was executed as he had propoſed: He laid his moſt faithful ſervants among the dead, covered them with earth and left them a ſmall vent for drawing breath.—he afterwards entered the camp and aſſembling the principle chiefs about midnight; 'You are (ſaid he) the ſervants of God, the defenders of the faith, and the protectors of truth. Prepare to exterminate your enemies, who are likewiſe the enemies of the moſt high, and depend upon it you will never find ſo ſure an opportunity of pleaſing in his ſight. But, as there may be daſtards and ſtupid wretches among you who do not believe my words, I am willing to convince them by the ſight of a great prodigy.

Go to the field of buttle, aſk of your brethren who have been killed this day; they will aſſure you that they enjoy the moſt perfect happineſs, for having loſt their lives in this war,' He then led them to the field of battle, where he cried out with all his might 'O aſſembly of faithful martyrs, make known to us how many wonders you have ſeen of the moſt high God?' They anſwered, 'We have received from the Almighty infinite rewards which the living can have no idea of. The chiefs, ſurpriſed at this anſwer ran to publiſh it in the army; and revived a courage in the hearts of the ſoildiery. Whilſt this was tranſacted in the camp, the king feigning an extaſy, cauſed by this miracle, remained near the graves where his buried ſervants waited for their deliverance; but he ſtopped up the holes thro' which they breathed, and ſent them to receive in the other world, by this barbarous ſtratagem the reward they had made a declaration of to others.

NEWPORT, May 9.

Laſt Tueſday Night between 11 and 12 o'Clock, as Mr. Henry Sparker, Shot Maker, of this Town and Mr. Philip Dexter of Providence, being in Company with ſome of the People belonging to his Majeſty's Sloop Senegal, now in this Harbour, commanded by Capt. Cookſon; a Difference happened between them, which ended in a very tragical Manner: Sparker being run almoſt thro' the Body, with a ſword, as 'tis ſuppoſed; by which he died in about an Hour after and Dexter received a ſtab in his right Side, and had his head very much cut and mangled, by which his Life is ſtill in Danger. The Senegal's Men concerned in this unhappy Affair are mr Robert Young, Mate, Mr Charles John Marſhall, Midſhip man; who are now confined in his Mjeſty's Jail in this Town, and are to have their Trial on the firſt Monday in June next. As yet it ſeems to be a little uncertain who were the firſt Agreſſors in this melancholly Event, the Particulars muſt therefore be deferred till after the Trial.

BOSTON, May 9.

Laſt Week arrived Capt. Sigourney in a Brig from the mount, who, about 20 Days before, had the misfortune, in a Gale of Wind, to loſe his Rudder; but by ſteering with a Coil of their Cable they with difficulty got into Port: The Veſſel made ſo much Water by the drawing of the Bolts in the ſtern that they were obliged to ſtave to pieces about 20 Hogſheads of Molaſſes, in order to come at ſome of the Leaks to ſtop them.

Capt. John Doubleday, alſo in a Brig from the Mount, on Friday morning the 15th ult. in thick Weather, ran aſhore on the Racks near Scituate, but luckily got off again, but received ſo much Damage in her Bottom that they could ſcarcely keep her above water till they got into Plymouth Harbour; from whence, after taking out part of her Cargo, ſhe came up to town laſt Week.

Raynham, April 28 1768. On the 26th Inſt. a young Girl, about three years and 6 months old, daughter to Mr. Abiel Smith, in going to Mr. Codding's ſchool, at this place, took a wrong path and was loſt; in the evening the child was miſs'd and the neighbourhood alarmed, who made diligent ſearch for it the whole night, but to no purpoſe; the next day the number of people encreaſed to upwards of an hundred, who rambled every way with ſorrowful countenances, condoling the caſe of the bereaved parents, whoſe hearts were almoſt broke with grief, having not ſeen or heard of their child for the ſpace of 23 hours: but happily at a quarter after nine o'clock, the child was found in a ſwampy place, with her mouth juſt above the water where 'tis judged ſhe had lain 20 hours, and ſcarcely any life diſcernable; a phyſician, Dr. Giles Church, was immediately ſent for, who afforded ſuch aſſiſtance, that through the divine goodneſs ſhe revived ſo as to ſpeak in 3 hours & is now in a hopeful way of recovery.

COMPLAINANT. [No. 13]

If I ſhould confidently write,
This ink is black, this paper white,
They'd contradict it, and perplex one,
With motion, light, and its reflection,
And ſolve the apparent falſhood by
The curious ſtructure of the eye.

IN the ſixth number of theſe my lucubrations you will find the character of a noted [illegible] physician, [illegible]. Now this ſome Ergoſus is ſo learned, as to be able to prove to demonſtration, that all things evident to common ſenſe, are the falſeſt things in the world. I heard him the other day aſſert "that a perſon who is entirely deaf, or has no ears can hear in ſome conſiderable proportion to thoſe that have ears." Nay, he went ſo far as to declare "that a man without ears could hear the report of a pocket-piſtol juſt as well as a man of the acuteſt hearing could hear a good pop-gun at the ſame diſtance."—I thought this was ſtrange—but as he always did prove what he aſſerted. So eſpecially in this caſe he gave us demonſtration.

Now I deſire all that have no taſte for carrying on a ſeige by ridicule, which can't be done by a regular attack, to ſkip the reſt of this paper and turn to the advertiſements, which perhaps will afford them as much entertainment, as this incomprehenſible piece of nonſenſe will diſguſt.

The demonſtration was made out as clear to the propoſition advanced, as moſt of our great reaſoners that have ſtarted new notions could deſire—of which the following is an abſtract. But I cannot ſay he will not publiſh a large volume upon the ſubject yet.

"1. Sound is always perceived in propor"tion to the loudneſs of the noiſe, the
"diſtance of the perſon hearing from the "ſounding body, and his ability to hear.

2. "Sound is always diminiſhed by an "inverſe ratio of the ſame kind."—well ſaid Mr. Ergroſus! a good bottom—let us ſee what you will make of it.——"A ſound "quantity 40 will be heard by a man ca- "pable of hearing 6, juſt as far again as it "will by a man capable of hearing 3; ſup- "poſe therefore the quantity of the ſound "was 80 the man of 3 would hear it as plain "as the man of 6 did 40;" well, ſir, go on "Now 'tis certain that this proportion holds "good among all from the moſt accute hear- "ers down to thoſe that cannot hear at all." Beſure "he that can hear 3 is juſt half way "between him that can hear 6 & him that "has no ears. Now if a cannon can be heard "40 by him that hears 6, it can be heard "30 by him that hears 3 in the ſame ſpot; "of conſequence it follows that he who has "no ears if he ſtood in the ſame ſpot would "hear it 6 3-4ths, ſo that it certainly ap- "pears that a man that cannot hear at all "can hear a little."—He then calculated exactly the proportion between a pop gun & a pocket piſtol, ſo as to convince us all——I uſed always to think that heavy bodies ſunk down, becauſe they were heavy, but he plainly proves that "mercury riſes right up per- "pendicular becauſe it is ſo heavy." In ſhort, we are all very ignorant of the advantages of a good knack of calculating, & ſyllogiſing upon a platform that we may lay, juſt as we pleaſe——Dean Swift has given us a moſt entertaining account of ſome efforts in determining "whether a [illegible] of all a man's black and white horſes included the pyed horſes." The queſtion was handled with a great deal of learning and ſubtilty on both ſides, on one ſide, it was affirm'd that "pyed horſes included both black and white, for thoſe were the two colours ſpecified &c." On the other it was with much learning proved "that a pyed horſe is not a black horſe, neither is a pyed horſe a white horſe, & that conſequently a pyed horſe is neither black nor white &c." It would have proved a puzzling caſe had even Ergoſus himſelf been judge, had not a demurer aroſe from information that the horſes were all mares; which diſtinction, I imagine, was near as difficult in way of deciſion as that of their colours—It was a matter of ſome conſequence to decide thoſe puzzling queſtions "whether pyed horſes were black and white? and whether a horſe was muſt of a mare, or a mare of a horſe?——I ſay, this was of conſequence as property depended upon it, but what good will it do to prove that an oak log can hear juſt a five hundredth part as well as I can?——but this is not the worſt of it. I ſhould not care if he demonſtrated that "ice was given us on purpoſe to make candlewicks of." ſuppoſe people did ſo far act upon it as to waſte their tallow, and freeze their fingers. He has got into a way of plainly demonſtrating ſome things, that make it look as if the apoſtles, and eſpecially Paul whom we all look upon a good ſcholar, had never ſufficiently looked into the matters they have communicatad to us—and Moſes muſt have been dilatory in purſuing a courſe of Egyptian learning, if he could not have ſeen a little more into ſome things when he was upon the ſpot, than this gentleman can who is far diſtant.—There are ſome certain things that have either been taken for granted long before, or elſe are advanced more lately, frequently taken for the ground to build upon without the leaſt heſitation; and the Superſtructure mounts as, if like Babel, it was deſigned up to heaven; but always ends like Babel, in the confuſion of common language.

"He knew the ſeat of Paradiſe,
Could tell in what degree it lies;
And, as he was diſpos'd cou'd prove it,
Below the moon or elſe above it.
Whether the ſerpent at the fall,
Had cloven feet, or none at all."

LOGICK, is the art of uſing reaſon well; but ſome have the art of confounding reaſon with her own weapons: I think this is ſomething ſimilar to that "traitrous practice, of taking up arms againſt the king by virtue of his own authority." Since I have got a little upon the Hudibraſtick order I will conclude with ſaying,

"Shu'd you the poker want and take it,
Glowing as red as fire can make it,
And burn your finger or your Coat,
They'd falſely tell you 'tis not hot;
The fire they ſay has in't 'tis true,
The power of cauſing pain in you;
But no more heat's in fire that heats you
Than there is pain i' the ſtick that beats you."

LIST of HORSES entered at GUILDHALL, to run for the Four CITY PLATES.

1. JOHN BULL's horſe, HEART OF OAK. He was got by Juniper out of Tipſey's dam. This is a very fine horſe, and well known on the turf; he has won one or two plates, but is very ſhy of a poſt; and notwithſtanding, the jockies have done all they could, to break him of this trick, they have never been able to ſucceed. Odds four to one on him againſt the field. (Sir Robert Ladbroke. *)

2. Mr. GRENVILLE's young horſe STAMP. This horſe came in ſecond laſt year; but has ſince run againſt a Poſt, and it is believed is ſo much off his ſpeed by this accident, that if he ſaves his diſtance it will be as much as he will be able to do. (Mr. Harley, Lord Mayor. *)

3. Lord ROCKINGHAM's MERCATOR. This horſe, tho' aged is a maiden one, having never ſtarted for a plate; he bears training exceeding well, and comes through his excercise much to the ſatisfaction of thoſe who have ſeen him. He was got by the famous horſe Commerce, well known for having won a great number of plates, but by unſkilful Jockes is now ſcarce able to ſtand on his legs. This horſe is in high favour with the gentleman of the turf; odds on him two to one againſt Prerogative, three to one againſt Pickle, five to one againſt Shaver, and even money that he wins. (Mr. Trecothick.)

4. Lord CHATHAM's brown horſe PREROGATIVE, got by a grandſon of Nol's Old Trumpeter, his dam by Changeling, he was bred in Jamaica, where he was uſed as a ſtallion to the African fillies; upon his arrival here he was taken into training; has won a plate or two, but not without much jockeyſhip; he is naturally very vicious and much addicted to the reſt; but his Lordſhip's rough riders, by exerciſe and ſweating, have brought him to be gentle and tractable; he has been lately uſed as a Tryal Horſe, and ſo hard worked, that he is much hurt in his wind. It is imagined he will be beat eaſy, after which he will be of no uſe but as a Teazer. Odds ſix to one againſt his winning. (Alderman Beckford *)

5. Lord BUTE's grey horſe PICKLE, got by Girkin, his dam by Muſhroom; this horſe won with great difficulty one of the laſt plates, and has ſince been ſtraying about in the King's Foreſts, and nobody thought him worth catching; at laſt one of his Lordſhips' grooms picked him up, and he has been rid by the ſervants ever ſince, makes an excellent portmanteau horſe, and is ſo gentle that a child may ride him even in the moſt dirty roads; he is ſtill in ſome favour among the ſtable boys, between whom ſeveral betts of ſtrong beer are depending, but the gentlemen of the turf offer ſix to one againſt his winning, but nobody thinks proper to take it. (Sir Richard Glyn *)

6. Lord HOLLAND's old Horſe SHAVER, got by Craft. This horſe won a plate at Ludgarſhall, but his Lordſhip having found ways and means to purchaſe him, and his grooms having rode him very hard, it is believed he is foundered, and the odds are five to one that he will be diſtanced, (Deputy Patterſon.)

It is ſaid the famous horſe LIBERTY, formerly belonging to Lord Chatham who has ſince ſold him, will enter at the poſt; if ſo, and he has a ſkilful rider, 'tis imagined he will come in firſt, but he is very apt to run out of courſe, and is ſo headſtrong, that it is almoſt impoſſible to guide him, (John Wilkes, Eſq.)

* N. B. Sir Robert Ladbroke, Sir Richard Glyn, and Alderman Beckford, have each repreſented the City of London in two Parliaments, and the Hon. Mr. Harley, (the preſent Lord Mayor, and Brother to the Earl of Oxford) in the laſt.

Mr. WILKES's ADDRESS.

To the Worthy Liverymen of the City of LONDON.

Gentlemen, and Fellow Citizens,

IN Deference to the opinion of ſome very reſpectable friends, I preſume to offer myſelf a candidate for my native city of London, at the enſuing general Election. The approbation you have been pleaſed, on ſeveral occaſions, to expreſs of my conduct, induced me to hope that the addreſs I have now the honour of making to you will not be unfavourably received.

The chief merit with you, gentlemen, I know to be a ſacred love of liberty, and of thoſe generous principles, which at firſt gave, and have ever ſince ſecured to this nation, the great charter of freedom. I will yield to none of my countrymen in this noble zeal, which have always characterized Engliſhmen. I may appeal to my whole Conduct, both in and out of Parliament, for the Demonſtration that ſuch Principles are deeply rooted in my Heart, and that I have ſteadily purſued the Intereſts of my Country, without regard to the powerful Enemies I created, or the manifeſt Dangers in which I have fulfilled the Duties of a good Subject.

The two important Queſtions of Public Liberty, reſpecting General Warrants and the Seizure of Papers, may perhaps place me among thoſe who have deſerved well of mankind, by an undaunted Firmneſs, Perſeverance and Probity. Theſe are the Virtues, which your Anceſtors never failed to exert in the ſame national Cauſe of Liberty and the World will ſee renewed in their Deſcendants on every great Call of Freedom and our Country.

The nature and Dignity of the Truſt, Gentlemen, which I now ſollicit, ſtrike me very forcibly. I feel the warmeſt zeal for your Intereſts, and Affection for your Service. I am conſcious how unequal my Abilities are, yet Fidelity and Integrity ſhall in ſome Meaſure compenſate that Deficiency, and I will endeavour through Life, to merit the continuance of your Approbation, the moſt precious Reward to which I aſpire. If I am honoured with ſo near a relation to you, it will be my Ambition to be uſeful, to dedicate myſelf to your Service, and to diſcharge with Spirit and Aſſiduity, the various and important Duties of the diſtinguiſhed Station in which I may be placed, by the Favour of you, Gentlemen, the Liverymen of London.

I am, with the utmoſt Reſpect,
Gentlemen, your moſt faithful
London And obedient humble Servant,
March 10 1768. JOHN WILKES.

For the GENERAL EVENING POST.

ONCE in ſeven years a famous houſe is (clean,
Until thro' toil freſh company convene,
Another heap of dirt then ſoon appears,
And ſo abides another round of years;
This houſe much cleaner would be always (kept,
If it was order'd oft'ner to be ſwept.
O for the arm of Hercules! thy ſtream,
When ſwell'd unto a mighty torrent, Thame
Should in due ſeaſon thy great ſtrength obey,
And waſh the hated filth into the ſea. T L.

PHILADELPHIA, May 23.

Extract of a Letter from Fort, Pitt, dated May 9.

" I have now the Pleaſure of informing you, that the important Congreſs, which has been held here, with about 12 Hundred Indians (excluſive of Women and Children) is ſatisfactorily concluded. Col, Greghan has been indefatigable; and never diſplayed his great Influence and Addreſs with the Natives, more ſignally and ſucceſsfully than at this Conferrence, as they met him with the ſtrongeſt Prepoſſeſſions againſt us, on account of the repeated and cruel Murders of their Relations, and the audacious Settlement of their Lands at Redſtone Creek, &c. In my Opinion the Province, in no Inſtance, ever incurred an expence more ſeaſonably: as it has effectually, for the preſent compoſed the Minds of the Indians and prevented an impending Rupture with them, if the Boundary is ſettled this ſummer, and they are paid for their Ceſſion to the Crown and the Frontier Inhabitants will not again ſhamefully violate the Laws of Hoſpitality and good Faith with them, (which both Chriſtianity and ſound Policy forbid) I am perſuaded theſe Colonies will long enjoy the ineſtimable Bleſſings of Trade and Tranquility."

NEW-YORK, May 26.

Capt Hunt informs us, that his Majeſty's Sloop of War, the Ferrit, Capt Bickerton, had lately put into that Iſland on her Voyage from Jamaica for London, having on board about 40,000l on Account of the London Merchants; that Captain Bickerton, had been in a bad State of Health but was much recovered, and propoſed to ſail for London in a few Days after Capt. Hunt.

Laſt Wedneſday Noon, the large new Houſe of Mr. Philip Ver Plank, jun of Fiſh-Kills, in Dutcheſs County, was burnt to the Ground, with almoſt all the Furniture therein, occaſioned by the Careleſneſs of a Negro Wench who took up a Coal of Fire between two Chips into one of the upper Chambers to light her Pipe, when throwing the Coal into a Pail of Water, ſhe threw the burning Chips out of the Window; which lighting on the Piazza, and the Wind blowing freſh ſoon ſet in Flames, and which blowing directly upon the Houſe, it was impoſſible to ſave it when it was firſt diſcovered. It is ſaid Mr Verplanck in endeavouring to ſave ſome of the Goods had nearly been ſuffocated, and was with difficulty ſaved. The Loſs is computed to be near £. 3000.

On Monday laſt his Excellency the Governor ſet out attended by ſeveral Gentlemen of the Province, for Albany, in his Way to the Mohawk Country, in order to ſettle ſome Provincial Diſputes which have ſubſiſted for ſome Time with the Indian Nations, and to forward the running out of the general Boundary Line, agreable to his Majeſty's Order to Sir William Johnſon, Bart. for that Purpoſe.

Hartford, May 26, 1768.

ON Thurſday, laſt week, was, by a petition from the ſociety of Turkey-Hills, brought on, largely heard, and tryed, before the hon. General Aſſembly, the long controverted cauſe between ſaid ſociety, and Mr. Nehemiah Strong, their late miniſter; and what is moſt remarkable, is the concord not only of one houſe with another, but of each houſe among themſelves. In the upper board, their petition was negatived, Nemini Contradicente, in the lower board, 'tis ſaid by ſome, there was not a hand lifted up to grant the petition, others ſay, there was one, ſome ſay two, an inſtance that rarely happens.

'Tis to be hoped that ſociety will now be ſo wiſe as to be taught by experience, what they could never believe, by reaſon or precept, that honeſty is the beſt policy; and that their own private opinion, and party intereſt, is not to be the avowed ſtandard of right and wrong, by which controverſies, civil or eccleſiaſtical, are to be determined.

From the LONDON CHRONICLE, Feb. 18.

This Day was publiſhed, The Reaſonableneſs of REPENTANCE, with a Dedication to the Devil, and an Addreſs to the Candidates for Hell. By the Reverend JAMES PENN, Vicar of Claveringcum Langley, Eſſex. Octavo, pp. 28.

MOST if not all the Sermons publiſhed by this Gentleman have ſome ſtriking peculiarity in the Title or Preface, &c. from a motive, we preſume, of attracting the notice of ſuch perſons as would not perhaps otherwiſe be induced to look into writings on religious ſubjects.—In the preſent publication, an intereſting diſcourſe on the Reaſonableneſs of Repentance, is preceeded by a Dedication to the Devil, and an Addreſs to the Candidates for Hell. From the former of theſe, the following detached paſſages are ſelected.

TREMENDOUS SIR,

I Know not of any perſonage, to whom I can, with more propriety, dedicate the following ſermon, than to your Highneſs. You are the original author of wickedneſs; it is preſumed therefore need repentance moſt. This, I confeſs Sir, is not the uſual language of dedicators. I ſhould have followed them in panegyric, and called you an angel of light, did I not ſuſpect, that you would reſent the inſult, and being the father of lies would have eaſily detected the falſhood. Your character, Sir, however, is not ſo infamous and deteſtable, as repreſented: Inaſmuch as you are permitted to be preſent in all companies, and your name and place of abode always make a part of polite converſation. Your greateſt enemies muſt acknowledge that nothing meriting the public notice, can be ſaid or done, completely, without your interpoſition, and confirmation. Even the Formaliſt, who hates you to his ſou[illegible]ll, now and then, when the world ru[illegible], will ſomewhat be free with your name. You was very angry, but without reaſon as the event has ſhewn when you was ſent into the herd of ſwine. You thought your power to have been cruſhed, when the oracles ceaſed, and you was compelled to confeſs the faith. Your highneſs hath loſt nothing. Paganiſm is gone, but three parts and more of Chriſtendom you are ſecure of. I know you read the ſcriptures, wherein you find, that few are to to be ſaved. Why ſhould your Highneſs be troubled? Your influence doth not leſſen, but increaſe.——If your agents had been equally diligent and aſſiduous ſeventeen hundred years ago, it is much to be queſtioned, if we ſhould have heard of the name of a Chriſtian. When any perſon, eminent in his ſtation or profeſſion, is mentioned, whether Phyſician, Lawyer, Stateſman, or Divine, to ſhew the high opinion entertained of his abilities, it is always with this ſenſible addition, "He is h—ll-ſh clever." Whatever is pleaſing to the taſte we expreſs our approbation of with this epithet, "It is d—v—liſh good." but let me not deceive your Highneſs. The phraſe is ſometimes altered. When things or perſons are diſagreeable, the expreſſion uſually is, "They are d-mn--b bad." Where the name of Ch—ſt is once mentioned, yours is a thouſand. His profeſſors ſeldom pronounce it, except at Church, from cuſtom, and a regard to decency; which they have no ſooner left, but your highneſs the D--v--l, is at their tongues end. If the parſon hath preached ſomewhat more than twenty minutes, why the dinner is ſpoiled; then the ſaint, a minute before, becomes a Devil, and his houſe for a time a little Hell. "Rot the parſon for keeping us ſo "long, ſaid nothing to the purpoſe neither. "I will be even with him, for d—mn me "if I go to church this month for it," Yet, dread Sir, theſe religious fools, who perform with reluctance their devotions of an hour, will ſit three or four, with pleaſure, to ſtuff pudding, and guzz'e porter. For a ſingle bleſſing in a year, a million of curſes is to be heard every day.

When your Highneſs's kingdom, and the next world are put into the ſcales, the ballance turns in your favor. No one is diſpoſed to ſacrifice preſent enjoyment for happineſs unſeen. Tell the libertine if he will relinquiſh his pleaſures-- the wealthy his riches-- the ambitious, his titles and honours ----the ſenſualiſt, his good cheer, and they ſhall have Heaven in reverſion. What think you? The offer will be accepted? No; they hang down their heads, laugh in their ſleeves, & walk off; not one of them chooſing to make the purchaſe. Mahomet's paradiſe would ſuit the Chriſtian better. This would fill heaven, and extinguiſh the fire of H-ll, as there would be none to inhabit it. Chriſtianity, if at all conſidered, is poſtponed to the time of ſickneſs and death. Though the parſon is ſeldom ſent for, before the patient is paſt recovery, and ſpeechleſs. Dying Speeches and confeſſion are ſeldom made at any other place than the gallows, which is judged to be the only ſure way to ſalvation. I do aſſure your Highneſs I cannot recollect more than twelve perſons, whom I have viſited when indiſpoſed, for theſe ten years though I have buried numbers. I officiouſly tendered my ſervice to a wealthy gentlemen who in return told me he was not bad enough to want a prieſt, tho' he died the ſame evening. I viſited another perſon, who acquainted me, that he ſhould ſettle his worldly affairs firſt he died the next morning inſolvent. At the requeſt of his wife, I waited upon a third of a deiſtical turn, he civilly informed me, that he ſhould live and die in his own way, and, as I was retiring he uttered prieſtcraft hom: he died a few days after raving mad. Though Chriſt and his apoſtles have aſſured us, that there is a place of torment, your Highneſs need not be alarmed, we are all Thomas's. If you permitted one to come from H-ll, he would not convince us; we muſt ſee the place, and feel the flame, before we will believe, either the one or the other.

Rouſe, rouſe, my countrymen the Farmer view,
Who labors for your dear ſweet babes & you;
He watchful guardian, well defends our cauſe.
Points out our duty, and explains our laws,
He proves himſelf ſufficient for the taſk.
While crafty Grenville's acts he does unmaſk.
He ſees the chains forg'd for your infant race,
If ever theſe deſpotic Acts take place.
They are but preludes, which to ruin tend,

May Heav'n direct you how to find the means,
To keep from dire confuſion's mournful ſcenes-
Should Britannia, by a dreadful blaſt,
And want of faithful Pilots, loſe a maſt;
She may be wreck'd upon a foreign ſhore,
And ne'er in triumph plough the ocean more,
Great God forbid that ſuch her fate ſhould be,
We love Britainia—But we will be free.

MONDAY, JUNE 6, 1768. [NUMB. 180.]

THE Connecticut COURANT.

Containing the freſheſt Advices, Both Foreign and Domeſtick.

By ſeveral Veſſels, lately arrived at Boſton and New-York, there is the following Advices, viz.

LONDON, March 8.

YESTERDAY Lord Aſton read his recantation of the errors of popery, embraced the proteſtant religion and receved the ſacrament at St. James's church.

A certain Lady of Quality, ſaying to her Daughter-in-Law, ſhe hop'd to [illegible] her have a Son, was anſwered—Never [illegible] your Son.

We hear the Rt Hon. Lady, lately divorced, and lately again married, had 20,000l. generouſly added to her fortune by the noble Duke, her Ladyſhip's Brother.

We learn from Geneva, that the celebrated Mr. Voltaire, lies dangerouſly ill at his Seat at Ferney, near that City.

March 15. Mr. Wilkes has not obtained a Pardon, or the Promiſe of a Pardon.

We have been told, and we believe by pretty good Authority, that the affair of Mr. Wilkes ſtands thus:—He intended to ſtand a Candidate for Weſtminiſter, and to have ſtarted at the Poſt which, if he had done, there would have been no doubt of his Election.—This the Friends of the other Candidates knew, and were determined to prevent, if poſſible; accordingly Mr. Wilkes was ſent for by a noble Duke, and they had a conferrence on the Subject, in which it was propoſed, and promiſed, that if Mr. Wilkes would decline ſtanding for Weſtminiſter, & at any future opportunity could get a Borough or City, that the noble duke, with his connections, would uſe all their intereſt with the King for a Pardon. On this Mr. Wilkes declined Weſtminiſter, and told his Friends the Probability he had of a Pardon, which was the Occaſion of its being given out that he had got it, in order to have Weight in the City, for which he was adviſed immediately to declare himſelf a Candidate; in which, if he ſucceeds, or for any other Place, he is then to have the intereſt of the greateſt Families in the Kingdom to intercede for his Pardon.

It is ſaid, that it was debated in Council this week, whether the Capias Utlogatum ſhould be executed on Mr. Wilkes; but carried in the Negative.

March 17. It is poſitively aſſerted, that laſt night, and not before, Mr. Wilkes was complimented with the Royal pardon. L.E.P.

A Subſcription is begun at Lee and Ayton's Banker's, in Lombard-ſtreet, to ſatisfy the Creditors of John Wilkes, Eſq; and qualify him as an independent Member of the houſe of Commons, and it is not doubted but that the Friends of Liberty will immediately favour ſo laudable an undertaking.

We are informed that the ſubſcription for ſatisfying the Demand of Mr. Wilkes's Creditors, fills a Pace; and that the firſt Day, a great Number of Gentlemen ſubſcribed £. 150 each and others £. 100 We hear that a thorough Reconciliation is likely to take Place between Mr. Wilkes and every Branch of his Family.

It is ſaid the Inhabitants of a certain Borough, are ſo eager to have a certain popular Gentleman for their Repreſentative, that they are reſolved not to nominate nor fix upon more than one Candidate 'till they know what will be his Fate in the Capital.

It is currently reported at the Weſt End of the Town, that in caſe Mr. W. does not get a Seat in the B. Senate, an Invitation will be given him to go to Dublin, to offer himſelf a Candidate for that City, along with the famous D. Lucas, who is juſtly ſtiled the Wilkes of Ireland.

We hear the favourite candidates with the Ladies, both at Eaſt and Weſt End of the Town, are the Lord-Mayor and Mr. Wilkes, who, they obſerve, are very popularly coupled together on the Huſtings at Guild Hall.

It is ſaid, that ſhould Mr. Wilkes fail of being elected a member of the Britiſh Senate, he intends to retire to Boſton in New England.

March 19. Mr. Wilkes waited on the Chamberlain at his Houſe on Tueſday Evening, & took up his Freedom; and Yeſterday Morning, about Nine, o'Clock, went to Guildhall, and was in the council-chamber ſome Time; from whence he proceeded, with the reſt of the Candidates, upon the Huſtings, and was received by the People with loud Acclamations.—He made the following Addreſs to the Livery:

"Gentlemen

"I am happy to find myſelf once more amongſt the Friends and Patrons of Liberty. This day makes me glorious Amends for the Rigour of a Long, unmeritted Exile, in which the only Conſolation remaining to me was, that from my Sufferings you had an uninterrupted Enjoyment of your moſt valuable Rights and privileges: Since the Exertion of my firmneſs in an important Moment, no Miniſter has once dared to iſſue a General Warrant againſt your Perſons, or to ſign an Order for the Seizure of your Papers; and I truſt that ſuch Deſpotiſm will never be again exerciſed over the free Subjects of this Country.

"I ſtand here, Gentleman, a private Man, unconnected with the Great, and unſupported by any Party.—I have no ſupport but you; I wiſh no other Support; I can have none more certain none more honourable—If I have the happineſs, Gentlemen, of being returned to Parliament by your Favour, I ſhall be ready to pay the greateſt Deference to the Sentiments of my Conſtituents on every Occaſion, and ſhall dedicate myſelf to their Service, by promoting to the utmoſt of my Abilities, the Trade and Commerce of this great Metropolis, by which alone it can maintain the firſt rank it now enjoys, & I hope, with its Liberties, will ever enjoy."

Saturday in the Afternoon, John Wilkes, Eſq; was taken in an open Chair from Guildhall, preceded by a Band of Muſick, when he got to the End of King's-Street, a Number of the Populace took the Chair upon their Shoulders, and in that Manner conveyed Mr. Wilkes to the King's-Arms Tavern, in Cornhill, amidſt the Acclamations of an incredible Number of Spectators; when ſome of the Mob hoiſted Mr. Wilkes's Sedan Chair on their Shoulders on Saturday, and bore him in that manner to the King's-Arms Tavern in Cornhill; one Fellow hallowed out, as they were lifting him up, By G—d Maſter Wilkes, we'll carry you, whether you carry your Election or not.—It is confidently aſſerted that ſhould Mr. Wilkes fail of being returned a City Member, he intends to put up for Knight of the Shire for the county of Middleſex.

Yeſterday the Maſter of a public Houſe by the Side of the Fleet Market, hired the Hackney-coach, N°. 45, and ſix black Horſes with long Tails, on the top of which was a Man with a Flag and another behind the Coach who held the End of it, with blue Cockades in their Hats; and in this Manner he was carried to Guild hall, accompained in the Coach by a Feuiter in the Fleet-market, and other Friends, and each of them gave ſingle votes for John Wilkes, Eſq, from Guild-hall they proceeded in the ſame Manner over London and Weſtminiſter Bridges, in their Return Home, followed by a number of People huzzaing and crying out, "Wilkes and Liberty!"

White Hall Council Office, March 21.

His Majeſty having cauſed the Cuſtody of the King's Seal to be re-delivered to the Rt. Hon. William Lord Chatham, a Council was this Day held at his Lordſhip's Houſe at Hays, where the Oath of Keeper of the Privy Seal, was adminiſtered to his Lordſhip.

The following is a genuine Copy of a Letter ſent by Mr. Wilkes, to Thomas Nutall, Eſq; and Thomas Francis Eſq; the Solicitor and Deputy Solicitor of the Treaſury,

LONDON, March 23, 1768,

SIR,

"I Take the Liberty to acquaint you that in the Beginning of the enſuing Term I ſhall preſent myſelf to the Court of King's Bench. I pledge my honour, as a Gentleman, that the very firſt Day. [the 17th of April] I will there make my perſonal Appearance. I am, Sir, your moſt humble Servant,

JOHN WILKES.

Yeſterday came on the election for Members for the Borough of Southwark: when after the three Candidates had paraded round the Boroughwick in grand Appearance, they drew up on St. Margaret's Hill; and the Majority appearing to be for Mr. Thrale and Mr. Belchier, a Poll was demanded for Sir Joſeph Mawbey, which began Yeſterday, Afternoon, On the cloſe of the Poll laſt Night the Numbers ſtood as follow :

For Henry Thrale, Eſq;	332
Sir Joſeph Mawbey, Bart.	199
William Belchier, Eſq;	153

March 24. Yeſterday afternoon, at Four o'Clock, ended at Guild hall the Poll for Repreſentatives of this City in Parliament, when the Numbers ſtood thus :

For the Rt. Hon. Tho. Harley	3729
Sir Robert Ladbroke	3678
Mr. Alderman Beckford	3402
Mr. Alderman Treeothick	2957
Sir Richard Glyn	2823
John Patterſon, Eſq;	1769
John Wilkes, Eſq;	1247

The common Cryer proclaimed the Poll ended, and ſummoned a common Hall To-morrow at Nine o'clock for the Sheriffs to make their Declaration.

The Crowd was ſo great Yeſterday at Guildhall, that ſeveral perſons were greatly hurt ; the Iron gates belonging to the Hall were broke to pieces, the Lamps therein are likewiſe demoliſhed, and other Damage done; Some of the Mob mounted the Huſting's, bid defiance to the Conſtables, and ſwore they would chooſe Repreſentatives for themſelves. Mr. Wilkes upon this departed the Hall as ſoon as poſſible, in hopes that the Clamour would then ceaſe ; having firſt addreſſed the Livery as follows ;

“ Gentlemen and Fellow citizens,

“ The Poll being now finiſhed, I return my ſincereſt thanks to thoſe diſintereſted & independent Friends, who have ſo ſteadily and generouſly ſtood forth in my favour : The want of Succeſs, out of our power to command, has not the leaſt abated my Zeal for your ſervice. You cannot be unacquainted with the various circumſtances which have contributed to it. My Friends were of Opinion that I ſhould wait the Diſſolution of the laſt ſlaviſh and venal Parliament, while the other Candidates had been for many Months ſoliciting your Intereſt. Miniſterial Influence, aſſiſted by private Malice, has been exerted in the moſt arbitrary and unconſtitutional Manner, and by means of the baſeſt Chicanery and Oppreſſion.

“ But though diſappointed, I am not in the leaſt diſpirited : on the contrary, I reflect with Pride and gratitude on the many Inſtances of Regard and Affection I have received from the Livery of London.

“ I beg leave to make my beſt acknowledgements to the Sheriffs, who have ſhewn the utmoſt Candour and impatiality during the Election accompanied with a Dignity of Character becoming their Station in this great Metropolis.

“ And now, Gentlemen, permit me to addreſs you as Friends to Liberty, and Freeholders of the County of Middleſex, declaring my intention of appearing a candidate to repreſent you in Parliament ; and ſtill hoping by your Means to have the Honour of being uſeful to you in the Britiſh Senate.

“ Gentlemen of the Livery,

“ I recommend it to you in the ſtrongeſt Manner to exert yourſelves to preſerve the peace and Quiet of this City.”

Several Diſpatches of Importance, were ſent away yeſterday to N. America.

His Serene Highneſs, Prince Charles of Heſſe-Caſſel, is expected here ſome time in May on a viſit to our Court.

According to private Letters from Senegal, there is advice, that the French had offered a powerful Prince on the African Coaſt, a very large Sum of Money to Exclude the Engliſh from trading in any Part of his Dominions.

Briſtol, March 19. We hear that there is ſo great a demand for Proviſions in a certain Borough in the weſt, that 300 Guineas have been given for half an Ox, and it is yet expected to be a more advanced Price.

Yeſterday, at Four o'clock in the afternoon, died the rev. Mr. Stern, author of Triſtam Shandy, ſome volumes of ſermons and the Sentimental Journey.

Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him well, a fellow of infinite jeſt, moſt excellent fancy, &c.

Wit, humour, genius, hadſt thou all agree,
One grain of wiſdom had been worth all three.

Extract of a Letter from London, dated March 17th.

“ Wilkes and Liberty are almoſt extinct, he is quite aground in the poll ; and tho' the ſtreets have rung with liberty for ſome time, the poor champion this very day, at Guild hall, loſt that liberty he boaſted of giving to others, by being arreſted for debt.”

We hear that two Men of War now fitting out for Sea at Portſmouth, are to take on Board a Quantity of Ordnance Stores, and two Companies of Foot, for the Settlement at Placentia in Newfoundland.

Yeſterday a young Man, parading along Fleet-ſtreet, on Horſeback, in Honour of Wilkes and Liberty, was flung from his Horſe near Fetter-lane End, fractured his Skull and died as he was taking to the Hoſpital.

By a Letter from General Paoli, which is handed about at Leghorn, it ſeems as if an Accommodation between the Corſicans and Genoeſe was ſtill at a great diſtance. Five Genoeſe Ships are taken by the Corſicans.

The general Review of the Pruſſian Troops, as ſome of the Regiments come ſeveral hundred Miles, ſeem to portend ſomething ſerious. When that Monarch entered Saxony laſt War, he made a Feint of the ſame kind, and marched immediately.

'Tis ſuppoſed that ſeventy thouſand Fowls upon an Average to ſay nothing of other Articles, are now daily conſumed in the City of London.

Private letters from Liſbon mention that the Porteguеſe miniſtry have at length reſolved to redreſs all the grievances of the Engliſh Merchants, in his moſt Faithful Majeſty's dominions, according to the true ſpirit of the treaties ſubſiſting between the two crowns.

By letters from various parts of Ireland we learn, that it is expected the number of conteſted elections in that kingdom this ſummer will be five times greater than in Great-Britain. notwithſtanding the former returns little more than half the number of members to Parliament that the latter does.

A letter from Oxford informs us that on Tueſday a dreadful riot happened there, on the candidates for canvaſing. The parties met the candidates at their head, and although Mr. Nares and Col Harcourt did every thing in their power to prevent their people from engaging ; and likewiſe Mr. Craven exerciſed all his influence with his party, yet ſo great was the animoſity of the people to each other, that they would not be with held ; a ſmart engagement enſued, when Mr. Craven's party prevailed, and drove their antagoniſts out of the town. We are well aſſured no lives were loſt.

We hear, that a liſt of all thoſe liverymen, ſtiled the ſons of Liberty, who have polled for Mr. Wilkes, will be printed.

Yeſterday as Mr. Wilkes was coming out from Guildhall, after the cloſe of the poll, he was followed by a great number of people, ſome of whom ſtopped the coach, took out the horſes, and dragged the carriage themſelves, with Mr. Wilkes and another gentleman in it, from the manſion houſe to the George and Vulture in Cornhill.

Sunday the following printed paper was ſtuck up on the [illegible] and walls of ſeveral churches of this city, viz. “ The prayers of this congregation are earneſtly deſired for the reſtoration of liberty depending on the election of Mr Wilkes.

We hear, that during the poll at Guildhall on Saturday laſt, a gentleman aſked Mr. Wilkes with a ſneer, ‘ Whether he was not tired with ſtanding ? To which the latter replied ‘ Not in the leaſt, Sir ; I am determined to ſtand to the laſt, and then I ſhall get a ſeat.

It is ſaid, that a noble B—l's friendſhip for a certain popular gentleman is ſo great, that he has declared he would ſpend fifty thouſand pounds ſooner than he ſhould be diſappointed of a ſeat in a certain auguſt aſſembly.

On Saturday next, the trial of Lord B— will come on at Kingſton aſſize.

The following is handed to us as the Letter from John Wilkes to a great Perſonage,

S I R,

“ I Beg that to throw myſelf at your M——'s feet and ſuppplicate the Mercy and Clemency which ſhine with ſuch luſtre among your Princely Virtues

“ Some former Miniſters, whom your M——, in condeſcenſion to the wiſhes of your people thought proper to remove, employed every wicked and deceitful act to oppreſs your ſubjects & to avenge their own perſonal cauſe on him, whom they imagined to be the principal author of bringing to public view, their ignorance, inſufficiency and treachery to your M——y and the Nation,

“ I have been the innocent and unhappy victim of revenge. I was forced by their injuſtice and violence into exile, which I have never ceaſed to conſider, for many years at the moſt cruel oppreſſion ; becauſe I could not longer be under the benign influence of your M——y, in the land of Liberty.

“ With a heart full of zeal for the ſervice of your M——y and my country, I implore, Sire, your clemency. My only hopes of pardon are founded in the great goodneſs & benevolence of your M——y ; and every day of Freedom you may be graciouſly pleaſed to permit me the enjoyment of, in my dear native land, ſhall give proofs of my zeal and attachment to your ſervice. J. WILKES.”

March 28. Saturday, at Kingſton, preciſely at ſeven o'Clock in the morning, the trial of the Right Hon. Lord Baltimore came on, which laſted nineteen hours and a half, when he was acquitted of the charge laid againſt him, to the ſatisfaction in general of the Court.

Yeſterday morning Sir W. B. Proctor, Mr. Cooke, & Mr. Wilkes, the candidates for the county of Middleſex, ſet out for Brentford, when the election came on for Knights of the Shire for that county : The latter was in a coach drawn by ſix long tail horſes, and was attended by an amazing number of people to the place of election, which was held in the middle of Brentford Butts, a temporary booth being erected there for that purpoſe, in which were 15 Poll books one for each diviſion.——The candidates were put up at half an hour paſt 11 o'clock, when the ſhew of hands was almoſt general for Mr. Wilkes, and for Sir Wm. Beauchamp Proctor there was a very great ſhew, but for Mr· Cooke very few ; whereupon the two former were declared to have the Majority ; but a Poll being demanded by the Friends of Mr. Cooke, the ſame began at one o'clock, & it was agreed that the books ſhould be cloſed at eight.

Laſt night at the cloſe of the poll the numbers were,

For Mr. Wilkes, - - -	1213
Sir Wm. Beauchamp Proc.	750
Mr. Cooke. - - - -	646

This Morning the poll was agreed to be open again, & finally to cloſe at two.

The infatuation for Mr. Wilkes was ſo great, that every perſon was obliged to declare for him, & have the blue cockades, before they were admitted to poll.

The mob behaved in a very outrageous manner at Hyde-park Corner, where they pelted Mr. Cooke, ſon of the City Marſhal, and knocked him from his horſe, took off the wheels of one of the carriages, cut the harneſs, and broke the glaſſes to pieces ſeveral other carriages, with the friends of Meſſ. Proctor & Cooke were greatly damaged. The reaſon aſſigned for the proceedings is that a flag was carried before the proceſſion of Mr. Wilkes's antagoniſts, on which was printed ‘ No Blaſphemer.’

A prodigious concourſe of people at Brentford, who would ſuffer no coaches to enter the Town without N°. 45, and Wilkes & Liberty on them.

Several flags were flying with the motto, “ More meet and fewer Cooks.”

At Brentford a number of Men in Mr. Wilke's intereſt, attacked a party in Mr. Cooke's, and a Battle began, when Mr. Wilkes entreated his adherents to be peaceable, and ſuffer the election to go on quietly and fairly ; upon which the fray ended.

It was remarked, that ſeveral of the Livery of London, who lately voted againſt Mr. Wilkes at Guildhall, were the firſt to poll in his favour at Brentford.

We hear that an offer was made to Mr. Wilkes by his friends, that if he choſe any one to be joint candidate with him, they would vote for them jointly, on which Mr. Wilkes replied, that he was infinitely obliged to them, for the offer : but as the public had intereſted itſelf ſo much in his favour, he tho't himſelf ſufficiently honoured if they choſe him, without preſuming to dictate their choice of any one elſe, and very politely declined their offer.

April 2. The following Toaſt is drank every Night in the moſt polite Campanies, “ May the Light of Liberty never be put out by a Scotch Extinguiſher.”

The general toaſt among the friends of the popular patriot now is, May Liberty never want a Wilkes ; and may Wilkes never want Liberty.

Vienna, March 2. The earthquake, which we had here on the 27th of laſt month, was not ſo ſenſibly felt at Preſburg as in this city, but, as it was ſtronger at Newſtadt, about three poſts from hence, in the road to Italy, it is imagined it came to us from that part of the world. There is ſcarce a houſe at Newſtadt that has not ſuffered more or leſs, and the royal military academy there has been ſo much damaged, that it is computed the repairs will amount to 30,000 florins at leaſt. There is no account of any lives having been loſt. It is computed by the aſtronomer of the Jeſuits college here, who was at that inſtant in the obſervatory, that the earthquake laſted with us thirty ſeconds, in which time, he ſays, he felt more than an hundred ſhocks.

NEW-YORK, May 30.

By Letters from Lndon, we learn That the Miniſtry, and the Nabobs have, in general loſt all their Elections throughout England ; that Sir James Lowther alone had expended no leſs than £. 125000, at different Elections, and with great difficulty only carryed two ; that the Night on which Mr. Wilkes was returned for Middleſex, his party ſallied into the city and broke all the windows that were not illuminated on the Occaſion, among them the Manſion Houſe, that the Earls of Bute & Northumberland &c.

HALIFAX, May 19.

We hear that the Government lately received Orders for carrying on the Settlement of the Iſland of St. John, and for eſtabliſhing a civil Government there immediately ; three Towns are to be laid out there by the Names of Charlotte Town, George Town, and Prince Town, and a Number of Noblemen and Gentlemen of conſideration in England are to have Grants of Townſhips in the Iſland. And from the Meaſures now carrying into Execution, there is the greateſt Proſpect of its ſoon becoming a flouriſhing Settlement.

BOSTON, June 2.

“ My Opinion is that the Parliament of Great-Britain, will never indulge her American Subjects in any Privileges and Advantages but ſuch as ariſe from the keen Feelings and diſtreſs of the Inhabitants of this Country, in conſequence of injuring your Trade and Commerce ; and the only method you have left, is to become Frugal, Saving and Induſtrious, leaving off the Articles of Luxury, as your Ability to uſe them declines, and by ſuch prudent Meaſures, which I rejoice to ſee you now purſuing, you muſt in time gain your Wiſhes. The Duty on Glaſs and ſeveral other Articles lately innumerated is confeſſed extremely injudicious and cruel, and a wiſe led Adminiſtration, I believe would think proper to take it off, for fear the Manufactures might flouriſh in America.”

We hear from Warren, in R. Iſland Government, that on Thurſday Morning the 14th Inſt. Mr. Brown of that Place was found dead in his Bed, to which he went the Evening before, ſeemingly in perfect health.

Pleaſe to give the following lines a place in your next paper, and you will very ſenſibly oblige your humble ſervant,

HALLELUJAH.

IT is enough to make the heart of a chriſtian leap for joy, to obſerve the ſpirit of harmony which ſeems to revive in this land and nation. The wonderful effects and advantages of MUSICK are too ſenſibly felt to be diſputed by thoſe who have a reliſh for heavenly anthems, and thoſe divine exerciſes which reſemble the grand employment of angels and glorified ſaints. This is an art which cannot be too much cultivated and improved by thoſe who expect ſhortly to join in a concert of heavenly muſick, and to mingle with the celeſtial choir, who are continually ſurrounding the throne of God with hallelujahs and hyms of praiſe. Pſalmody, or the ſinging of pſalms, when rightly performed, "raiſes noble hints in the mind of the hearer, purifies and exalts the paſſions, gives the thoughts a proper turn, and cheriſhes thoſe divine impulſes in the ſoul, which every one feels that has not ſtifled them by ſenſual and immoderate pleaſures. It fills the mind with great conceptions, ſtrengthens devotion, and advances praiſe into rapture; it lengthens out every act of worſhip, and produces more laſting and parmanent impreſſions in the mind, than thoſe which accompany any tranſient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worſhip."——This ſpirit of harmony and zeal for the improvement of divine muſick in our churches opens a glorious proſpect and is big with important events, and in the opinion of many, will prepare the way of the Lord, and ſerve as a prelude to the latter day glory; but however this may be, it has a kind and ſalutary influence upon the minds of multitudes, eſpecially the younger ſort, who, by its powerful and attractive charms, are flocking round the pools of divine inſtitution, and are found watching at wiſdom's gates, and waiting at the poſts of her doors.——And how charming the ſight! to behold numbers of young people in every part of the country forming into ſocieties, not to riot in luxury, or to wallow in the puddle of ſenſual pleaſures, but in ſpite of all the bewitching proſpects that are found in the paths of vice, invariably fixed to ſeek after and gain the knowledge of this delightful art.——It is to be hoped that all who are tenderly concerned for the honour of divine inſtitutions, eſpecially thoſe who are leaders in the houſe of God will endeavour to promote the cultivation of divine muſick; and inſtead of throwing ſtumbling blocks & diſcouragements in the way of thoſe who are learning the art of pſalmody, lay themſelves out to facilitate and encourage their laudable deſign. I think no perſon in the free exerciſe of the faculty of hearing, unleſs born with an unconquerable averſion to peace and harmony, and like the Salamander, formed to live in the fire, can poſſibly be offended with muſick; at leaſt he muſt be reduced to the wretched condition of an envious man, who is offended with excellence, and hates a man becauſe he approves him one who has no ear for muſick, and cannot perceive any harmony in ſounds, for that reaſon cannot be diſturbed with it: It is true he may have an averſion to ſound in general, and it muſt be the ſound and not the harmony (which is unperceived) that creates the diſguſt. But ſuch as really have an ear for muſick, and yet will venture to declare they are offended with it unleſs they can demonſtrate that perfect ſymmetry and proportion are offenſive, I ſhall beg leave to exclude from my charity, let who will give credit to their teſtimony. They may poſſibly diſlike the muſician, but that they can be offended with the muſick is what I utterly deny.——To conclude, if vocal muſick, or a regular method of ſinging in our worſhipping aſſemblies, was duly encouraged and improved, it would ſuperſede the neceſſity and perhaps prevent a great deal of otherwiſe neceſſary expence for muſical inſtruments in the houſe of God; if the natural organs were duly exerciſed and improved, thoſe which are artificial would be rendered uſeleſs; and it is doubtleſs in a great meaſure owing to the abuſe of vocal muſick, the jarring notes and hedious cries of unſkilful ſingers, that has induced many to be willing to be at the expence, and to earneſtly deſire the benefit and advantage of artificial organs.

DAVID.

N. B. If there is a perſon on earth compounded of ſuch jarring and contradictory principles as to be offended with muſick, his caſe is truly wretched and deſperate; he is truly to be pitied, but cannot be relieved. Every pacific and healing meaſure would ſerve only to enhance his diſtreſs, and a ſtate of perfect peace and harmony would make him raving diſtracted.

COMPLAINANT, [No. 14]

——And men are prone to err;
On common failings none ſhould be ſevere:
But who perſiſts in wrong with haughty pride,
Him all muſt cenſure, many will deride.

MY Nephew Tommy Tawdry, values himſelf upon being a fine young gentlemen; that is, upon dreſſing alamode, and being the firſt in all new faſhions.—Tommy lately made me a viſit, which was agreable enough, eſpecially as I was continually regaled with the odour of his pomatum, being perfumed in the beſt manner that ever I ſmelt any. I had but little opportunity of converſing with him, indeed, as he ſpent near half his time before the looking-glaſs, with his pomatum, ribband and comb; and the reſt of the time he was teaching my girls how to queue their hair——I have been a great looſer by Tommy's viſit, for he left a pair of curling irons, and a perfumed roll with the girls; the conſequence of which is the ſpinning-wheel is much neglected for the ſake of jockeying their heads——but this is all by the by—what I mean particularly to take notice of, is an obſervation Tommy made, when he was at my houſe, upon an old coat of mine——the coat was, in its day, in the height of the Faſhion, a long waiſt, ſhort ſkirts, and ſhort in the whole; being a perfect contraſt to what my nephew then had on.——"Why uncle" ſays he "did you ever wear this coat?" yes, I did, Tommy, and it was a very faſhionable coat in its day. "O ſurfeiting! a man muſt look very ridiculous in ſuch a coat; people had no taſte in that day.

I have recited enough of the converſation for my preſent purpoſe——I was by this led into reflections upon the ſtrange power of cuſtom in determining the decency, and indecency of dreſs——when I was of Tom's age, ſuch a coat as he wears, that is now the pink of the mode, would have been look'd upon a monſter of indecency and uglineſs; and yet the young fop thinks his dreſs the ſtandard of all that is amiable in apparel——The apoſtle Paul ſays, "doth not even NATURE itſelf teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame unto him?—where by the word nature, can ſurely be meant nothing more than that univerſal ſenſe of decency, which was founded upon a long continued cuſtom and uſage——and if we critically examine the matter, we ſhall find moſt of our notions of decency, as to politeneſs of dreſs and deportment, to be grounded wholly on cuſtom——nay ſo ſtrong is its force upon mankind, that it even compels the human mind to view or imagine a turpitude in ſome of the moſt perfect works of nature, and a decency in her greateſt deficiencies——A clean, even ſet of white teeth, exhibits the perfection of nature, as to the uſe and deſign of teeth, and we generally agree in pronouncing ſuch an appearance more beautiful than a mouth that has ſuffered depredations from age, ſcurvey and accidents.——So the juſt proportion of limbs that nature obſerves in the human body, commands general approbation, and is regarded by the moſt of mankind as the perfection of animal beauty.——What can it be then but the amazing power of cuſtom that makes rotten teeth, and diminutive feet ſo very beautiful and engaging in China? the manufactures of that empire ſhew a curious taſte in other things; but travellers bely them, if they are not ſo attached to broken ſtumps as black as ſoot, and little crippled feet, that a woman with a good Dutch foot, and a white ſet of teeth might even live alone all her days, however bright her eye, and roſy her cheek.——If the famous Guy, Earl of Warwick ſhould appear accoutred in the ſame ſplendid martial dreſs, that he wore when he fought the Daniſh champion near the city of Winchester—what a laugh!—I can't help laughing when I fancy to myſelf what a pitiful figure the once glorious hero would make——there is not a taylor's apprentice in the country, but would pronounce his clothes made without decency, and without taſte——and as to his martial habiliments, he would be ridiculed and hooted at, by all the corporals, and ſoldiers in the militia——poor Guy! 'tis well for thee, unleſs thou hadſt changed thy trunkhoſe, and helmet for a ramalie and ſome other modern accoutrements, that thou art under ground.——300 years make a prodigious alteration in human ſyſtems, whether they are of politics, decency, religion or any thing elſe.——My friend Ergoſus intends to demonſtrate this upon ſome aſtronomical principles: when his ſcheme is ripe, I intend to communicate it.——I heard it was indecent and impious, in the opinion of our good forefathers of this land, 120 years ago, to wear the hair below the ears, and as indecent and impious to wear a wig——(☞ this was very impolitic in ſo cold, bleak a climate, and therefore is confirmation of their acting from conſcience.)

What is it but this ſovereign miſtreſs of mankind, that makes it indecent in Turkey, for a woman to ſhew her face; and perfectly decent in France for her to expoſe to view her whole naked boſom in all public company?——could any thing but this, ever reconcile the ſight of ſo many naked ſlaves to the modeſty and delicacy of the Creole ladies?——I complain not of the power & force of cuſtom; for it makes even bodily infirmity, confinement, poverty and other evils that were at firſt almoſt intolerable, in ſome meaſure eaſy—but I complain of perſons ſetting up their taſte, their notions of what is amiable when they ſpring only from cuſtom as the ſtandard of decency. The moſt filthy putryfying entrails of a bear are as polite ornaments among the Hottentots, as gold lace and diamonds are in Europe ſaid Socrates to Alcibiades concerning Xantippe, his ſcolding wife "I have been ſo long accuſtom'd to it, that I regard it no more than if I was to hear the noiſe of a wheel that draws water out of a well."

LONDON, March 26.

We hear that the freedom of the City of London has been preſented to Mr. Wilkes by the joiners Company in a Box of the Heart of true Engliſh Oak, like his own.

It is extremely remarkable, that the Motto of the Worſhipful Joiners in Company, in which Mr Wilkes has lately taken up his Freedom is JOIN LOYALTY and LIBERTY.

If the City of London addreſs'd their Member, on the Part they took in oppoſing General Warrants, ſurely the gentleman who has pluck'd thoſe infamous weeds up by the Roots, at the Expence of Liberty, loſs of fortune, and repeated danger of Life, is intitled to the warmeſt Regard and moſt grateful Returns from his Fellow Citizens.

About one laſt night, on the return of the pollers from Brentford, the mobility grew extremely riotous, ſome perſons who had voted in favour of Mr. Wilkes having put out lights, the mob paraded the whole town from eaſt to weſt, obliging all to illuminate, and breaking the windows of ſuch as did not do it immediately.—The windows of the manſion houſe, in particular, were demoliſhed, together with a large chandelier and ſome pier glaſſes, to the amount of many hundred pounds. They demoliſhed alſo the windows of Lord Bute, Lord Egmont, Sir Samſon Gideon, Sir William Moyne and many other gentlemen and tradeſmen in moſt of the public ſtreets of London and Weſtminiſter. At one of the abovementioned gentleman's houſes the mob were in a great meaſure irritated to it by the imprudence of a ſervant, who fired a piſtol among them. At the Duke of Northumberland's houſe the mob broke a few panes; but his Grace had the addreſs to get rid of them, by ordering lights immediately into his windows and opening the ſhip ale-houſe, which ſoon drew them off to that ſide.

We are informed, that an eminent Ribbon Merchant in the City has ſold near 5000l. Worth of Ribbons within the ſpace of one Week after the Commencement of the preſent General Election.

It is confidently aſſerted, that Mr. Wilkes has ever ſince his Exile enjoyed 1200 Pounds a Year, being a private ſubſcription of a very few Friends, among whom are ſeveral Right Hon. Perſonages of the preſent M——y.

March 31. They write from New York that a plan has lately been propoſed to ſurround the C[illegible] regular Fortifications, which it was c[illegible] would be likewiſe [illegible] dopted by the cities of Boſton and Philadelphia.

An opulent Elector, in a certain Borough in the Weſt, was lately offered 50l a Year and 700 in Money, for his Vote and intereſt, which he nobly refuſed.

Yeſterday his Serene Highneſs the Prince of Monaco, at whoſe palace his late Royal Highneſs the Duke of York died, was introduced to his Majeſty at St. James's, and moſt graciouſly received.

On Tueſday Night the Mob broke the Windows of his grace the Duke of Argyles Houſe in Soho Square, and alſo the Windows of his Son the Marquis of Lorn's Houſe in Argylle Buildings where they did conſiderable damage. Every window belonging to the Rt Hon the Lord Bute's in South-Audley Street were ſo broke, that ſcarce a pane of Glaſs was left whole.

We hear that it has already coſt one Candidate for a Borough Northward, who it is expected, will looſe his Election, at leaſt, 30,000l.

The Codicil of the will of Sir Andrew Chadwick, Knt in favour of M. Wilkes is couched in the following Terms "Item I give and bequeath to John Wilkes, Eſq; late Member for Aleſbury the ſum of 100l. as a teſtimony of my approbation of his intrepid Conduct in oppoſing a wicked conduct, and profligate Adminiſtration."

It is ſaid, that among ſeveral Flaws in Mr. Wilkes's Outlawry, one is, that he was not declared an Outlaw in three different Pariſhes in the county where he lived; and it is likewiſe ſaid, that the Outlawry was not regiſtered in the proper Office.

We hear that a number of people will ſoon embark for America, at the Expence of the Government to ſettle there with their Families.

The expences of the election at Northampton at the loweſt calculation is eſtimated at 60 000l.

April 1. It is ſaid the damage done to Lord B—'s houſe by the mob on monday night laſt, cannot be repaired for leſs than 500l. a great deal of rich furniture having been broke to pieces.

Some perſons having greatly reflected on Mr. Wilkes and his Friends on account of the riots on the day of election; whereas it appears that he and they took all poſſible precautions to prevent tumults; by diſperſing 40 000 of the following hand-bills:

"Mr Wilkes earneſtly requeſt, of his friends & intreats, that all poſſible means may be uſed to preſerve peace and good order through the whole of the approaching election for the county of Middleſex, to convince the world, that liberty is not joined to licentiouſneſs.

Lord R——, we hear, has loſt 1000 guineas to 50 by betting againſt Mr. Wilkes.

LONDON.

April 2. A certain nobleman being aſked by the——, what he apprehended would be the conſequence of a late election? replied as the gentlemen was elected, he muſt take his ſeat acordingly.

Amongſt the other pranks of their high and mightineſſes, the Mob on account of the Middleſex, election, they ſtopped the French ambaſſador in his coach, and politely inſiſted on his drinking a draught of porter (which they offered him) to Wikes and liberty; with which his excellency with the greateſt affability complied.

One day laſt week as a great perſonage was going to Richmond, accompanied by his illuſtrious conſort, a rabble in the road thither, gathered round his carriage, clamarouſly begging a pardon for W. and grew ſo numerous and troubleſome, that the great perſonages thought proper to return to town.

We alſo hear that one of the brothers of the great perſonage, was ſtopped by the mob near Brentford, in his carriage, and they inſiſted on his pulling off his hat and hallow out, Wilkes and Liberty.

We have it confirmed to us, that by the aſſiſtance of his friends (the ſubſcription being ſtill open) and particularly a very amiable, patriotic noblemen, that all Mr Wilkes debts will be poſitively adjuſted ſettled, & ſatisfied, previous to the enſuing ſeſſion of Parliament.

It is remarkable that the county of Middleſex, for which Mr. Wilkes is choſen one of the repreſentatives is marked in the table of references to, the Counties of England in Kitchen's map No. 45.

We hear that the Duke of Cumberland's houſe was illuminated on Monday night, & that lights were put out at St James's, in compliance with the populace.—Such a prudent compliance at the manſion houſe, would have prevented much damage.

At the Earl of Northumberland's the populace were told to go to the Neighbouring ale houſe to drink at the Earl's Expence, whilſt the ſervants prepared candles; and the company both gentlemen, and ladies flung up the ſaſhes, and held out candles in their hands till the ſervants had properly illuminated the windows.

It having been reported to a great perſonage, that a Liveryman was threatned with the loſs of his place for not voting at the city election agreeable to order, aſked, "If the man had voted according to his engagements." Which being anſwered in the affirmative, it was replied, "Had he voted contrary to his engagement, he ſhould certainly have been diſcharged."

This morning, at eleven o'clock and not before Mr. Wilkes ſet out for Bath.

DUBLIN, March 22.

Such attention is paid to the glorious cauſe of Liberty in this Kingdom, and eſpecially in this Metropolis, where it has been ever tenderly nurſed ſince its happy Fruits have been made known and underſtood, that we hear in caſe that Martyr in the cauſe, JOHN WILKES, Eſq; (who has been exiled from his country) ſhould by the illicit, Influence of Power, loſe his Seat for the Metropolis of the Neighbouring Kingdom, he will be invited to ſtand a Candidate for the Metropolis of HIBERNIA, on the enſuing General Election: His [illegible], where the Eſſence of Freedom and Independance has been ſo clearly demonſtrated, cannot be doubted,——Hear this ye Sons of Liberty and rejoice!

—"This day about noon we received the news of Mr. Wilkes's election for the county of Middleſex, by a great majority. The inexpreſſible joy that appeared among the inhabitants in general is not to be conceived; the bells were immediately ſet a ringing, and continued upwards of twelve hours, & every inhabitant of the town appeared with a blue cockade in his hat, interwoven with the words Wilkes & Liberty, and underneath, The worthy freeholders of the county of Middleſex, who voted for him.—— The windows in every houſe of the town were illuminated, and ſeveral of the principal inhabitants, provided hogſheads of beer at their own expence, at different parts of the town, for the populace. Bonfires were immediately made, and the evening concluded with the greateſt joy and decorum imaginable— The next morning the populace carried a blue flag round the town whereupon was painted the portrait of Mr. Wilkes, and underneath, Wilkes and Liberty, accompanied by a great number of the principal inhabitants, as ſoon as the parade ended, fixed it on the Town-Hall, there to remain to the lateſt poſterity.

The celebrated Triſtram Shandy was buried privately in a new burying ground belonging to the pariſh of St. George's, Hanover Square at twelve o'clock at noon, attended only by two gentlemen in a mourning coach, and no bell tolling.

WILLIAMSBURG, Virginia, May 5.

On the 8th inſt. died in Frederick county Virginia, Capt. ALEXANDER STEPHEN, late an officer in his Majeſty's Royal-American regiment. He was a gentleman of integrity and bravery. In General Braddock's engagement he reſcued the colours of the 44th regiment from the enemy, after the fall of Mr. Halket, and received a wounds in the action. He diſtinguiſhed himſelf at the reduction of Louiſbourgh and Quebec; and under the command of General Murray, on the heights of Abraham, the famous 28th of April, in which engagement he received a dangerous wound of which he never perfectly recovered.

The following account, ſays the perſon who ſent it, can be well atteſted. In February 1767, a ſloop was ſunk in Mobjack bay, near New Point Comfort, by a ſquall of wind & thro' the negligence, or inability of the owners, lay near 12 months under water.—Upon her being raiſed, a fiſh was found confined in her hold, ſo large, that her decks were obliged to be broke up to get it out, and upon being meaſured, was found to be full half as long again as the veſſel. It is ſomething ſurprizing, how a fiſh of that ſize could remain ſo long in ſuch a confined ſituation,

By the Captains Hall and Jacobſon, from London, arrived at Boſton ſince our laſt, there is public Prints to the 28th of, April laſt—The following are a few of the Articles taken from the Papers, viz.

LONDON, April 1.

Tueſday a drunken waterman got a ſevere drubbing at Brentford, for hollowing through the town, Wilkes and poverty forever.

It is ſaid Mr. Wilkes is in poſſeſſion of an annuity for life, generouſly granted him by a diſintereſted friend, which is a ſufficient qualification for a ſeat in parliament for a county.

'Tis ſaid that the brokers in Change alley, who are generally fiſhing in troubled waters, have made above 50,000l. in conſequence of Mr. Wilkes's ſtanding for the city of London.

'Tis computed that no leſs than forty ſeven lives have been already loſt by the general election.

It is remarkable, that the number of Freeholders of Middleſex who polled for Mr. Wilkes at Brentford, were exactly forty five more than the Liverymen of London, who voted for him at Guildhall.

It is now ſaid that there is no flaw in Mr. Wilkes's outlawry.

April 4. It was on Saturday morning reported that a gentleman of immence property in the funds, has made Mr. Wilkes his heir.

April 28. Many Perſons have fled diſguiſed out of a priſon, but Mr. Wilkes is perhaps the firſt man whoever ſtole diſguiſed into priſon.

The votaries of Mr. Wilkes ſay, that he is entitled to a civic Crown, not ob civem ſervatum, but ob tres cives ſervatos, viz. the Marſhal of the King's Bench, Lord Mansfield's tipſtaff, and his aſſiſtant, whoſe lives he certainly preſerved yeſterday.

It is ſaid that Mr. Wilkes will remain in the King's Bench priſon till Monday next, by which time it is expected the outlawry will be reverſed, and then he will be diſcharged.

NEW-YORK, May 9.

Saturday Laſt the 4th Inſt. being the Anniverſary of his Majeſty's Birth Day, when he enter'd the 31ſt Year of his Age, His Excellency General GAGE, (the Governor being abſent, on his Tour to Albany, &c.) the Gentlemen of the Council, the Mayor, Corporation, and other Gentlemen of the City and Army, aſſembled at the Fort, where his Majeſty's and other Loyal Healths were drank, under a Diſcharge of Twenty-one Cannon from the Fort, which were anſwered by three Vollies from the Detachment of the Train, and the 16th Regiment, drawn up on the Battery, where they made a handſome appearance, and were reviewed by the General—at whoſe Houſe an elegant Entertainment was provided for the Gentlemen. In the Evening there were Illuminations as uſual.— Thoſe at the General's Houſe and the Fort, were beautifully diſpoſed.

BOSTON, June 9.

Saturday laſt (June 4th) being the anniverſary of his Majeſty's birth day, when he entered into the 31ſt year of his age; at ſun-riſe flags were diſplayed at Caſtle William and each of the town Batteries; at 12 o'clock, the guns at the Caſtle and batteries were fired, and at one his Majeſty's ſhip the Romney of 50 guns, fired a royal ſalute. His Excellency the governor's troop of guards, under the command of Col Phipps, the regiment of militia of this town, commanded by Colonel Jackſon, with the train of artillery under Capt. Paddock, muſtered in King-ſtreet, where the troop and regiment fired three vollies, and the train ſeveral diſcharges of their new field pieces, after which the troop and regiment marched off. Then the train performed the exerciſe of a mock fight during which their ſoldier like behaviour, their management of the artillery, and the good order obſerved, gave general ſatisfaction to a numerous crowd of ſpectators. His Majeſty's council, the houſe of repreſentatives, and the officers of the militia, attended his Excellency at the council chamber, where a number of loyal toaſts were drank, viz. The King, Queen, Royal Family, Union between Great-Britain and her colonies, the province, &c. &c. &c. Then the Captains marched their reſpective companies to their own houſes, where genteel dinners were prepared for their officers, and other gentlemen of the town.

We hear that about ten Days ago a ſmall Veſſel going from Piſcataqua to Kennebeck was caſt away on the Eaſtern Shore, the maſter, Capt. Matthew Adams of this Town, was drowned, a young Lad ſwam aſhore. There were no other Perſons on board.

Tueſday laſt as ſome Carpenters were repairing the New-South Meeting-Houſe, they diſcovered under the Floor a black Coffin, with a Child therein, which had lain a long Time, as the Infant was greatly emaciated.

Kittery June 2d. This day in the afternoon we had a thunder tempeſt; when Mr. Joſeph Fry of this town, and ſeveral others were ſtruck with lightning (being in a houſe which it ſhattered much;) it made a breach thro' Mr. Fry's cloaths on his ſhoulder the bigneſs of a dollar, ſet his ſhirt on fire, ſplit the ſeam of his coat, broke ſome ſkin on his arm, and left it black, and paſt into the ſeam of his breeches and ſplit it open, marking the ſame as it went, cut off his garter, tearing his ſtocking to rags, and leaving a ſulpherous matter on it, taking away one quarter of his ſhoe and leaving the like mark all the way.

NEW-HAVEN, June 10.

On the 29th ult. died at North-Fairfield, after three Days Illneſs, in the 67th Year of his Age, that generous and ſkillful Phyſician, Doct. JOHN HULL, of New Cheſhire, in Wallingford. He was on a Journey to Viſit a Patient, but was taken ill on the Road, at the Houſe of Mr. Jacob Bennet, in New-Fairfield, where he expired, wholly reſigned to the Divine Will. His Remains were carried to New-Cheſhire, and decently interred. The Funeral was attended by a great Number of People, who expreſs'd their Grief for the Loſs of ſo good and uſeful a Man as the Doctor really was.

HARTFORD, June 13.

Laſt Friday the General Aſſembly of this Colony was diſſolv'd, the Buſineſs of the Spring Seſſions being finiſhed.

The Slave Trade is a Spectacle that ſhocks Humanity!—

The harmleſs Natives baſely they trepan,
And barter Baubles for the ſouls of Men;
The Wretches they to Chriſtian Climes bring o'er,
To ſerve worſe Heathen than they did (before.

Dr. Cotton Mather's Eſſays to do Good, p. 68.

THE buſineſs of making and keeping Slaves however it may have paſſed current, for a long ſeaſon among us, as a harmleſs & innocent practice, will, notwithſtanding, upon a ſtrict and honeſt enquiry, be found, if I am not miſtaken directly contrary to ſacred Scripture and ſolid reaſon. It is certain, it muſt for ever ſtand condemned by that eternal rule of righteouſneſs laid down by the great founder of chriſtianity, Mat. vii 12. All things whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them, i. e. whatever is fit, and juſt and reaſonable, for us to deſire and expect from other men, it is unqueſtionably our duty to act and behave in like manner with reſpect to them. Let us now (without any further paraphraiſe) paſs on to make application of this important point. And here I would aſk the queſtion, Is it fit, juſt, or reaſonable, that we together with our wives and Children, ſhould be forceably carcarried out of our land, and ſold for ſlaves among the Negroes?—If not—then neither is it fit, juſt, or reaſonable that they ſhould be treated in like manner by us. For it is a certain everlaſting truth, that we have no more right to make ſlaves of any nation on the face of the earth, than another nation has to make ſlaves of us.

Every man that is born into the world, is born free, and cannot juſtly be made a ſlave, unleſs by ſome act of his own, he forfeits his liberty into the hands of public juſtice; I ſay public juſtice, becauſe it is an affair of too great importance for perſons in a private capacity to determine. Every man that is born into the world, holds his liberty from the Almighty, by the ſame tenure, that he holds his life.—From whence it will plainly follow, that if any man has a right to deprive another man of his liberty; he muſt have an equal right to take away his life alſo. Now in the caſe of taking away a man's life unjuſtly, which we call MURDER, there is expreſſed a moſt dreadful commination, Gen. ix. 6. Whoſo ſheddeth man's blood, by man ſhall his blood be ſhed. And let the reaſon which enforces this threatning, be carefully remembered, by all; For in the IMAGE OF GOD made he man. And certain it is, that the great father of the univerſe, who has made of ONE BLOOD all nations to dwell upon the face of the earth, has alſo ſtampt his IMAGE on their ſouls; has faſhioned their hearts alike, and his inſpiration has given them underſtanding. It is plain therefore that whoever holds another man in ſlavery unjuſtly affronts the ſupreme Majeſty and debaſes his IMAGE impreſſed on his reaſonable creatures. I know this is a hard ſaying, to many who are blinded by intereſt and prejudice; who would therefore impriſon this doctrine from ſeeing the light; but truth is great and it will prevail.

NEW-ENGLAND has often been called, by way of eminence, a LAND OF LIGHT: I wiſh there was no reaſon to call it a land of unrighteouſneſs, with regard to the caſe before us; for we are verily guilty concerning this thing; ſo that we have reaſon to confeſs, in the words of Ezra the Prieſt, that ſince the days of our fathers we have been in a great treſpaſs unto this day: For which treſpaſs, God might juſtly have been angry with us, till he had conſumed us, ſo that there ſhould be no remnant nor eſcaping. ——It is true indeed, we, in this province of late have had ſtrong convictions of the greatneſs of this evil: If I miſtake not the Repreſentatives of Boſton have had Inſtructions relative to the ſubject, and our General Court have made ſome faint eſſays towards freeing the land from the heinous guilt of injuſtice and oppreſſion; but private intereſt (it is to be feared) has ſtirred up a ſpirit of oppoſition, ſo that matter ſeems to be quite thrown a ſide. But let it be remembered, that God in his righteous providence, has manifeſted the tokens of his diſpleaſure in the troubles brought upon us at this day; and cauſed us to read our enormous guilt, in the nature and ſeverity of the puniſhment. We have been loudly complaining of the heavy burdens caſt upon us, and, that by the infringement of our natural rights, we are like to be reduced to a ſtate of ſlavery. But with what face can we look up and plead for theſe, while we ſuffer ſo many of our fellow-creatures to remain in the moſt abject Slavery? We may faſt and pray, and hang down our heads like a bullruſh; but this will only ſerve to enhance our guilt, and inflame our reckoning, unleſs we undo the heavy burdens, break every yoke, and let the oppreſſed go free. And certainly, it highly concerns thoſe of either Houſe, who have thrown in clogs, to embarraſs and divide the public councils relative to this affair, ſeriouſly to reflect on theſe things; to examine their hearts, as to the real motives of their oppoſing ſo good a work;——A work, which if happily compleated, our light would break forth as the morning, and our righteouſneſs as the noon-day: But if ſtill neglected, will, probably, pull down a more amazing weight of vengeance on the land.

Genuine Account of the Middleſex election.

On Sunday Mr. Wilkes went privately to Brentford, and on Monday at 8 o'clock appeared at the booth in Brentford Butts.—The Sheriffs made their appearance at nine but Sir William B. Proctor and Mr. Cooke did not arrive before one o'clock. The Freeholders were frequently impatient, calling out for the poll and Mr. Wilkes as often addreſſed himſelf to the public requeſting their patience untill the appearance of all the candidates. After holding up hands, the books were opened at half after one from which time the books were fully employed untill near five o'clock; when the freeholders ſlackned, and half after five no freeholders offered to poll. The Sheriffs then went round to every book, and finding no perſons polling, made a proclamation at each corner of the booth for freeholders to come & poll or that the books would be finally cloſed: after the three ſeveral proclamations, and waiting ſome time without any freeholders appearing to poll the books were ſealed up, when the Shriffs adjourned till Tueſday Morning at 6 o'clock, to caſt up the books and make their return.

We hear by a Gentleman, who arrived from France that on Tueſday Evening when he landed at Dover, the whole Town was illuminated, and every town he travelled through, till he arrived in London.

"DON'T meddle with that gun, Billy," ſaid a careful mother, "if it ſhould go off it would kill ſome of the children"——It is'nt charged mother: ſays Will——"well! but may be" ſays the good old matron, "it will go off if it isn't charg'd".——But there is no lock on it, madam——"O dear Billy! I am afraid the hollow thing there, the barrel, I think you call it, will ſhoot if there is no lock"—Don't laugh at the good old lady; two thirds of our fears and apprehenſions of the evils and miſchiefs of this life are juſt about as well grounded as hers were in this caſe——there are many unavoidable evils in life, that it becomes us as men and as chriſtians, to bear with fortitude; and there is a certain period aſſigned to us all, and yet dreaded by (at leaſt) the moſt of us, wherein we muſt conflict with death, and finally loſe connexion with all things beneath the ſun——theſe things are beyond our utmoſt power to reſiſt, or ſagacity to evade——'tis our wiſeſt part therefore to prepare to encounter them in ſuch a manner as ſhall do honour to our profeſſion, and manifeſt a perfect conformity to that directory on which our profeſſion ſtands——but why need we anticipate unavoidable evils, and "feel a thouſand deaths in fearing one!"——why need a woman be everlaſtingly burying her children in her own imagination, and ſpend her whole life in a fanceid courſe of bereavement, becauſe they are mortal and muſt die ſome time or other?——a divine teacher ſays, "ſufficient for the day is the evil thereof:" but we put new and unneceſſary gall into all the bitter cups we have to drink in life, by artfully mixing, ſipping and ſmelling beforehand; like the ſqueamiſh patient that, by imagining and viewing his phiſick, brings a greater diſtreſs and burden upon his ſtomach before he takes it, than the phiſick itſelf could ever have done——I would have people be more careful of fire-arms than they are; but I don't take a gun-barrel, unconnected with powder and lock, to be any more dangerous than a broom-ſtick.

Serjeant Tremble and his wife, feel as eaſy and ſecure as if their children were immortal during a time of general health; now and then a neighbour drops off with a conſumption, or an apoplexy——but that makes no impreſſion, as all their children are plump and hearty——if there are no ſmall pox, cankers, [illegible], bladders in the throat, and ſuch like things to be heard of, they almoſt bid defiance to death——but the moment information was given that a child ſix miles off had the throat-diſtemper, all comfort bid adieu to the houſe; and the miſery they endured from dreadful apprehenſions leſt the diſeaſe enter the family, is unſpeakable——the old ſergeant thought that when the wind blew from that quarter he could ſmell the infection, and therefore order'd the children to keep houſe and drink wormwood and rum as a preſervative againſt contagion——as for Mrs. Tremble, her mind was in a ſtate of never ceaſing agitation at that time—a ſpecimen of the common converſation of the family is as follows——"Suſy, your eyes look heavy, you don't feel a ſore throat do you?——huſband, I heard Tommy cough in the bed room juſt now, I'm afraid the diſtemper is beginning in his vitals, let us get up and light a candle——you don't begin to feel any ſore on your tongue or mouth do you my dear little chicken?——It ſeems to me Molly did not eat her breakfaſt with ſo good a ſtomach this morning as ſhe us'd to, I'm in diſtreſs for fear ſhe has got the diſtemper a coming on"——the houſe was one day a perfect Bedlam; for having heard that rue and rum was an excellent guard in their preſent danger, the good lady diſpenſed the catholicon ſo liberally among the ſmall craft one morning that not a ſoul of them could eat all day; Tom vomited heartily; Sue looked as red as fire; and Moll as pale as death——O! what terrors, and heart-akings till the force of the medicine was over!——to be ſhort, the child that had the diſtemper died; and no other child was heard of, in thoſe parts to have it; ſo that tranquility and ſecurity were reſtored to Mr. Tremble's family, and their children regarded as formerly, proof againſt mortality.

Mrs. Foreſight, keeps her mind in a continual ſtate of diſtreſs and uneaſineſs, from a proſpect of awful diſaſters that ſhe is forewarned of by dreams, ſigns and omens——this by the way is affronting behaviour to common ſenſe, and implies a greater reflection upon ſome of the divine perfections than ſome well meaning people are aware of——the good woman look'd exceeding melancholly at breakfaſt one day laſt week, and appeared to have loſt her ſtomach——after ſome enquiry into the cauſe of ſo mournful a viſage, we were given to underſtand, that "ſhe foreſaw the death of ſome one in the family, having had warning in the night by a certain noiſe that ſhe never knew fail," and then ſhe went on to tell how juſt ſuch a thing happen'd before the death of her father, and mother and ſiſter &c.——I endeavoured to argue her out of this whimſical gloomy ſtate of mind——but in vain——ſhe inſiſted upon it, that, tho' the noiſe laſted ſcarcely a minute, it began like the dying ſhriek of an infant, and went on to be like the tumbling of clods upon a coffin, and the ringing of the bell——the poor woman wept bitterly for the loſs of the child that was to die——however ſhe found afterwards occaſion for uneaſineſs on another account——the cat unluckily ſhut up in the buttery, and diſſatisfied with ſo long confinement, gave forth that dying ſhriek, which firſt produced the good woman's conſternation; and then by ſome ſudden effort to get out at a grate at the upper part of the room, overſet a large pewter platter; the pewter platter in its way overſet a large wooden bowl full of milk, and both together in their way knock'd down a white ſtone diſh of ſalmon, which came with them into a great kettle that ſtood upon the floor——the noiſe of the cat, might eaſily be miſtaken for that of a child, and the ſound of Salmon upon a board, for that of a clod, and any mortal may be excuſed for thinking that a pewter platter, and a great earthern diſh broken in fifty pieces both tumbling together into a braſs kettle, ſounds like a bell——

To be plain, and honeſt; I wrote thus far to divert my own mind under ſome very gloomy apprehenſions——but it has not anſwered the purpoſe——my melancholy forebodings are ſtrong as ever and I will no longer proceed in this ſtrain——if the reader has had any diverſion in ſo far ſatisfaction to his very humble ſervant,

Merriden.

LONDON, [illegible] 1768.

MONDAY evening [illegible] proceeded from Fleet Street through St. Paul's church-yard, Cheapſide, and the Poultry, where the inhabitants immediately illuminated their houſes; but when they came to the Manſion-houſe, there being no proper perſons authoriſed to obey their commands, they began to be outrageous, and broke all the windows round the houſe, which they could reach; and in the great room facing Charlotte ſtreet they broke a large chandelier that coſt upwards of 100 l. and a large pier glaſs in another room that coſt 50 l. after which two companies of ſoldiers were ſent from the Tower, who came beating their drums, and playing on their fifes as loud as poſſible, and ſurrounded the Manſion houſe; but a worthy Alderman ordered them away into Cornhill, and to ſtay there with their backs to the Manſion-houſe, to wait for his orders, which was accordingly obſerved. He then came out of the Manſion houſe great door, with a candle in each hand, placed them on the balluſtrades, pulled off his hat, and huzza'd, "Wilkes for ever," and then addreſſed the mob on the impropriety of their zeal for Mr. Wilkes's ſucceſs, and ordered what candles cou'd be procured to be immediately ſet out; he then repreſented to them that their preſent conduct inſtead of ſerving Mr. Wilkes will irritate his enemies, and greatly prejudice his cauſe; in ſhort, his prudent, reſolute, ſenſible, and affable behaviour, effectually quieted the mob; who were as much pleaſed with his conduct on the occaſion, as with the ſucceſs of Mr. Wilkes and joined their names together with repeated huzzas of applauſe, and no miſchief was done afterwards. The guards were ordered back about two o'clock, when every thing ſubſided.

On tueſday night again, between eleven & twelve o'clock, a large mob aſſembled in the Strand, broke the windows of thoſe houſes where lights were not put up, ſome of which had not only the windows ſmaſh'd to pieces, but the frames deſtroyed. The ſame was done in York-buildings, Craven-ſtreet, St. Ann's, Soho, &c.——The damage done was greater in thoſe parts of the town than had been done the night before.

Wedneſday 2 men who were committed to the compter on the preceding evening, for breaking the windows of Mr. Farmer, Apothecary, in the Fleet market, were reexamined at Guildhal, when one was diſcharged, and the other committed to Newgate to take his trial at the next ſeſſions at Old Baily. four others were committed to the ſame goal for being concerned in the riot at the Manſion-houſe.

A young man of a good family, connections and fortune, has been taken up and bound over to anſwer the charge of aiding and abetting the late riots in the city of Weſtminiſter.

A liveryman of London aſking a friend of Mr. Wilkes, whether he tho't it would not have been more prudent for Mr. Wilkes to have thrown up the poll ſooner, as by carying it on to the end, he ſhewed how ſmall a part of the livery on his ſide ? he turned it off with a ſmile, and ſaid, 'Mr. Wilkes only waited to have it in his own power to ſay, that there were above one thouſand honeſt men in London.

To the Gentlemen, Clergy, and Freeholders of the County of Middleſex.

Gentlemen,

MOST gratefully ſenſible of thoſe generous and patriotic principles which have induced you to elect me your Repreſentative in parliament, I intreat you to accept of my beſt endeavours to expreſs the joy which inſpires me on ſo intereſting ſo affecting an occaſion. The perſonal regard you have ſhewn me, indeed confers on me an obligation, the due ſenſe of which I too cordially feel to find words to deſcribe. I cannot, however, forbear congratulating you, as the moſt diſtinguiſhed of ENGLISHMEN on the Hon. proof you have given, that the geunine ſpirit of independance and the true love of our country, for which the county of MIDDLESEX has for ages, been ſo eminently conſpicuous ſtill glows in your breaſts with unremitting ardour ! Still ſhines forth with undiminiſhed luſtre ! Let the ſons of venality bow the knee to the idol of ſordid intereſt : Let them call their puſilanimity prudence while they ignominiouſly kiſs the rod of power, & tamely ſtoop to the yoke, which artful miniſters inſidiouſly prepare and arbitrarily impoſe. You Gentlemen have ſhewn, that you are neither to be deceived nor enſlaved. In proving yourſelves enemies miniſterial perſecution, the eyes of the whole kingdom of the world are upon you as the firſt & firmeſt defenders of public liberty Happy ſhall I think myſelf, if, fired by your example, the efforts of my warmeſt zeal may be deemed an adequate return for the favours you have beſtowed on me : but however inefficient my abilities, my will to ſerve you is unbounded as it is unalterable Engaged as I have long, been in the glorious cauſe of FREEDOM, I beg you to conſider my paſt conduct as an earneſt of the future, and to look on me as a man whoſe primary views, will ever regard the rights and privileges of his fellow countrymen in general, and whoſe ſecondary views ſhall be attentively fixed on the dignity, advantage, and proſperity of the county of Middleſex. Let me therefore, deſire of you Gentlemen, to favour me from time to time, with ſuch inſtructions as may beſt enable me to accompliſh thoſe ends ; reſting aſſured of always finding me devoted to your ſervice, and that the happieſt moments of my life will be thoſe in which I am employed in maintaining the civil and religious rights of Engliſhmen, and in promoting the intereſts of my conſtituents. I am, with the trueſt Reſpect,

Gentlemen, Your obliged and faithful,

humble Servant,

Tueſday, March 29. JOHN WILKES.

LONDON,

April 2. Tueſday night, ſome perſon having wrote "D—n Wilkes and Liberty," on ſeveral parts of the houſe wherein the Tripoline ambaſſador lately lived in Soho Square now uninhabited, the mob were ſo enraged, that they broke all the windows ;—— and did other conſiderabe damage to ſeveral houſes in the ſame ſquare that were not illuminated.

Tueſday evening the populace ſtopped a young man on horſeback in the new road to Iſlington, and aſked him who he was for, but he not readily giving anſwer, one of them ſtruck him on his head and fractured his ſkull, and he died the next day.

A letter from Chelmsford ſays, the mob at that place, both during the time of the poll, and after the cloſing it, were extremely riotous and outrageous, breaking almoſt all the windows, knocking one another down, and behaving in ſuch a manner that the inhabitants were afraid to ſtir out of their houſes. Two men loſt their lives, and another was run over by a coach and both his legs broke.

The letter from Mr. Wilkes to a great perſonage, was returned un opened.

The following is an exact copy of a letter to every freeholder for the county of Middleſex, who voted for Mr. Wilkes.

"SIR, March 30th, 1768.

"INTENDING myſelf, very ſoon the pleaſure of thanking you, in perſon, for the diſtinguiſhed honour you have done me, by appearing in my behalf at the late election, I beg leave, in the mean time, to aſſure you of my ſincere attachment to your intereſts, and of the due ſenſe I ſhall ever retain of the obligation you have ever conferred on

Your humble Servant,

JOHN WILKES.

APRIL 4.

Laſt week a ballad ſinger was heard to ſay, at a Public houſe in Fleet market, that he earned from 18 ſhillings to a guinea moſt every day during the late city election by ſinging ſongs upon Wilkes and Liberty, and No. 45.

The animoſity which of late years has unhappily too much ſubſiſted between the ſouth and North Britons, has in ſome meaſure ſubſided ſince Mr. Wilkes offered himſelf a candidate for the county of Middleſex ; on which occaſion ſeveral Scotch gentlemen, much to their honor, laying aſide little prejudice, not only intereſted themſelves in his favour, but gave him ſingle votes.

It is confidently ſaid that the legal life of Mr. Wilkes in Parliament will prove the certain death of the Scotch intereſt at C---t, that expiring Jacobitiſm will, for the ſame reaſon, be totally extinguiſhed ; and that Mr. Wilkes's well known averſion to the Romiſh ſuperſtition will greatly promote the preſent ſtrict enquiry into the ſtate of it in theſe kingdoms.

A letter received yeſterday morning ſigned one of the Mob, ſays "The deſign of ſome letter writers in the papers, to bring diſgrace on certain great officers of ſtate, for deſerting (as they call it) their S———n on the nights of Monday and Tueſday, laſt, when ſome windows were broken, is extremely malevolent and unjuſt ; and it was impoſſible thoſe Noblemen, &c. ſhould know what would happen ; for I can aſſure you, that we, the mob had no thoughts of rioting or breaking windows, 'till we arrived in town, when ſeeing ſome of the houſes illuminated before we came, we obliged others to do the ſame : ſo that whoſoever may ſuppoſe us to be ſet on by any perſon, or that a ſcheme of riot was deliberately laid, are intirely miſtaken."

Wagers of five to one are confidently held that Mr. Wilkes will be a ſitting Member in Parliament.

In Caſe Mr. Wilkes's Seat ſhould be affirmed, (and but few doubt it) and he ſhould, agreable to the inſtructions he ſolicits from his Conſtituents, move for, and carry the above great National Point, the Name of a Patriot, now become almoſt contemptible, will be then realized into Glory and Reſpect, and that of Oppoſition alone deſpicable ; and that they may, let every true Britain and Friend to his Country eccho Amen !

Wagers are held that the 20th of this month will produce ſome conſequences, as important as have been known for many years in theſe kingdoms.

The three regiments of guards, it is ſaid have orders to hold themſelves in conſtant redineſs for marching.

It is reported that all the officers of the four guards have received orders to raiſe their companies to the full compliment, as ſoon as poſſible.

We are aſſured that as ſoon as the Middleſex Election was ended in favour of Mr. Wilkes, a perſon was employed to carry the news to ſome of his friends at Paris ; a native of Switzerland undertook to deliver the ſame in 51 hours, he accordingly ſet out by agreement, and performed the journey in 47 hours notwithſtanding he was detained nine hours in an open boat on the ſeas, for which he has ſince received an adequate reward ; the man was ſo much gauled when he came to Paris, that the blood ran out of the knees of his breeches.

April 11. As the three regiments of foot guards are ordered to hold themſelves in readineſs, and four or five regiments of foot are ordered into town from the country, it is generally believed that the government intend to take ſome violent meaſure with Mr. Wilkes who is reſolved to ſurrender himſelf to the King's Bench the firſt day of the term (the 20th inſt.) ſome imagine he will then be ſent to Newgate, others to the Tower ; nothing but a ſtrong military force will be able to prevent the mob from reſcuing him.

We hear from Briſtol that a ſcheme is on foot in that city, for 45 Gentlemen, (friends to liberty) to ſubſcribe 45 guineas, to defray the expence of an entertainment, to which Mr. Wilkes is to be invited, to conſiſt of 45 diſhes, and in order to keep within the bounds of moderation, no more than 45 bottles of wine to be allowed on the occaſion.

April 15. It is now poſitively ſaid that Mr. Wilkes will be committed, and puniſhed to the utmoſt ſeverity of the law.

And it is alſo ſaid, that an act of parliament will be immediately paſſed to render him unqualified to ſit as a member of the houſe of Commons.

It is likewiſe ſaid a great perſonage is determined not to pardon a late exile, ſo that it may be expected he will be obliged again to leave his country.

Yeſterday Mr. Wilkes's friends dined at the King's Arms Tavern ; it is very remarkable that the company happened to be exactly 45, including Mr. Wilkes. The following toaſts amongſt others were drank ; The King—The royal Family—Old England its Trade and Liberties—Proſperity to the county of Middleſex—The City of London—A Free, Honeſt and Independant Parliament.

On Thurſday night John Wilkes, Eſq; was at the Anti-gallican Society at the Ship Tavern Ratcliffe Croſs, when he was unanimouſly admitted a member of that laudable Society.

Mr. Wilkes ſubſcription, we are pretty well informed, does not amount to more than 1200l.

We hear that ſeveral counties & boroughs intend to inſtruct their members not to conſent to the expulſion of Mr. Wilkes ; and it is generally believed that the miniſtry propoſe to move the houſe for that meaſure.

It is reported that ſir William Baker has not only declared his intention of reſigning his gown, but is actually making intereſt in his ward for Mr. Wilkes to ſucceed him as Alderman.

It is reported, that the B. of B. has actually intereſted himſelf much on behalf of J. Wilkes, Eſq; with a very great perſonage— If ſo, might not the tongue of ſlander and malevolence be ſtruck dumb at ſuch an inſtance of magnanimity !

LONDON, April 18

A colation of parties is ſaid to be forming under the ſanction of Lord Chatham, which it is ſaid, will render ſtrong the late ſo greatly relaxed fibres of adminiſtration.

It is reported that Sir James Daſhwood and Sir William Beauchamp Proctor, Barts. will ſhortly be created Peers of Great-Britain:

By a perſon arrived from Leeds in Yorkſhire, we are informed, that riots have gone to ſuch an uncommon height, on the account of the dearneſs of proviſions, that the populace have deſtroyed two or more perſons in the marketing and farming buſineſs.

Laſt night a terrible riſing happened among the coal heavers at Shadwell, in which ſeveral houſes were pulled down, and the inhabitants much hurt. Seven or eight perſons were killed in the fray, and a woman with child ſo much terriſied, that ſhe miſcarried and died of the fright. A party of guards from the tower were ſent to quell the diſturbance, who fired among the rioters and took the ringleaders priſoners, but were themſelves very roughly handled by the mob.

Laſt night there was a captain's guard ſent from the Tower to patrole about Wapping and Shadwell, to prevent any further miſchief or riots from the coal-heavers.

It is ſaid that a certain election in the North, has coſt one of the candidates not leſs than 120,000 l. and that he drew on his agent in town for 95,000l. at one draught.

On Saturday between 2000 and 3000 coal heavers, all neatly dreſſed, divided into ſeveral gangs, each carrying a ſtreamer, with muſick playing before them, went from Wapping, and waited on William Beckford, Eſq ; in Soho Square, with a petition ſetting forth their grievances and praying redreſs

It is ſaid there will ſoon be ſome material changes in his Majeſty's Foreign Governors in America and the Weſt-Indies.

BOSTON, June 16.

A Letter from the Mount, dated May 21ſt, mentions that a new Governor arrived there the Day before, and had forbid all [illegible] Trade with the Engliſh, and ordered ſuch Veſſels as were there to depart from thence in 15 Days.

Laſt Friday evening, the officers of the cuſtoms for this port, made a ſeizure of a ſloop lying at Hancock's wharf, and which they ordered to be carried off under the guns of his Majeſty's ſhip Romney. This affair occaſioned a diſpute between the officers and ſome of the people who happened to be on the wharf ; in which Mr. Harriſon the Collector, Mr. Hallowell the Comptroller, and Mr. Harriſon's ſon, were all pelted with ſtones and wounded. Soon after which a number of people, aſſembled, went to the houſe of Mr. Williams, inſpector-general, broke ſome of the windows of the houſe ; as alſo, of the houſes of the Collector and Comptroller ; but were prevented doing further damage by ſome gentlemen of the town. After which they burned a pleaſure boat belonging to the Collector, in the Common. Mr. Irvine, Inſpector of Exports and Imports, was alſo attacked the ſame night ; and with ſome difficulty made his eſcape with the aſſiſtance of ſome of the people preſent.

NEWPORT, June 6.

Laſt Friday, at the Superior Court, held here, Tho. Young, Robert Carleſs, and Charles J. Marſhall, officers belonging to the Senegal man of war, were tried for the murder of Henry Sparker. The jury, conſiſting of gentlemen of capacity and undoubted reputation, having heard the caſe plead, with the evidences and circumſtances attending this unhappy affair, went out, and in a few minutes returned to their ſeats, and declared the priſoners not guilty, the verdict being to the entire ſatisfaction of the court. Accordingly the priſoners were immediately and honourably diſcharged.

N. B. Mr. Dexter, the other perſon wounded, is now almoſt recovered ; His evidence was greatly in favour of the priſoners.

NEW-YORK, June 16.

The London Papers mention, that the laſt Advices from Spain, were unfavourable, and that it is thought we are upon the Eve of a Rupture with that Court. We alſo hear that private Letters by the laſt Veſſels agree in the ſame Account, and mention the Manilla Ranſom as the immediate Cauſe. The Criſis of many important Events ſeems to be at Hand.

Detroit, May 11 1768.

Dear Sir,

You'll be much ſurpris'd to find by the following Paragraph of a Letter, wrote to me by an officer at Michillimakinac, the 24th of February laſt, that the formerly very famous and much eſteemed Major Robert Rogers is now capable of ſuch horrid Villainy : ——The letter is as follows.

Dear Sir,

"I now take this Opportunity to congratulate you on your Eſcape from Murder and Plunder. Major Rogers, that experienced Chief to all Manner of Wickedneſs & Treachery, had formed a deep and horrid Plot to kill me, ſend Captain Spicemaker, and Lieut. Chriſtie, Priſoners to the Indian Country, plunder this Garriſon and put all the Soldiers to death, who were not in the Plot, and who would not comply with his Silence ; this was to be executed by a numerous Party of Indians, ſome Soldiers, and French Inhabitants that had conſented to it : He then with the Indians, and what part of the Troops that would follow him, were immediately to ſet off to ſurpriſe the Garriſon of Detroit, and give it up to plunder to his Followers for their Service, and then proceed to old France, (via New-Orleans.) As [illegible] he was pretty well convinced of the abilities and watchfulneſs of the Commander and other officers of Detroit, and doubting his being able to take it by ſurpriſe, he had pitch'd upon ſome pieces of Braſs Cannon for laying a regular Siege to it. He is now in heavy Irons, with an Accomplice, and as there are many King's Evidences, no part of this Account can be doubted."

Another Letter.

Sir,

"At this Seaſon you'll be ſurpris'd to ſee an Expreſs from this ; It is with the joyful News of Michilimackinac preſerv'd or the Plot diſcover'd, a diſmal Treachery carried on by its late Commandant, to maſſacre the Garriſon, eſpecially thoſe who ſhould oppoſe him in making his Eſcape ; to head the Reſt with the Indians in his Intereſt, to plunder this, and march againſt Detroit ; afterwards make the beſt of his Way to Capt. Hopkins on the Miſſiſippi, who he had invited with a few men laſt Spring, to deliver his Fort to him on his Arrival, making Intereſt in his Confinement with a Frenchman here, to join him, and to get Capt. Spicemaker, and me, maſſacred, or taken by the Indians, before he was to attempt any Thing, was the means of this Diſcovery ;——We ſent him to Rogers to know what he was to do for him for ſo great an undertaking, he went, and return'd to us with the Villain's Note of Hand, for 100 Pounds Sterl. per Year for five Years.

HARTFORD, June 20.

We hear from New-Brunſwick, in New-Jerſey, that on the 20th of May laſt, the Rev. ABRAHAM BEACH, formerly of this Place, was married to the amiable and accompliſhed Miſs NANCY VAN WINCKLE, a lady whoſe ſhining virtues and ſweet diſpoſition, muſt render the married ſtate truly happy.

Laſt Monday died at Middletown, in the 41ſt Year of her Age, Mrs. Sarah Eaſton, Wife of Capt. John Eaſton of that Place.

On Thurſday laſt the Harriot Packet Boat Capt. Oak, arrived at New-York, in 6 weeks from Falmouth, with the April Mail ; but the advices we have, by way of Boſton, are later than thoſe brought by the packet.

LONDON, April 26.

A certain gentleman at Poplar, the friend of the patriotic Wilkes, had laſt Tueſday a very elegnat dinner; the company conſiſted of 45 gentlemen; at 45 minutes paſt one, there were drank 45 gills of wine, with 45 new laid eggs in them: preciſely at 45 minutes paſt two a very genteel dinner was ſerved up, being five courſes, nine diſhes each, which made the number 45—In the middle of the table, the figures 45 were inlaid with mother of pearl, on which was placed a noble ſurloin of beef, weighing 45 pounds, the table cloth and plates were marked 45, on the back of every chair thoſe figures were carved, had exactly 25 gilt nails in a chair which with the 20, on each perſon's hands and feet, made up the number of nails in every chair 45—the whole concluded with a ball in the evening, when, 45 ladies entered the room, then the dances immediately began, and each lady was ſaluted at the end of every dance, which were nine minuets nine Rigadoons, 9 Cotillons, and 18 country dances, being in the whole 45—after the ladies had been kiſſed round 45 times, and 45 couple of jellies were eaten, the company retired with great mirth and feſtivity, at 45 minutes paſt 3 o'clock.

Ledger.

A correſpondent acquaints us, that Mr. Wilkes went firſt into a hackney coach on Wedneſday after his departure from the court; but the mob growing rather large and tumultuous about him, he was obliged to get out & take ſhelter in a houſe. He afterwards got a poſt chaiſe, and drove over Weſtminſter bridge; but the mob ſtill harraſſed the patriot in the front and rear. With difficulty he reached the Vine at Vauxhall, and there he was obliged to come to the Windows & harranged the multitude, in which he acquainted them with what had paſſed at Weſtminſter-hall, and what he propoſed to do in conſequence thereof, and concluded with very pathetically exhorting them, "as they regarded him and his cauſe, to diſperſe immediately, and quietly return to their reſpective homes," which had its deſired effect.

It is remarkable that when Mr. Wilkes was brought from the Tower, by habeas corpus, to the court of common pleas Earl Temple was on the bench the whole time; and on Wedneſday, when our patriot ſurrendered to the court of King's bench, Earl Winchelſea ſat on the bench next to the judges during the whole argument, pro and con; and ſeveral other perſons of rank were alſo preſent, ſome of whom took minutes of the proceedings.

It is conjectured that the capias executed on Mr. Wilkes, was at his own requeſt; as it is apprehended that the capias would not otherwiſe have been ſerved upon him, but ſtill to have continued an outlaw, and thereby not eligible to ſwear to his qualification as a member of the houſe; and would alſo be a handle for his enemies to prevent his ſitting therein; whereas he may now ſtand a chance of the writs of error being argued this term; when he is brought into court by his habeas and may thereby extricate himſelf from his outlawry.

It has been aſſerted, that Mr. Wilkes was in negociation with the miniſters: We have authority to declare, that the aſſertion is abſolutely falſe, & that he only ſaid to two or three of the friends of the miniſters, he was always ready to take any dutiful, humble, or ſubmiſſive meaſure, with reſpect to the King, which ſhould be hinted to him, was agreeable, but would never make an application to any preſent or future miniſter: That ſuch was his reſolution and declaration in the firſt ſtage of the late buſineſs, had been in the ſubſequent, and ſhould be uniform to the laſt period of it. It remains to be ſeen, whether Mr. Wilkes will act up to this declaration, which he actually made.

LONDON, April 28.

Yeſterday morning came on in the court of King's Bench, Weſtminiſter, before the Right Hon. Lord Chief Juſtice Mansfield, the grand cauſe between the college of Phyſicians and the Licentiates, when after a long hearing which laſted till near three o'clock, a verdict was given in favour of the former.

Yeſterday morning, about nine o'clock, Mr. Wilkes was brought to Weſtminiſter hall by virtue of a writ of capias ut legatum, but on account of the trial of the Phyſicians, &c. he did not come into the Court of King's Bench till four minutes before three o'clock in the Afternoon; A writ of error was allowed; after which it was argued, whether the ſaid gentleman could be admitted to bail when after ſeveral learned arguments and debates, which laſted till half paſt five o'clock it was the opinion of the court he could not; in conſequence thereof he was committed to the King's Bench priſon; to which place as Mr. Wilkes was going from Weſtminiſter hall in an hackney coach, attended by Meſſrs Stichall and Holloway, tipſtaffs to the Right Hon. Lord Mansfield; the mob ſtopped the coach at the foot of Weſtminiſter bridge on the Middleſex ſide, took out the horſes, and drew the coach along the Strand, Fleet Street, &c. to Spitalſquare when they obliged the two tipſtaffs to get out and let them go very quietly away; they then drew Mr. Wilkes to the three Tuns tavern, in Spital-Fields, where, from a one pair of ſtairs window, he earneſtly entreated them to retire; but they refuſed ſaying they would watch him till the morning.—— However, ſoon after they diſperſed; and Mr. Wilkes went to the King's Bench between ten and eleven laſt night.

> MR STILES'S Sermon to the Soldiers.

AMONG all the unneceſſary, and yet pernicious, practices which the polite and genteel, as rude and boiſt'rous, part of mankind, have run into, there is none more notorious than that of PROFANE CURSING and SWEARING. Whether this moſt impious vice is more unfaſhionable, and leſs practiced in our day than fifty or ſixty years ago, I am not able to determine——ſome ſay ſwearing is more unpolite——be that as it will; I am ſure that there is enough of the vice ſtill ſubſiſting to warrant a complaint upon the ſubject——converſation is ſo interlarded with profane expletives, that if only the uſeful and the innocent were to be ſifted out, we ſhould find the greater part remaining in the ſieve——many perſons are chargeable with this vice who are conſcious of the impiety of it, and yet flee to ſome ſilly ſubterfuge or other for their juſtification——one ſays "I dont ſwear except when I am in a paſſion and then I cant help it," as tho' immoderate and ungoverned anger would juſtify the violation of a divine precept——and one ſin be an excuſe to extricate another—— What conſtitutional byaſs or inſtinct, (if I may ſo call it) can there be in any man, that ſhall incline him to this way of expreſſing his anger rather than to any other?—— What but a moſt deteſtable cuſtom has dictated the profanation of our Makers name, as a token of reſentment againſt our fellow men? in ancient times paſſion expreſſed itſelf in rending the garments perſons had on, but now inſtead of tearing their clothes in a ſally of ſurprize and grief as Job did, men rather incline to c--ſe G-d agreable to the advice of Job's wife——and 'tis as rational to aſſert that evil tydings or ſome ſudden provocation, will certainly compel a man to tear off the ſkirt of his coat, as that they will oblige him to profane his Maker's name ——I will be bold to ſay that if men's paſſions muſt have vent, 'tis cuſtom or habit that has dug out the channel for them to flow in; and ſuch a habit never would have exiſted in the conduct, if reverence to the Deity had not loſt exiſtence in the ſoul—— 'tis a much more natural way of expreſſing reſentment againſt one of our fellow men upon any provocation to ſtrike him than to curſe and ſwear; and yet when men's tempers are irritated, (take the country thro') there are generally a hundred oaths to one blow: this ſhews that they are more influenced by a fear of man, or by human laws, then by a fear of God——ſome perſons that have long habituated themſelves to this helliſh language, declare themſelves eaſed, and in ſome meaſure ſatisfied, when their reſentment has diſcharged itſelf in a volley of oaths and execrations——if this be true, they manifeſt a moſt profane vitiated fancy, and however laudable other qualities may be in them, in this they diſplay the image of the devil, that arch enemy to GOD, in as bright a manner as the climate will allow of——

Some ſay "their ſervants, ſoldiers &c. will not regard them, if they give their commands without an oath, they will never think them in earneſt"——I know this to be true——I know it all ſtands upon the footing of cuſtom——and I know it may be corrected——when 'ſquire Moderate ſpeaks to his ſervants, he ſpeaks with calmneſs and deliberation, but puts in no unneceſſary words——his ſervants hearken to and obey every word that comes from his mouth——but Mr. Bluſter has ſo uſed his ſervants to profane expletives, that they never take him to be in earneſt, unleſs G-d d--n ye is tack'd to it——I have known Mrs. Bluſter, ſpeak ſeveral times to one to do a piece of houſhold ſervice——but ſhe was diſobeyed, till her huſband thundered out "d--n your blood"——upon which he flew like lightning——the maſter was more to blame than the ſervant; for the latter had been uſed to connect the ideas of command with an oath, and his maſters uniform conduct gave him full warrant to conclude that none that ſpoke to him acted in character of commander, neither was he to act in character of ſervant, unleſs an oath or a curſe gave it force——can't a ſea commander, an officer in the army, or any one in authority accuſtom thoſe that are under him to as ready obedience, and as ſpeedy an execution of orders, without profaneneſs as with?——Will not a fix'd, reſolute countenance more naturally animate and ſpur the indolent, than a repetition of profane (and with regard to the orders given, unmeaning) oaths?

To plead "long habit" as an excuſe or extenuation of this crime, is as frivolous as to plead it in the caſe of intemperance or theft——there is nothing in the complexion, or temperature of animal nature that diſpoſes any man to this impious practice—— ſome men have a peculiar animal propenſity to gluttony, drunkeneſs, or whoredom; they ſeem to be formed for victims to ſenſuality, unleſs ſaved by ſpecial grace——But where is the man that can urge any thing of this nature reſpecting ſwearing and curſing? ——this is a mean, low vice; the dirtieſt ragmuffins cut as bright a figure in it, as the neateſt gentlemen——there is no need of talents to ſhew a way in this art; and therefore I ſhould think ambition could move but little in the caſe——I muſt confeſs that where men have coveted the reputation of inventing new fangled oaths, and have rack'd their inventions and imaginations for that purpoſe, they have been ſo far ſucceeded (for ought I know, by the aſſiſtance of the Devil) as to excite horror and ſurprize in thoſe that heard them—they have been proud of ſhewing their talents this way, when they were incapable of ſhewing them any other way——the meaneſt of the people in theſe vices rival the greateſt——

The practice I am complaining of is an indecent, unmannerly practice——'tis allowed to be affronting behaviour to uſe ſuch language in the preſence of a clergyman, and whenever one, that the world calls a well bred gentleman, inadvertently drops an oath in the preſence of ſuch an one, he will apologize for it, from a principle of honour——how ridiculous is it to account that an affront before an ambaſſador, which is bodly committed in the face of his maſter?——"all the rules" ſays an ingenious writer, "of civility and genteel behaviour, are ſtrong againſt a practice which is eſteemed infamous by ſome, in almoſt all companies that we frequent"——men of true piety univerſally proteſt againſt it, and what reaſon is there that they ſhould be liable to receive perpetual inſults from rakes and libertines? it is undeniably a clowniſh behaviour, (let the external rank and empty title of the blaſphemer be what it will, it is ſtill the behaviour of a clown compleatly ill-bred) to treat with a contemptuous familiarity, the greateſt and beſt of beings in the preſence of any who have a high veneration of him.——

LONDON, April 18.

We are credibly informed, that previous to the late election for the county of Middleſex, a conſiderable number of tradeſmen and others, who were freeholders of the ſame, waited upon a certain noble E——l in the neighbourhood, of lower Groſvenor ſtreet, and offered to give their votes to any two of the candidates his Lordſhip ſhould think proper, aſſuring him they had no particular attachment to one more than the other, for which reaſon they ſhould give the preference to ſuch as his L——d ſhall pleaſe to point out; upon which his Lordſhip very politely thanked them, and with a truly noble ſpirit worthy of himſelf, told them "to vote for whom they thought proper, that he never would preſume to direct free-born Engliſhmen in the choice of their Repreſentatives; that, let them vote for whom they would, he would ſtill continue his cuſtom and friendſhip to them as much as ever." The conſequence of his generous anſwer was, that they all voted for Mr. W——s.

PHILADELPHIA, June 16

Extract of a Letter from London, April 16, 1768.

"I now ſit down to give you the beſt account I am able of the late commotions here, of which you muſt already have read, ſo much in the Papers, and which will probably afford Matter of Speculation with you. In doing this, I know not that I can add much to the information the Papers convey to you, unleſs it be, with all poſſible impartiality to give you a true Picture of our preſent Situation, at leaſt as it appears to me,

Mr. Wilkes (the Hero of our tale) made his Appearance here ſome weeks ago, gave Notice of his Intention to ſurrender himſelf at the Bar of King's Bench next Term, and walked the Streets as publickly as he could well do, to evade the Attempts of his private creditors to ſecure him. When the Election for the city drew near, he, though an outlaw, and a Beggar, offered himſelf a candidate; and, contrary to all expectation, a Spirit was quickly infuſed into the loweſt Claſs of People, which muſt have inſured him ſucceſs, had the Livery of London been compoſed, in any great Meaſure, of ſuch. The appearance for him at Guildhall, on the Day of Election, was conſiderable; not of Liverymen, however but real Mob I was there, upon the Huſtings, and very near the candidates, ſo that I diſtinctly heard every word that was ſpoken. Wilkes's Addreſs was delivered with more coolneſs, and Preſence of mind, than could be expected from one who was acting ſo bold a part: Harley the Lord Mayor, ſpoke laſt and beſt. He ſaid he did not ſtand up to make Apologies for his paſt conduct in Parliament becauſe he was not conſcious it needed any; that no Man was a firmer Friend to Liberty, or would go farther in its Defence, than himſelf; but he was for Liberty bounded by Law, the only Baſis of true Liberty; that in the high Office he had now the Honour to hold it behoved him, above all things, to attend to the preſervation of the public Peace of the City; he therefore begged, that in their choice of repreſentatives, they would put him entirely out of the Queſtion, and fix upon thoſe whom they tho't beſt able to diſcharge ſo important a Truſt. Upon holding up of Hands, the choice fell upon Mr. Wilkes to be one; but it was plain, that three Fourths of thoſe in the Hall were not of the Livery. From that Moment however his conſequence began, 'tho' the poll ended againſt him which yet greatly exceeded all expectation in his Favour. During its Continuance he appeared every Day on the Huſtings, tho' he was more than once arreſted there, at the Inſtance of ſome of his private Creditors; but he found Bail for his Appearance, braved it out to the laſt, and was attended every Day by a conſiderable Mob.

"When he found the Poll going againſt him, he publickly gave out, he would ſtand for Middleſex. There he was likely to ſtand a better Chance. An incredible Number of petty Freeholders of that County, from Wapping, and its Environs, immediately declared for him; and on the Day of Election, he carried it with Eaſe, and with very little Diſturbance at Brentford itſelf, tho' the whole Road thither was lined with the mob, who inſulted every one who would not join in the Cry of, Wilkes and Liberty. His Succeſs forthwith reached London, and occaſioned ſuch an Intoxication in the Mob, Men, Women and Children, that they ſpread themſelves from Hyde Park Corner to the farther End of Wapping, and broke every Body's Windows, who refuſed to illuminate their Houſes. Among the reſt, thoſe of the Manſion Houſe of the Lord Mayor, who happened that Night to ſleep in the Country, were quite demoliſhed, and tho' a Party of Soldiers were at length ſent for by the Mayoreſs from the Tower, they, when they came (ſo general was the infatuation) ſeemed more diſpoſed to aſſiſt the Mob, than to diſperſe them. You will not eaſily believe it, but it is true, that the Dukes of Grafton and Northumberland, and many others of the firſt Nobility; nay, ſome of the Royal Family itſelf, viz. the Princeſs Amelia, and the Dukes of Glouceſter and Cumberland, ſubmitted to illuminate their Windows upon this infamous Occaſion, in Obedience to the Orders of the paultry Mob.

"The next Night the illuminations were again inſiſted on, with the ſame inſolence, when the ſame impunity, was repeated!

"Strange, in Truth, muſt it appear to Friends, and to Enemies, at home and abroad, that an Outlaw, ſhould, by Men who call themſelves loyal, be choſen to repreſent the very County honoured with the Royal Reſidence; and this attended too with many Marks of Inſolence.

"Lord Chatham lives now a very retired Life, at his old Seat at Hays, in Kent, and is either unable, or unwilling, or both, to take any Part in Publick Affairs.

"Lord Townſend, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, lives jovially with that People, and knowing that his Reign there will be but ſhort, encourages them to promote ſuch Bills as are popular, and what they deem moſt for the Intereſt of the Country. Hence their Octennial Bill.

BOSTON, June 23.

On Tueſday laſt his Excellency the Governor was pleaſed to ſend a meſſage to the Hon. Houſe of Repreſentatives, accompanied with an Extract of a Letter from the Rt. The following is a Copy of a Letter communicated to the Aſſembly of the Colony of Rhode-Iſland, on Saturday laſt, by the Governor of that Colony.

Circular No. 5. } Whitehall, Ap. 21, 1768

GENTLEMEN,

I Have his Majeſty's commands to tranſmit to you the incloſed copy of a letter from the ſpeaker of the houſe of Repreſentatives of the Colony of the Maſſachuſetts-Bay, addreſſed by order of that houſe, to the Speaker of the Aſſembly of each colony on the continent of North-America: As his Majeſty conſiders this Meaſure to be of a moſt dangerous and factious tendency, calculated to enflame the minds of his good ſubjects in the colonies; to promote an unwarrantable combination, and to excite and encourage an open oppoſition and denial to the authority of parliament, and to ſubvert the true principles of the conſtitution. It is his Majeſty's pleaſure that you ſhould immediately, upon the receipt hereof, exert your utmoſt influence to defeat this flagitious attempt to diſturb the public peace by prevailing upon the Aſſembly of your province to take no notice of it, which will be treating it with the contempt it deſerves.

The repeated proofs which have been given by the Aſſembly of Rhode-Iſland of their reverence and reſpect for the laws, and of their faithful attachments to the conſtitution, leave little room in his Majeſty's breaſt to doubt of their ſhewing a proper reſentment of this unjuſtifiable attempt to revive thoſe diſtractions which have opperated ſo fatally to the prejudice of this Kingdom, and the colonies; and accordingly his Majeſty has the fulleſt confidence in their affection, and expects they will give him the ſtrongeſt proofs of them on this, and every other occaſion.

I am with great truth & regard,
Gentlemen, your moſt obedient,
Humble Servant,
HILLSBOROUGH.

⁂ The Letter referred to in the above, will be inſerted in our next.

NEW-YORK, June 23.

By ſome late accounts from the Streights, we learn, that the French and Spaniards in that part of the World, are very buſy in preparing for War; and that ſeveral Tranſports, with Troops on board, lately ſailed from Cadiz, for the Spaniſh West-Indies.

[illegible] the laſt Papers and advices from England, it appeas, that the Election of Mr. Wilkes has exceedingly alarmed and irritated the whole Party of thoſe men in Power who have for ſeveral Years paſt been labouring to effect a total Change in the Engliſh conſtitution, and to deſtroy that Freedom and ſecurity of Property, for which the Nation has been ſo eminently diſtinguiſhed, and to which it entirely owed its Proſperity & Grandeur.

It is tho't, that in Order to keep him out of the Parliament, they will endeavour to poſtpone his Trial and continue his Confinement. Whether they will ſucceed or not and whether the ſame Syſtem of politicks will ſtill be purſued which has already produced ſuch a hideous train of Evils; and from a proſperous united and happy People, has fill'd us with jealouſy,—Diſcontent,—and Animoſity;—reduced us from Affluence to a State of general Poverty, and driven us to the Verge of Ruin and Deſpair; or whether this Syſtem or the Old Engliſh Conſtitution ſhall any longer Exiſt, will greatly depend upon the prevailing Temper of the new Parliament, the diſcovery of which is waited for with anxious Solicitude.

BOSTON, June 23.

We are authorized to inform the Public, That Capt. CORNER, Commander of His Majeſty's ſhip Romney, in Caſe he ſhould want any more Men, will not take any belonging to or married in the Province, nor any employed in the Trade along ſhore, or to the neighbouring Colonies.

And we are further authorized to aſſure the Public, That the Man preſſed from Mr. Waterman of this Town, is diſmiſs'd.

We hear that the Honorable the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms, and the other Officers who had retired on Board his Majeſty's Ship Romney, in the late Diſturbance, have ſince diſembarked, and landed at Caſtle William, where a Board was held on Tueſday laſt. The Collector for the Port of Boſton is alſo at the Caſtle.

Letters from North Carolina, mention that there are great diſturbances in that province occaſioned by the act of Parliament, prohibiting the iſſue of any more paper currency.

"We are in a melancholly Situation, as you will ſee by the News; what the Event will be God knows!——I am this Minute inform'd that there is Letters frow Lord Hillſborough, to our Chief, to be communicated to the Aſſembly, That if they do not immediately undoe what they did laſt [illegible], and own the Right of Parliament to tax America, that we ſhall have a Fleet and Army to enforce the Meaſures of Parliament.—A dreadful event! but you may depend that it will not be ſubmitted to by this Province."——

HARTFORD, April 27.

Laſt week died of the Gravel, at Amenia Precinct, in Dutcheſs County, Mr. John Rough, an elderly Man, and at the deſire of his friends, his Body was opened by Doct. Chamberlain, and a ſtone taken from him, that weighed one pound three ounces.

We hear from Simſbury, that Mr. William Caſe of that town, a worthy and reſpected man, being at Mr. Jeremiah Caſes's at Suffrage in Simſbury, and going to bed hearty and chearful on Monday night laſt, was found dead on Tueſday Morning. Such a ſudden & awful inſtance of mortality greatly affected the people in his neighbourhood; and on wedneſday the corps was bro't into the meeting-houſe of Simſbury old ſociety where a ſermon adapted the occaſion, was preached by the Rev. Mr. Viets, Miſſionary. After which the remains were interred according to the ceremonies of the church.

"THERE are other jurymen that have particular piques and a humor of revenge againſt ſuch or ſuch parties; if a man be but miſcalled by ſome odious name, or ſaid to be of an exploded faction; ſtraight they cry, hang him, find him guilty, no puniſhment can be too bad for ſuch a fellow. In ſuch a caſe, they think it a merit to ſtretch an evidence on the tenter-hooks, and ſtrain a point of law, becauſe they fancy it makes for the good of the government. As if injuſtice and oppreſſion could, in any caſe, be for the true intereſt of government, when in truth, nothing more weakens or deſtroys it. But this was an old ſtratagem, if thou ſuffer this man to eſcape, thou ſhalt not be Cæſar's friend.——All theſe, and the like peſtilent biaſes are to be avoided and abominated by every honeſt juryman."

LONDON, April 21.

Yeſterday morning Mr. Wilkes came from his lodgings in prince's row, near Great George-ſtreet, Weſtminiſter, in a hackney chair to the parliament coffee-houſe in old palace yard, being preceeded by three gentlemen, who moſt preſſingly recommended ſilence and good order to the populace, as did Mr. Wilkes alſo from the chaiſe. He ſtaid at the coffee houſe till the court was ſat, and then went the back way into the court, where his ſurrender was not accepted. The matter was argued by council and it is ſaid, that according to law, Mr. Wilkes ſhould have ſurrendered himſelf to the ſheriff; the pleadings of the council laſted till near two o'clock. When Mr. Wilkes left the court, and withdrew to the coffee houſe for ſome time: and afterwards with his brother and two gentlemen, went in a hackney coach over Weſtminiſter bridge into Surry, attended by a great multitude of people, who obſerved great peace and good order. Notwithſtanding there was ſo great a crowd in Weſtminſter hall, there was not the leaſt interruption to the public peace, the hall & entrance to the court being lined by the conſtables under the immediate direction and inſpection of Mr. Juſtice Welch, and the other magiſtrates of the city and liberty of Weſtminiſter. The Judges, &c. were indeed attended to Weſtminiſter-hall by a greater number of Conſtables and Beadles of the city of Weſtminiſter, mounted guard at the watch houſes, but no crowd gathered nor was any noiſe heard, tho' great numbers left town for fear of riots, &c. On ſurrendering himſelf at the bar, Mr. Wilkes made the following ſpeech;

" My Lords,

" ACCORDING to the voluntary promiſe I made to the public, I now appear before this ſovereign court of juſtice to ſubmit myſelf in every thing to the laws of my country.

" Two verdicts have been found againſt me. One is, for the re-publication of the North-Briton. No. 45; the other, for the publication of a ludicrous poem.

" As to the republication of the number of the North-Briton, I cannot yet ſee that there is the ſmalleſt degree of guilt. I have often read and examined that famous paper. I know it is in every part founded on the ſtrongeſt evidence of facts. I find it full of duty and reſpect to the perſon of the king, altho' it arraigns in the ſevereſt manner, the conduct of his Majeſty's then Miniſters and brings very heavy charges home to them. I am perſuaded they are all well grounded, becauſe every one of thoſe miniſters has ſince been removed. No one inſtance of falſhood has yet been pointed out in that pretended libel, nor was the word falſe in the information before this court. I am therefore perfectly eaſy under every imputation reſpecting a paper, in which truth has guided the pen of the writer, whoever he was, in every ſingle line, and it is this circumſtance which has drawn on me as the author, all the cruelties of miniſterial vengeance.

" As to the other charge againſt me for, the publication of a poem, which has given juſt offence, I will aſſert that ſuch an idea never entered my mind. I bluſh again at the recollection that it was at any time and in any way, brought to the public eye, and drawn from the obſcurity in which it remained under my roof. Twelve copies of a ſmall part of it had been printed in my houſe at my own private preſs. I had carefully locked them up, and I never gave one to the moſt intimate friend. Government, after the affair of the North-Briton, bribed one of my ſervants to rob me of a copy, which was produced in the houſe of peers, and afterwards before this honorable court the nation was juſtly offended, but not with me, for it was evident that I had not been guilty of the leaſt offence to the public. I pray God to forgive, as I do, the Jury who have found me guilty of publiſhing a poem I concealed with care, and which is not even yet publiſhed, if any meaning can be affixed to any word in our language.

" But, my Lords, neither of the two verdicts could have been found againſt me, if the records had not been materially altered without my conſent, and, as I am informed, contrary to law. On the evening only before the two trials, ——— ——— ——— ——— —— cauſed the records to be altered —— — — — ——— againſt the conſent of my ſolicitor, and without my knowledge, for a dangerous illneſs, ariſing from an affair of honour, detained me at that time abroad. The alterations were of the utmoſt importance, and I was in conſequence tried the very next day on two new charges, of which I could know nothing. I will venture to declare this proceeding unconſtitutional. I am adviſed that it is illegal, and that it renders both the verdicts abſolutely void.

" I have ſtood forth, my Lords, in ſupport of the laws againſt the arbitrary acts of miniſters. This court of juſtice, in a ſolemn appeal reſpecting general Warrants, ſhewed their ſenſe of my conduct. I ſhall continue to reverence the wiſe and mild ſyſtem of Engliſh laws, and this Engliſh conſtitution. I have been much miſrepreſented, but under every ſpecies of perſecution, I will remain firm and friendly to the monarchy, dutiful and affectionate to our illuſtrious prince, who wears the crown, and to the whole Brunſwick line.

" As to all nice, intricate points of law, I am ſenſible how narrow and ſurcumſcribed my ideas are, but I have experienced the deep knowledge, and great abilities of my counſel. With them I reſt the legal part of my defence, ſubmitting every point to the judgment of this honorable court, and to the laws of England."

When Mr. Wilkes had finiſhed his ſpeech on Wedneſday laſt, in the court of King's bench at Weſtminiſter, Mr. Attorney-general moved for his immediate confinement, on the outlawry. He was anſwered by Mr. Sergeant Glyn, Mr. Recorder of London, Mr. Mansfield, and Mr. Davenport ſucceſſively, who all moved the court for a writ of error, which Mr. Attorney-general on being applied to laſt Saturday refuſed to grant.——They ſpecified ſeveral particulars in which the proceſs of the outlawry was erroneous, as ſufficient grounds for the motion, and offered to give any bail for Mr. Wilkes's appearance. The court then proceeded to give their opinions ſeriatim,—Lord Mansfield ſpoke long and forcibly on the impropriety of the procedure on both ſides; obſerving, that the Attorney-general could not, with the leaſt appearance of reaſon or of law, move for the comitment of a perſon who was not legally in court; nor had the council for the defendant any better plea for their motion in favour of a man who appeared gratis before them: He added, that had Mr. Wilkes been brought thither by a writ of capias ut legatum, the motion might then have been made with propriety, & the court might then have exerted, had they pleaſed, their diſcretionary power in accepting or refuſing the bail. His Lordſhip farther expreſſed himſelf very happy in having an opportunity of explaining his ſentiments publickly, before ſo large an audience, with regard to the charge brought againſt him, in ſubſtituting the word Tenor inſtead of Purport: declaring repeatedly, that he tho't himſelf bound in duty to grant it; that he conceived it to be the uniform practice of all the judges to grant ſuch amendments; that he had himſelf frequently repeated the practice in other caſes, without the leaſt objection being ever offered againſt it.—The reſt of the judges agreed with the chief juſtice in opinion, that as Mr. Wilkes was not legally before the court, no proceedings could be had upon his caſe; Mr. Juſtice Willes particularly remarking "That the officers of the crown had no right to throw upon that court the buſineſs of committing Mr. Wilkes on his gratis appearance, out of the common courſe of law, when they might have brought him before it legally by a writ of capias ut legatum, which it would have been very eaſy to execute, ſince he has notoriouſly appeared in public for ſeveral weeks paſt: and, in that caſe, the Attorney-general might have made his motion with propriety."

THE Connecticut COURANT.

Containing the freſheſt Advices, Both Foreign and Domeſtick.

The following is the proceedings of the Town of Boſton reſpecting the late diſturbances in that Place, taken from the papers as follow:

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the Town of Boſton, on Tueſday the 14th Inſtant, preſent a larger number than was ever known on any occaſion.—After very cool and deliberate debates, upon the diſtreſs'd Circumſtances of the Town, and the preſent critical Situation of their Affairs, it was unanimouſly Voted that a Committee wait on his Excellency the Governor of the Province, with the following Petition, viz.

Province of the Maſſachuſetts-Bay,
To His Excellency FRANCIS BERNARD, Eſq; Governor and Commander in Chief, in and over ſaid Province and Vice-Admiral of the ſame
The Inhabitants of the Town of BOSTON, in Town Meeting legally aſſembled.
Humbly ſhew,

THAT, your petitioners conſider the British conſtitution as the baſis of their ſafety and happineſs. By that, is eſtabliſhed no man ſhall be governed by laws, nor taxed but by himſelf, or repreſentatives legally and fairly choſen, and to which he does not give his own conſent. In open violation of theſe fundamental rights of Britons, laws & taxes are impoſed on us, to which we not only have not given our conſent, but againſt which we have firmly remonſtrated.—Dutiful petitions have been preferred to our moſt gracious Sovereign which (though to the great conſternation of the people, we now learn have been cruelly and inſidiouſly prevented reaching the Royal Preſence,) we have waited to receive a gracious anſwer to, with the greateſt attention to the public peace, untill we find ourſelves invaded with an armed force, ſeizing, impreſſing and impriſoning the perſons of our fellow ſubjects, contrary to expreſs acts of parliament.

Menaces have been thrown out, fit only for Barbarians, which already affect us in the moſt ſenſible manner, and threaten us with famine and deſolation, as all navigation is obſtructed, upon which alone our whole ſupport depends, and the town at this criſis in a ſituation, nearly ſuch, as if war was formally declared againſt it.

To contend with our parent ſtate, is in our idea the moſt ſhocking and dreadful extremity; but tamely to relinquiſh the only ſecurity we and our poſterity retain of the enjoyment of our lives and properties, without one ſtruggle, is ſo humiliating and baſe, that we cannot ſupport the reflection: We apprehend, Sir ! that it is at your option, in your power, and we would hope in your inclination, to prevent this diſtreſſed, and juſtly incenſed people, from affecting too much, and from the ſhame and reproach of attempting to little.

As the Board of Cuſtoms, have tho't fit of their own motion, to relinquiſh the exerciſe of their commiſſion here, and as we cannot but hope, that, being convinced of the impropriety and injuſtice, of the appointment of a Board, with ſuch enormous powers, & the inevitable deſtruction which would enſue from the exerciſe of their office, will never re-aſſume it. We flatter ourſelves, your Excellency will in tenderneſs to this people uſe the beſt means in your power, to remove the other grievance, we ſo juſtly complain of, and iſſue your immediate order, to the commander of his Majeſty's ſhip Romney, to remove from this harbour, till we ſhall be aſcertained of the ſucceſs of our applications. And your petitioners, as in Duty bound &c.

The Select-men with fourteen other gentlemen were then appointed a committee to wait on his Excellency the Governor and preſent the above petition that ſame evening.

After which the meeting was adjourned till Wedneſday the 15th.

His Excellency being at his country ſeat, at Roxbury, the gentlemen of the committee immediately ſet out in eleven carriages; on their arrival, they were very politely received, & their chairman preſented the petition to his Excellency, who was pleaſed to inform them, that next day in the afternoon, an anſwer ſhould be delivered in writing.

At the ſame Time the Town directed their Committee to prepare a Letter to Dennis De Berdt, Eſq; in London, ſetting forth the Conduct of the Commiſſioners and Officers of the Cuſtoms, and the Officers of his Majeſty's Ship Romney, relating to a Seizure made the preceding Friday, as well as the Behaviour of ſome of the Inhabitants the Evening following, in an impartial Manner, ſupported by Affidavits, to prevent the ill impreſſions that may be made, by a Miſrepreſentation; & then adjourn'd to the next Day.

At the Adjournment on Wedneſday the 15th, the Committee appointed to preſent the Town's Petition to be Governor, reported from his Excellency the following anſwer Viz.

GENTLEMEN,

MY Office and ſtation make me a very incompetent judge of the rights you claim againſt acts of parliament; and therefore it would be to no purpoſe for me to expreſs my opinion thereupon. All I can ſay is, that I ſhall not knowingly infringe any of your rights and privileges, but ſhall religiouſly maintain all thoſe which are committed to me as a ſervant of the King.

In regard to the impreſſing men for the ſervice of the King in his ſhips of war, it is practiſed in Great-Britain, and all other of his Majeſty's dominions, and therefore I cannot diſpute it in this part of them. But I ſhall uſe my utmoſt endeavours to get it regulated ſo as to avoid all the inconveniencies to this town which you are apprehenſive of: and from the knowledge I have of Capt. Corner, I have no doubt of my ſucceeding herein.

I cannot pretend to enter into any diſpute between you and your parent ſtate: I deſire to be a faithful ſervant in regard to both; & I ſhall think myſelf highly honored if I can be in the loweſt degree an inſtrument in preſerving a perfect conciliation between them. I can aſſure you that if it was as much in my power as it is in my will it would always be preſerved.

I am obliged by all kinds of duty, by my general inſtructions, and by his Majeſty's ſpecial orders to protect, aid and aſſiſt the Commiſſioners of the Cuſtoms (appointed under the great Seal of Great-Britain in purſuance of an act of parliament) and their officers in their perſons and offices. And whether they ſhall or ſhall not relinquiſh the exerciſe of their commiſſion, I muſt not fail to give them all the protection, aid and aſſiſtance in my power. If in ſo doing I ſhall give offence, I ſhall be ſorry for it. But I ſhall never regret the doing my duty.

I have no command over his Majeſty's ſhips and therefore cannot iſſue ſuch orders as you deſire, nor indeed any order to the commander of his Majeſty's ſhip the Romney. And it would be highly improper for me to make a requiſition to him to remove from this harbour, when I know he is ſtationed here by a ſuperior officer, and cannot remove hence but by his orders. FRA. BERNARD.

The Committee at the ſame time reported the Draſt of a Letter to Mr. DeBerdt, which was read and unanimouſly accepted, and the Committee were directed to forward the ſame, together with ſuch Affidavits as they ſhould obtain by the firſt Veſſel.

At this Adjournment the Town appointed another Committee to prepare Inſtructions for their Repreſentatives, at this alarming Criſis; and further adjourn'd to Friday the 17th at 3 o'clock.

On Friday the Town met by Adjournment, & received the report of their Committee and unanimouſly voted the following Inſtructions to their Repreſentatives. Viz.

To the Hon. JAMES OTIS, and THOMAS CUSHING, Eſq'rs; Mr. SAMUEL ADAMS, and JOHN HANCOCK, Eſq;

GENTLEMEN,

AFTER the Repeal of the late American Stamp-Act, we were happy in the pleaſing proſpect of a reſtoration of that tranquility and unanimity among ourſelves, and that harmony and affection between our parent country and us, which had generally ſubſiſted before that deteſtable act. But with the utmoſt grief and concern, we find that we flatter'd ourſelves too ſoon, and that the root of bitterneſs is yet alive.——The principle on which that act was founded continues in full force, and a revenue is ſtill demanded from America.

We have the mortification to obſerve one

Act of Parliament after another paſſed for the expreſs purpoſe of raiſing a revenue from us; to ſee our money continually collecting from us without our conſent, by an authority in the conſtitution of which we have no ſhare, and over which we have no kind of influence or controul; to ſee the little circulating caſh that remained among us for the ſupport of our trade, from time to time tranſmitted to a diſtant country, never to return, or what in our eſtimation is worſe if poſſible, appropriated to the maintainance of ſwarms of Officers and penſioners of idleneſs and luxury, whoſe example has a tendency to corrupt our morals, & whoſe arbitrary diſpoſitions will trample on our rights.

Under all theſe misfortunes and afflictions, however, it is our fixed reſolution to maintain our loyalty and duty to our moſt gracious Sovereign, a reverence and due ſubordination to the Britiſh Parliament as the ſupreme legiſlative in all caſes of neceſſity, for the preſervation of peace and good order among ourſelves, waiting with anxious expectation, for a favorable anſwer to the petitions and ſolicitations of this continent for relief. At the ſame time, it is our unalterable reſolution, at all times, to aſſert & vindicate our dear and invaluable rights and liberties, at the utmoſt hazard of our lives and fortunes, and we have a full & rational confidence that no deſigns formed againſt them will ever proſper.

That ſuch deſigns have been formed & are ſtill in being we have reaſon to apprehend. A multitude of Place men and Penſioners, and an enormous train of Underlings & Dependants, all novel in this country, we have ſeen already. Their imperious Tempers, their raſh inconſiderate and weak behaviour, are well known.

In this ſituation of affairs, ſeveral armed veſſels, and amongſt the reſt, his Majeſty's ſhip of war the Romney, have appear'd in our harbour, and the laſt as we believe, by the expreſs application of the Board of Commiſſioners, with deſign to over awe and terrify the inhabitants of this town into baſe compliances and unlimited ſubmiſſion, has been anchored within a cable's length of the wharves.

But paſſing over other irregularities, we are aſſured that the laſt alarming act of that ſhip, viz. the violent, and in our opinion illegal ſeizure of a veſſel lying at a wharf, and cutting of her faſts and removing her with an armed force in a hoſtile manner, under the protection of the King's ſhip, without any probable cauſe of ſeizure that we know of, or indeed any cauſe that has yet been made known: no libel or proſecution whatever, having yet been inſtituted againſt her was by expreſs order, or requeſt in writing of the Board of Commiſſioner to the commander of that ſhip.

In addition to all this, we are continually alarmed with rumours and reports of new revenue acts to be paſſed, new importations of Officers and Penſioners to ſuck the life-blood of the body politick while it is ſtreaming from the veins; freſh arrival of ſhips of war to be a ſtill ſeverer reſtraint upon our trade; and the arrival of a military force to dragoon us into paſſive obedience; orders & requiſitions tranſmitted to New York, Halifax and to England, for regiments & troops to preſerve the public peace.

Under the diſtreſſes ariſing from this ſtate of things, with the higheſt confidence in your integrity, abilities and fortitude, you will exert yourſelves Gentlemen, on this occaſion, that nothing be left undone that may conduce to our relief; and in particular we recommend it to your conſideration & diſcretion in the firſt place, to endeavour that impreſſes of all kinds may if poſſible be prevented. There is an act of Parliament in being, which has never been repealed, for the encouragement of the trade to America. We mean the 6th Ann Cha. xxxvii Sect. 9 it is enacted, "That no Mariner or other perſon who ſhall ſerve on board, or be retained to ſerve on board any Privateer, or trading Ship or Veſſel that ſhall be employed in any Part of America, nor any Mariner, or other perſon, being on ſhore in any part thereof ſhall be liable to be impreſſed or taken away by any Officer or Officers of, or belonging to her Majeſty's Ships of War, impowered by the Lord High Admiral, or any other Perſon whatſoever, unleſs ſuch Mariner ſhall have before deſerted from ſuch ſhip of War belonging to her Majeſty, at any Time after the fourteenth Day of February 1707, upon Pain that any Officer or Officers ſo impreſſing or taking away, any Mariner or other Perſon contrary to the Tenor and true meaning of this Act, ſhall forfeit to the Maſter or Owner or Owners of any ſuch ſhip or Veſſel, Twenty Pounds for every Man he or they ſhall ſo impreſs or take, to be recovered with full coſts of Suit in any part of her Majeſty's Dominions." So that any impreſſes of any mariner, from any veſſel whatever, appears to be in direct violation of an act of Parliament. In the next place, 'tis our deſire that you enquire and uſe your endeavours to promote a parliamentary enquiry for the authors and propagators of ſuch alarming rumours and reports as we have mentioned before; and whether the Commiſſioners or any other perſons whatever have really wrote or ſollicited for troops to be ſent here from New-York, Halifax, England or elſewhere, and for what end, and that you forward, if you think it expedient, in the Houſe of Repreſentatives reſolutions that every ſuch perſon who ſhall ſollicit or promote the importation of troops at this time, is an enemy to this town and province, and a diſturber of the peace and good order of both.

Then the Meeting was diſſolved.

The following is the Letter referred to, in the Earl of Hillſbrough's Letter, to the Aſſembly of Rhode Iſland, inſerted in our laſt, viz.

Copy of a Letter written by the Hon. the Houſe of Repreſentatives in the laſt Seſſion of the general Aſſembly, and ſent to the reſpective Aſſemblies on the continent.

Province of the Maſſachuſetts-Bay, Feb. 11 1768.

To the Honourable the Speaker of the Hon. Houſe of Repreſentatives of the Province of ———

SIR,

THE Houſe of Repreſentatives of this Province, have taken into their ſerious conſideration, the great difficulties that muſt accrue to themſelves and their conſtituents by the operation of the ſeveral acts of parliament impoſing duties and taxes on the American colonies.

As it is a ſubject in which every colony is deeply intereſted, they have no reaſon to doubt but your houſe is duly impreſs'd with its importance; and that ſuch conſtitutional meaſures will be come into as are proper. It ſeems to be neceſſary, that all poſſible care ſhould be taken that the repreſentations of the ſeveral aſſemblies, upon ſo delicate a point, ſhould harmonize with each other: The Houſe therefore hope that this letter will be candidly conſidered in no other light than expreſſing a diſpoſition freely to communicate their mind to a ſiſter colony, upon a common concern in the ſame manner as they would be glad to receive the ſentiments of your or any other Houſe of Aſſembly on the continent.

The Houſe have humbly repreſented to the miniſtry, their own ſentiments: That his Majeſty's high court of parliament is the ſupreme legiſlative power over the whole empire: That in all free ſtates the conſtitution is fixed: and as the ſupreme legiſlative derives its power and authority from the conſtitution, it cannot over-leap the bounds of it, without deſtroying its own foundation: That the conſtitution aſcertains and limits both ſovereignty and allegiance; and therefore his Majeſty's American ſubjects who acknowledge themſelves bound by the ties of allegiance, have an equitable claim to the full enjoyment of the fundamental rules of the Britiſh conſtitution: That it is an eſſential, unalterable right in nature, ingrafted into the Britiſh conſtitution as a fundamental law, and ever held ſacred and irrevocable by the ſubjects within the realm, that what a man hath honeſtly acquired, is abſolutely his own, which he may freely give, but cannot be taken from him without his conſent: That the American ſubjects may therefore, excluſive of any conſideration of charter rights, with a decent firmneſs adapted to the character of free men and ſubjects aſſert this natural conſtitutional right.

It is moreover their humble opinion, which they expreſs with the greateſt deference to the wiſdom of the parliament: that the acts made there, impoſing duties on the people of this province with the ſole & expreſs purpoſe of raiſing a revenue, are infringments of their natural and conſtitutional rights; becauſe, as they are not repreſented in the Britiſh parliament, his Majeſty's commons in Britain, by thoſe acts, grant their property without their conſent.

This Houſe further are of opinion, that their conſtituents, conſidering their local circumſtances, cannot by any poſſibility, be repreſented in the parliament; and that it will for ever be impracticable that they ſhould be equally repreſented there and conſequently not at all being ſeperated by an ocean of a thouſand leagues: that his Majeſty's royal predeceſſors, for this reaſon, were graciouſly pleaſed to form a ſubordinate legiſlative here, that their ſubjects might enjoy the unalienable right of a repreſentation. Alſo that conſidering the utter impracticability of their ever being fully and equally repreſented in parliament, and the great expence that muſt unavoidably attend even a partial repreſentation there, this houſe think, that a taxation of their conſtituents, even without their conſent, grievous as it is, would be preferable to any repreſentation that could be admitted for them there.

Upon theſe principles, and alſo conſidering that were the right in the parliament ever ſo clear, yet for obvious reaſons, it would be beyond the rule of equity, that their conſtituents ſhould be taxed on the manufactures of Great-Britain here, in addition to the duties they pay for them in England, and other advantages ariſing to Great Britain from the acts of trade; this houſe have prefered a humble dutiful and loyal petition to our moſt gracious Sovereign, and made ſuch repreſentation to his Majeſty's miniſters, as they apprehended would tend to obtain redreſs.

They have alſo ſubmitted to conſideration, whether any people can be ſaid to enjoy any degree of freedom, if the crown, in addition to its undoubted authority, of conſtituting a governor, ſhould appoint ſuch a ſtipend as it ſhall judge proper, without the conſent of the people, and at their expence; and whether, while the judges of the land, and other civil officers, hold not their commiſſions during good behaviour, their having ſalaries appointed for them by the crown, independent of the people, hath not a tendency to ſubvert the principles of equity, and endanger the happineſs and ſecurity of the ſubjects.

In addition to theſe meaſures, the houſe have wrote a letter to their agent Mr. De Berdt, the ſentiments of which he is directed to lay before the miniſtry; wherein they take notice of the hardſhip of the act for preventing mutiny and deſertion, which requires the governor and council to provide enumerated articles for the King's marching troops, and the people to pay the expence; and alſo the commiſſion of the gentlemen appointed commiſſioners of the cuſtoms to reſide in America, which authoriſes them to make as many appointments as they think fit, and to pay the appointees what ſums they pleaſe, for whoſe malconduct they are not accountable—From whence it may happen that officers of the crown may be multiplied to ſuch a degree as to become dangerous to the liberty of the people, by virtue of a commiſſion which doth not appear to this houſe to derive any ſuch advantages to trade, as many have been led to expect.

Theſe are the ſentiments and proceedings of this houſe; and as they have too much reaſon to believe that the enemies of the colonies have repreſented them to his Majeſty's miniſters and the parliament, as factious, diſloyal, and having a diſpoſition to make themſelves independent of the mother country, they have taken occaſion in the moſt humble terms, to aſſure his Majeſty, and his miniſters, that with regard to the people of this province, and as they doubt not of all the colonies, the charge is unjuſt.

The houſe is fully ſatisfied that your aſſembly is too generous and enlarged in ſentiment, to believe, that this letter proceeds from an ambition of taking the lead, or dictating to the other aſſemblies: they freely ſubmit their opinion to the judgment of others, and ſhall take it kind in your houſe, to point out to them any thing further which may be thought neceſſary.

This houſe cannot conclude, without expreſſing their firm confidence in the King, our common head and father, that the united and dutiful ſupplications of his diſtreſs'd American ſubjects, will meet with his royal and favourable acceptance.

NEW-YORK, June 20.

We hear from Philadelphia, That on Friday Afternoon, the 17th Inſtant, came up one of the moſt dreadful Storms of Hail that ever was known, attended with a frightful Noiſe ſomething like the Sound of Cannon, Drums and Bells mingled together. The Hail Stones were of various Figures and Sizes, from the Bigneſs of Peas to that of Turkey's Eggs, and ſome meaſured 9 Inches round, and were of irregular Figures like broken Piecs of Ice. About Reading Furnace, the Breadth of the Courſe of the Storm was about three Miles, it went at the Rate of about twelve Miles an Hour, and laſted fifteen Minutes. Great Numbers of Trees in the Orchards and Woods were blown down. The Fields of Wheat and Rye, &c. in its Way are entirely ruined, bruiſed or beat to Pieces, ſo that the Owners have been obliged to mow them for Fodder. The Damage in Lancaſter County only, is ſaid to be many Thouſand Pounds Value. About Dunkers-Town & other Places, Calves, Pigs, Fowls and ſome Cattle were killed, the Leaves all beat from the Trees, and every Window not ſecured by the ſhutters broke to Pieces. Many of the poorer ſort of People will be reduced to beggery.

BOSTON, June 30.

We are not able yet to give our Readers the Proceedings of the Honorable Houſe of Repreſentatives on the Meſſage of his Excellency the Governor, mentioned in our laſt: that, with one or two other Meſſages, and the Rt. Hon the Earl of Hillſborough's Letter, requiring the preſent Aſſembly to Reſcind a Reſolution of the laſt Houſe, on which their Letter (publiſhed in this Day's Paper) was founded, being ſtill under Conſideration of the Houſe—His Majeſty's Inſtruction to the Governor on this Matter is in caſe of a refuſal of the Houſe to comply with the Requiſition, to diſſolve the General Court immediately.

There have been ſeveral vague Reports ſpread the Week paſt thro' the Town and Country; but on Enquiry we can find ſo little Foundation for them, that they are not worth mentioning.

MR. Hipponax's megalopſycal compliments, to Mr. Polynomial, alias many names, according to its etumon, or original meaning, (if I miſtake not) this gentleman connoiſſeur, undoubtedly was ſelf taught by the verſatility of his own lynceao genius; and has it ſeems by his unparrallelled performances, monopolized ſuch a vaſt quantity of the moſt refined erudition, that he has infinitely out-ſtript the plebean part of mankind, in all human literature; ſo that he has thereby modeſtly raiſed himſelf in a climacterical manner vaſtly above the culmen cæli of our zenith, and there in a ſelf ſufficient manner, challenges the tripodi of the prævaricators of Apollo; and arbitrarily aſſumes the caduceus from good old Mercury, and there in his imaginary pantheon, places himſelf in ſome regiſical manner, conſtantly evibrating his caduce, with as great a degree of effrontry, as if he was Ipſo Facto, Jupiter's pedagogue and ſuperintendant; and is ever anon, favouring not only the literated, but alſo the cimerian part of mankind, as he anagogically ſuppoſes with ſome of his didactive, calligraphical performances. I mean eſpecially the laſt the public has been ſo undeſervedly favoured with, which was ſo ſcrupulouſly compoſed, and elegantly decorated, with ſuch a florid diction, and fuſtian phraſes; that any one might as eaſily have extracted a quantity of ſpeculative knowledge out of the things ſignified by the terms Tohu and Bohu, as that. Whether our virtuoſo by an innuendo, meaning Mr. Polynomial, be of the maſculine, feminine, or epicence gender, does not in any ſenſe whatever, as yet appear, by any performance of his. But this one thing is undeniably evident, that he has adopted an entire new mode of expreſſion, which I preſume is totally new and unheard of, before his ſagacity had inveſtigated it: and indeed it appears like a dulcarnon, coordated by the keeneſt efforts of a penetrating genius, and ſo made familiar for the emolument of the preſent and future exiſtences. This great and almoſt inſcrutable diſcovery, that has lain for ſo many ages in occultation, which this rare genius has lately made, and benevolently communicated to the public, is no more than this, to uſe his own new mode of expreſſion, the term her, which meander like, runs thro' the whole of his piece, doubtleſs meaning the town of New-Milford. Tautology is evermore deemed almoſt intolerable to perſons, that have a delicate taſte, yet I muſt (candid readers) rely wholly on your clemency for a pardon, ſhould I offend any by the reiteration of Mr. Polynomial's wonderful diſcovery, the term her, by an innuendo &c. Not to criticiſe, but without any manner of doubt the phraſe her, is a pronoun adjective, and is uſed in various ſenſes by didactic writers ſo far as I am acquainted; by ſome an interogation is propoſed? by others we learn who is the true poſſeſſor of a thing, by others we demonſtrate our meaning &c. But ſtill the term her, if it concords with any thing here, (be it ſpoken with all due reverence and ſubmiſſion) it muſt undeniably agree to, or with the term town, which is not expreſſed; therefore, moſt evidently is underſtood, or elſe with nothing at all. Therefore Mr. Polynomial, in order to be conſiſtent with himſelf, muſt allow that New-Milford is a city, and indeed ſo it is, when compared with L——ld; or elſe any one who is no more than a meer grammaticaſter, may eaſily ſee that Mr. Polynomial, does by ſome grammatical figure, (the cognomen of it perhaps he will in his next piece communicate to the public) make the feminine gender, to harmonize in all reſpects with the neuter: a wonderful thing this, that Juno's vulcan has lately diſcovered in grammar! and had I met with this new mode of phraſeology in any vulgar piece, I ſhould have beeen vaſtly diffident about the propriety of it, for I have always been taught by my grammar, directly the reverſe of this; and ſo ſhall hereafter ever think it abſolutely neceſſary, to avail myſelf of (what no critic will ever think of controverting) Mr. Polynomial's authority and precedent. And as no man's alchocodoneal circle is eternal, that only is the prerogative of a Deity; but ſtill may the ſublime Heaven, which with its benedictions propitiouſly fortify Mr. Polynomial with the ſtars, thoſe reſplendent and pellucid diamonds that decorated the high and lofty arch thereof, and fix him "the deſerver of his deſerts, that he really deſerves," on account of his late public performance; and may all to whom it may ever any way concern, unanimouſly give in their ſuffrages and ſay amen to it; that Mr. Polynomial is altogether worthy of this grand and noble epithet.

Meſſrs. Green & Watson,

Much has been ſaid lately in the news-papers, concerning the Diſſidents in Poland, and at the ſame time many of your readers are ignorant of the facts relating to them, the following piece taken from a late magazine I think you would do well to publiſh.

ON the death of Sigiſmond the firſt, Poland, which had before been an abſolute Monarchy, aſſumed the form of a republic, and that at a diet aſſembled in the year 1573, by the grand marſhal Firley, a proteſtant, the peace between the Greeks, proteſtants, and catholicks, was eſtabliſhed as a fundamental law of the nation; he adds that the catholicks who were at that time the leaſt numerous of the three perſuaſions, ſo far from claiming any ſuperiority over the other two, conſidered this agreement as highly advantageous to their cauſe, and thought themſelves extremely happy, that their eccleſiaſtical property and revenues were granted to perſons of their own belief, in like manner as thoſe appertaining to the Greeks were granted to the Greeks only.

To render this law permanent, the three religions promiſed each other mutual defence and affection, and declared, that a difference in faith ſhould never prove the cauſe of civil diſention, unanimouſly reſolving to make an example of any perſon, who under ſuch a pretence, ſhould excite freſh diſturbances.

Notwiſtanding this ſolemn agreement however, and a variety of ſubſequent treaties, in which the Greeks and proteſtants, how diſtinguiſhed by the name of Diſſidents, were confirmed in all the natural rights of Poliſh citizens; the papiſts, as they gained ſtrength uſurped an authority over them, and having gradually engroſſed the government into their own hands, they have long exerciſed tyrannies, which are now increaſed to an extravagance wholly intollerable; they prohibit baptiſms, and burials in Diſſident churches; they annul all marriages, and declare the children baſtards—tearing them from their parents, and placing them in convents by force—they convert by torture, thoſe whoſe anceſtors were catholicks, ruſh into the preſence of dying perſons to make proſelytes, and drag the dead bodies where they have been diſappointed in this view, through the ſtreets, nay, they dig them out of the very grave and throw them to the dogs; and to crown all, a right reverend fiend, the biſhop of Cracow, has lately made a motion in the diet, "to puniſh with death, confiſcation of goods and infamy to him and his poſterity, every perſon however diſtinguiſhed, who ſhall for the future ſpeak in favour of the Diſſidents."—Such is the preſent ſituation of the Greeks and proteſtants in Poland,—but the oppreſſion is not to be borne any longer, and the Diſſidents, driven to diſpair, are now prepared to make one ſpirited effort for the recovery of their rights, in which it is to be hoped they will meet with aſſiſtance from all the reformed nations in Europe.

BOSTON, June 27.

The Honorable Houſe of Repreſentatives of this Province in their preſent Seſſion of the General Aſſembly, have received Letters from divers Houſes of Repreſentatives, &c. of the other Colonies, in Anſwer to the Circular Letter of the late Houſe of the 11th of February laſt, Viz.

SIR, VIRGINIA, MAY 3 1768.

THE Houſe of Burgeſſes of this Colony proceeded very ſoon after they met to the conſideration of your important Letter, of the 11th of February 1768, written in the name and by order of the Houſe of Repreſentatives of your Province; and I have received their particular directions to deſire you to inform that honorable Houſe, that they applaud them for their attention to American Liberty, and that the ſteps they have taken thereon, will convince them of their opinion of the fatal tendency of the acts of Parliament complain'd of, & of their fixed reſolution to concur with the other colonies in their application for redreſs.

After the moſt deliberate conſultation, they tho't it their duty to repreſent to the Parliament of Great-Britain, that they are truly ſenſible of the happineſs and ſecurity, they derive from their connexions with, and dependencies on Gr. Britain, and are under the greateſt concern that any unlucky incident ſhould interrupt that ſalutary harmony, which they wiſh ever to ſubſiſt. They lament that the remoteneſs of their ſituation often expoſes them to ſuch miſrepreſentations, as are apt to involve them in cenſures of diſloyalty to their Sovereign, and the want of a proper reſpect to the BritiſhParliament; whereas they have indulged themſelves in the agreable perſuaſion, that they ought to be conſider'd as inferior to none of their fellow ſubjects in loyalty and affection.

That they do not affect an independency of their parent kingdom, the proſperity of which they are bound to the utmoſt of their abilities to promote, but chearfully acquieſce in the authority of Parliament to make laws for preſerving a neceſſary dependance and for regulating the trade of the colonies. Yet they cannot conceive, and humbly inſiſt, it is not eſſential to ſupport a proper relation between a mother country and colonies tranſplanted from her, that ſhe ſhou'd have a right to raiſe money from them without their conſent, and preſume they do not aſpire to more than the natural rights of Britiſh ſubjects, when they aſſert, that no power on earth has a right to impoſe taxes on the people, or take the ſmalleſt portion of their property, without their conſent, given by their Repreſentatives in Parliament.—— This has ever been conſidered as the chief pillar of the conſtitution; without this ſupport no man can be ſaid to have the leaſt ſhadow of liberty, ſince they can have no property in that, which another can by right take from them when he pleaſes, without their conſent.

That their anceſtors brought over with them intire, and tranſmitted to their deſcendants, the natural & conſtitutional rights they had enjoyed in their native country; and the firſt principles of the Britiſh conſtitution were early ingrafted into the conſtitution of the colonies. Hence a legiſlative authority, ever eſſential in all free ſtates, was derived, and aſſimulated as nearly as might be to that in England; the executive power and the right of aſſenting, or diſſenting to all laws reſerved to the Crown, and the privilege of chooſing their own repreſentatives continued to the people, and confirmed to them by repeated and expreſs ſtipulations. The government thus eſtabliſhed, they enjoyed the fruits of their own labour with a ſerenity which liberty only can impart. Upon preſſing occaſions they applied to his Majeſty for relief, and gratefully acknowledge they have frequently received it from the mother country; whenever their aſſiſtance was neceſſary requiſitions have conſtantly been made from the Crown, to the repreſentatives of the people, who have complied with them to the utmoſt extent of their abilities. The ample proviſion made for the ſupport of the civil government, in the reign of K. Charles the ſecond, and at his requeſt, and the large ſupplies voted during the laſt war, upon requiſitions from his Majeſty and his royal grandfather, afford early and late inſtances of the diſpoſitions of the aſſemblies of his colony, and are ſufficient proofs that the Parliament of Great-Britain did not, 'till lately aſſume a power of impoſing taxes on the people, for the purpoſe of raiſing a revenue.

To ſay that the Commons of Great-Britain, have a right to impoſe internal taxes on the inhabitants of this continent, who are not and cannot be repreſented, is in effect to bid them prepare for a ſtate of ſlavery.—— What muſt be their ſituation ſhou'd ſuch a right be eſtabliſh'd? The colonies have no conſtitutional check on their liberality in giving away their money, cannot have an opportunity of explaining their grievances, or of pointing out the eaſieſt method of taxation, for their doom will generally be determined before they are acquainted that the ſubject has been agitated in Parliament, and Commons bear no proportion of the taxes they lay upon them. The notion of a virtual repreſentation, which wou'd render all our rights merely ideal, has been ſo often & ſo clearly refuted, that nothing need be ſaid on that head.

The oppreſſive ſtamp-act confeſſedly impoſed internal taxes, and the late acts of parliament, giving and granting certain duties in the Britiſh colonies, plainly tend to the ſame point. Duties have been impoſed to reſtrain the commerce of one part of the Empire that was likely to prove injurious to another, and by this means the welfare of the whole promoted; but duties impoſed on ſuch of the Britiſh exports as are neceſſaries of life, to be paid by the coloniſts on importation, without any view to the intereſts of commerce, but merely to raiſe a revenue or in other words to compel the coloniſts to part with their money againſt their inclinations, they conceive to be a tax internal to all intents and purpoſes. And can it be tho't juſt or reaſonable, reſtricted as they are in their trade, confined as they are in their exports, obliged to purchaſe theſe very neceſſaries at the Britiſh market, that they ſhould now be told they ſhall not have them without paying a duty for them?

The act ſuſpending the legiſlative power of New-York, they conſider as ſtill more alarming to the colonies, tho' it has that ſingle province in view. If the parliament can compel them to furniſh a ſingle article to the troops ſent over, they may by the ſame rule, oblige them to furniſh cloaths, arms, and every other neceſſary, even the pay of the officers and ſoldiers, a doctrine replete with every miſchief, and utterly ſubverſive of all that's dear and valuable: For what advantage can the people of the colonies derive from their right of chooſing their own Repreſentatives, if thoſe repreſentatives when choſen, not permitted to exerciſe their own judgements, were under a neceſſity (on pain of being deprived of their legiſlative authority) of inforcing the mandates of a Britiſh Parliament.

This, Sir, is a ſketch of their ſentiments, as they are expreſs'd in a petition to his Majeſty, a memorial to the Right Honorable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and in a Remonſtrance to the Knights Citizens and Burgeſſes of Great-Britain in Parliament Aſſembled. In all theſe proceedings the Council of this Colony have concurred, and have directed their Agent, James Abercromby, Eſq; to join Edward Montague, Eſq; the Agent for this Colony, to apply for redreſs of the grievances they ſo juſtly complain of. Copies were delivered to the Preſident of the Council, now Commander in chief who is deſired to tranſmit them to the Secretary of State appointed by his Majeſty to manage the affairs of North America, and Mr. Montague is enjoined to conſult the Agents of the other Colonies, and co-operate with them in every meaſure that ſhall be thought neceſſary to be taken on this critical point.

They truſt they have expreſs'd themſelves with a firmneſs that becomes freemen pleading for eſſential rights, and with a decency that will take off every imputation of faction or diſloyalty. They repoſe their confidence in his Majeſty, who is ever attentive to the complaints of his ſubjects, and is ever ready to relieve their diſtreſs; and they are not without hopes that the colonies united in a decent and regular oppoſition, may prevail on a new Houſe of Commons to put a ſtop to meaſures ſo directly repugnent the intereſts both of the MotherCountry and her Colonies. In the name and by order of the Houſe and Burgeſſes,

I am with the greateſt reſpect
Your moſt obedient humble ſervant,
PEYTON RANDOLPH, Speaker.

Colony of New-Jerſey, May 9. 1768.

SIR,

AS ſoon as the Houſe of Repreſentatives of this Colony met, which was on the 12th of April, I laid your Letter of the 11th of February before them.

Senſible that the law you complain of, is a ſubject in which every Colony is intereſted the Houſe of Repreſentatives readily perceived the neceſſity of an immediate application to the King, and that it ſhould correſpond with thoſe of the other Colonies; but as they have not had an opportunity of knowing the ſentiments of any other Colony, but that of the Maſſachuſetts-Bay they have endeavoured to conform themſelves to the mode adopted by you.

They have therefore given inſtructions to their Agent and enjoined his attention to the ſubject of their Petition.

The freedom with which the Houſe of Repreſentatives of the Maſſachuſetts Bay have communicated their ſentiments upon a matter of ſo great concern to all the Colonies, hath been received by this Houſe, with that candor, the ſpirit and deſign of your letter merits——And at the ſame time, that they acknowledge themſelves obliged to you for communicating your ſentiments to them, they have directed me to aſſure you that they are deſirous to keep up a correſpondence with you, and to unite with the Colonies, if neceſſary, in further ſupplications to his Majeſty, to relieve his diſtreſſed American ſubjects. In the name and by order of the Houſe of Repreſentatives, I am,

Sir, your moſt obedient humble ſervant,
CORTLAND SKINNER, Speaker.

Copy of a LETTER from the Speaker of the Houſe of Repreſentatives of the Colony of Connecticut.

Colony of Connecticut, 11th June 1768.

BY Order of the Houſe of Repreſentatives of this Colony, I am to acknowledge the Receipt of your Letter of the 11th February laſt, communicating the ſenſe which the Repreſentative Body of your Province have of the great Difficulties to which they & their conſtituents muſt be ſubjected by the operation of the ſeveral acts of the Britiſh parliament by you refer'd to, and the meaſures they have gone into for obtaining redreſs of thoſe grievances.

Your letter was laid before this houſe of repreſentatives early in the ſeſſion which is now juſt cloſed. They conſider the ſaid acts of parliament in their nature, tendency and operation as matters of ſerious concern and very intereſting importance to this and all the Engliſh American Colonies, and are of opinion that no conſtitutional meaſures proper for obtaining relief ought to be neglected by any, and that it is of importance their meaſures for that end ſhould harmonize with each other, as their ſucceſs may in a great degree depend on their union in ſentiment & practice, on this critical and intereſting occaſion.

The Houſe therefore very kindly accepted your letter, and are perſuaded from the importance of the cauſe, the laudable zeal, and the generous exertions of the province of the Maſſachuſetts-Bay, from time to time, in favor of her conſtitutional freedom that it proceeded only from a hearty concern for the juſt rights, the common intereſt and welfare of theſe Colonies.

The Houſe are deſirous ever to cultivate the ſtricteſt friendſhip and harmony with the neighbouring colonies, and with none more than your's, and will be always ready to receive with the utmoſt candor their opinion in any matters of general concern, and equally willing on all proper occaſions to communicate their own ſentiments on any ſubject of our common welfare, in full confidence they would meet with the ſame friendly and candid acceptance.

This Houſe have alſo taken into their ſerious conſideration the operation of the ſaid acts of parliament and are deeply ſenſible that this, in common with her Siſter Colonies, muſt thereby be involved in great difficulties, which are perhaps a prelude to ſtill greater, and have purſued meaſures for obtaining redreſs ſimilar to thoſe adopted by the houſe of Repreſentatives of your province.

We cannot but entertain, with you, the ſtrongeſt confidence in the King's royal clemency, juſtice and goodneſs, that the united dutiful ſupplications of his faithful diſtreſſed ſubjects in America, will meet with a kind and gracious acceptance. In the name and by order of the Houſe of Repreſentatives, I am, Sir, with great eſteem and reſpect, your moſt obedient humble ſervant,

ZEBULON WEST, Speaker.

To the Hon. the Speaker of the Houſe of Repreſentives in the Province of the Maſſachuſetts-Bay.

Province of Maſſachuſetts Bay.

BOSTON, July 4.

On Tueſday the 21ſt Inſtant His Excellency the GOVERNOR ſent the following Meſſage to the Honourable Houſe of REPRESENTATIVES, viz

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Repreſentatives,

I HAVE his Majeſty's Orders to make a Requiſition to you, which I communicate to you in the very Words in which I have received it.—I muſt deſire you to take it into immediate Conſideration, and I aſſure you that your Reſolutions thereon will have moſt important Conſequences to the Province——I am myſelf merely miniſterial in this Buſineſs, having received his Majeſty's Inſtructions for all I have to do in it—I heartily wiſh you may ſee how forceable the Expediency of your giving this Teſtimonial of your Duty and Submiſſion is at this Time; if you ſhould think otherwiſe I muſt nevertheleſs do my Duty.

F. BERNARD.

Council Chamber,
June 21ſt, 1768.

"IT gives great Concern to his Majeſty to find that the ſame Moderation which appeared by your Letter No. 3. to have been adopted at the Beginning of the Seſſion in a full Aſſembly had not continued, and inſtead of that Spirit of Prudence and Reſpect to the Conſtitution, which ſeemed at that Time to influence the Conduct of a large Majority of the Members, a thin Houſe at the Cloſe of the Seſſion ſhould have preſumed to revert to and Reſolve upon a Meaſure of ſo inflammatory a Nature as that of Writing to the other Colonies on a ſubject of their intended Repreſentation againſt ſome late Acts of Parliament.—His Majeſty conſiders this Step as evidently tending to create unwarrantable Combinations, to excite an unjuſtifiable Oppoſition to the Conſtitutional Authority of Parliament, and to revive thoſe unhappy Diviſions and Diſtractions which have opperated ſo prejudicially to Great-Britain and the Colonies.——After what had paſſed in the former part of the Seſſions and after the declared Senſe of ſo large a Majority when the Houſe was full.——His Majeſty cannot but conſider this as a very unfair Proceeding, and the Reſolutions taken thereupon to be contrary to the real Senſe of the Aſſembly and procured by ſurprize; and therefore it is the King's Pleaſure, that ſo ſoon as the General Court is again aſſembled at the Time preſcribed by the Charter, you ſhould require of the Houſe of Repreſentatives in his Majeſty's Name to Reſcind the Reſolution that gave Birth to the Circular Letter from the Speaker, and to declare their Diſapprobation of and Diſſent to that raſh and haſty Proceeding.

"His Majeſty has the fulleſt Reliance on the Affections of his good Subjects in the Maſſachuſetts Bay, and has obſerved with Satisfaction that Spirit of Decency and Love of Order which has diſcovered itſelf in the Conduct of the moſt conſiderable of its Inhabitants, and therefore his Majeſty has the better Ground to hope that the Attempt made by a deſperate Faction to diſturb the public Tranquility will be diſcountenanced, and that the Execution of the Meaſure recommended to you will not meet with any Difficulty"——

The Houſe by Meſſage deſired the Governor to ſend them the Remainder of the above Letter, alſo another Letter from his Lordſhip which had been communicated to his Majeſty's Council, and Copies of ſuch Letters as his Excellency had wrote on the ſubject contained in his Meſſage, with the King's Inſtructions to him on this Matter.

I Should have communicated to you the whole of the Earl of Hillſborough's Letter relating to the Buſineſs which I laid before you on the 21ſt Inſtant, if I had not been deſirous that your Compliance with his Majeſty's Requiſitions might have its full Merit, by its appearing to be entirely dictated by a ſenſe of your Duty; but ſince you deſire to know what my further Orders are, I herewith ſend you a copy of the Part of the Letter relative to this Buſineſs, which contains all my Inſtructions thereon; and as I know you will not expect that I ſhould diſobey the King's poſitive Commands, I muſt deſire that if you ſhall Reſolve to oblige me to execute them, you will, previouſly to your giving your final Anſwer, prevent the inconvenience that may fall upon the People for want of the annual Tax-Bill, which I underſtand is not yet ſent up to the Board. ——If I am obliged to Diſſolve the General Court, I ſhall not think myſelf at Liberty to call another, till I ſhall receive his Majeſty's Commands for that Purpoſe, which will be too late to prevent the Treaſurer iſſuing his Warrant for the whole Tax granted by the Act of the laſt Year.

As to the Letter of the Earl of Hillſborough which I communicated to the Council, I may beg leave to be the proper Judge of the Time and Occaſion of communicating any Papers I receive to the Council or Houſe. If I had then thought it expedient to lay it before the Houſe I ſhould then have done it; when I ſhall think it ſo I ſhall do it.

As to your Requeſt of Copies of my Letters to the Secretary of State, you may aſſure yourſelves that I ſhall not ever make public my Letters to his Majeſty's Miniſters, but upon my own Motion and upon my own Reaſons.

F. BERNARD.

Council Chamber,
June 24 1768.

——"IF it ſhould, and if, notwithſtanding the apprehenſions which may be juſtly entertained of the ill conſequences of this factious ſpirit which ſeems to have influenced the Reſolution of the Aſſembly at the concluſion of the laſt, the new Aſſembly ſhould refuſe to comply with his Majeſty's reaſonable expectations, it is the King's pleaſure you ſhould immediately diſſolve them, and tranſmit to me to be laid before his Majeſty an account of your proceeding thereon, to the End his Majeſty may if he thinks fit, lay the whole matter before his Parliament that ſuch proviſions as ſhall be found neceſſary may be made to prevent for the future a conduct of ſo extraordinary and unconſtitutional a nature—It is not his Majeſty's intention that a faithful diſcharge of your duty ſhould opperate to your own prejudice, or to the diſcontinuance of any neceſſary eſtabliſhment—proper care will be taken for the ſupport and dignity of Government"

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Repreſentatives.

IT is now a full week ſince I laid before you, his Majeſty's requiſition ſignified by his Secretary of State I muſt therefore deſire you to come to a reſolution upon it, for I cannot admit of a much longer delay, without conſidering it as an anſwer in the negative. FRA. BERNARD.

Ordered, That Doctor Calef, Captain Thayer, Colonel Stoddard, Major Doane, and Colonel Noyes, wait on the Governor, with the following meſſage

May it pleaſe your Excellency,

"IN anſwer to your Excellency's meſſage of the 28th inſtant, the Houſe of Repreſentatives requeſt that your Excellency would favour this General Court with a receſs, that they may conſult their conſtituents reſpecting the requiſition contained in your meſſage of the 21ſt inſtant in conſequence of the Earl of Hillſborough's letter to your Excellency."

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Repreſentatives:

I cannot conſiſtently with my ſenſe of my duty prorogue or adjourn the General Court until I have received your anſwer to his Majeſty's requiſition. I muſt therefore repeat my requeſt to you, to bring this matter to a concluſion.

June 29, 1768. F. BERNARD.

In the Houſe of Repreſentatives, June 30 1768

Reſolved, that Colonel Brown, Major Frye, Mr. Greenleaf, Brigadier Prebble and Mr. Foſter of Harwich, be a committee, to wait on his Excellency with the following anſwer to his meſſages of the twenty-firſt and twenty fourth inſtant,

T. CUSHING Speaker.

May it pleaſe your Excellency.

THE Houſe of Repreſentatives of this his Majeſty's antient and loyal province of the Maſſachuſetts Bay, have, with the greateſt deliberation, conſidered your meſſages of the twenty firſt and twenty-fourth inſtant, with the ſeveral extracts from the letter of the Right Honourable the Earl of Hillſborough, his Majeſty's principal Secretary of State for North-American affairs, dated the twenty-ſecond of April laſt, which your Excellency has thought fit to communicate. We have alſo received the written anſwer which your Excellency was pleaſed to give the committee of this houſe, directed

WANTED immediately, as an Apprentice to the Printing Buſineſs, a healthy, good natur'd Lad, about 12 or 14 Years of Age, that can read and write. Inquire at the Printing-Office in Hartford.

[illegible] on you the twenty ninth inſtant, with meſſage, humbly requeſting a receſs, that the members might be favoured with an opportunity to conſult their conſtituents at this important criſis, when a direct and peremptory requiſition is made of a new and ſtrange conſtructure and ſo ſtrenuouſly urged, viz that we ſhould immediately reſcind the reſolution of the laſt houſe, to tranſmit circular letters to the other Britiſh colonies on the continent of North-America, barely intimating a deſire that they wou'd join in ſimilar, dutiful and loyal petitions to our moſt gracious Sovereign, for the redreſs of the grievances occaſioned by ſundry late acts of parliament, calculated for the ſole purpoſe of raiſing a revenue in America.

We have moſt diligently reviſed not only the ſaid reſolution, but alſo the circular letter written and ſent, in conſequence thereof and after all, they both appear to us, to be conceived in terms not only prudent and moderate in themſelves, but reſpectful to the authority of that truly auguſt body, the parliament of Great Britain, and very dutiful and loyal in regard to his Majeſty's ſacred perſon, crown and dignity; of all which, we entertain ſentiments of the higheſt reverence and moſt ardent affection, and ſhould we ever depart from theſe ſentiments,—We ſhould ſtand ſelf condemned as unworthy the name of Britiſh ſubjects, deſcended from Britiſh anceſtors, intimately allied and connected in intereſt and inclination with our fellow ſubjects, the Commons of Great Britain. We cannot but expreſs our deep concern that a meaſure of the late houſe, in all reſpects ſo innocent in moſt ſo virtuous and laudable, and as we conceive ſo truly patriotic ſhould have been repreſented to adminiſtration in the odious light of a party, and factious meaſure, and that, puſhed through by reverting in a thin houſe to, and reconſidering what in a full aſſembly had been rejected. It was, and is a matter of notoriety, that more than eighty members were preſent at the reconſideration of the vote againſt application to the other colonies. The vote of reconſideration was obtained by a large majority.—It is, or ought to be well known, that the preſence of eighty members makes a full houſe, this number being juſt double; that by the Royal Charter of the province required to conſtitute the third branch of our colony legiſlature. Your Excellency might have been very eaſily informed, if you was not; that the meaſures of the late houſe, in regard to ſundry acts of the late parliament for the ſole purpoſe of raiſing a North American revenue, was generally carried by three to one, and we dare appeal to your Excellency for the truth of his aſſertion, namely, that there were many perſons in the majority in all views as reſpectable as the very beſt of the minority: That ſo far from any ſiniſter views, were the committe of the late houſe appointed and directed to take into their moſt ſerious conſideration, the then preſent ſtate of the province, from going into any raſh or precipitate meaſures; that they for ſome days, actually delayed their firſt report, which was a letter to Mr Agent De Berdt, on this candid and generous principle, that thoſe who were reaſonably preſuppoſed to be moſt warmly attached to all your Excellency's meaſures, eſpecially thoſe for furthering and by all means enforcing the acts for levying a N. American revenue might be preſent and a more equal conteſt enſue.—It would be incredible, ſhould any one aſſert that your Excellency wanted a true information of all theſe things which were not done, or deſired to be hid in another but were notoriouſly tranſacted in the open light at noon day. It is to us altogether incomprehenſible that we ſhould be required on the peril of a diſſolution of the Great and General Court or Aſſembly of this province, to reſcind a reſolution of a former Houſe of Repreſentatives, when it was evident that reſolution has no exiſtence, but as a mere hiſtorical fact.

Your Excellency muſt know that the reſolution referred to, is, to ſpeak in the language of the common law, not now, 'executory' but to all intents and purpoſes 'executed.' The Circular letters have been ſent, and many of them have been anſwered, thoſe anſwers are now in the public papers; the public, the world, muſt and will judge of the propoſals, purpoſes and anſwers, we could as well reſcind thoſe letters as the reſolves, and both would be equally fruitleſs if by reſcinding, as the word properly imports is meant a repeal and nullifying the reſolution referred to, but if, as is moſt probable, by the word reſcinding is intended a paſſing a vote of this Houſe in direct and expreſs diſapprobation of the meaſure above mentioned as 'illegal inflamatory and tending to promote unjuſtifiable combinations 'againſt his Majeſty's peace, crown & dignity.' We muſt take the liberty to teſtify and publicly to declare, that we take it to be the native, inherent and indefeaſible right of the ſubject, jointly or ſeverally to petition the King for redreſs of grievances, provided always that the ſame be done, in a decent, dutiful, loyal and conſtitutional way, without tumult, diſorder or confuſion——Furthermore we are alſo humbly but clearly and very firmly of opinion that the petition of the late dutiful and loyal Houſe to his Majeſty, and their other very orderly applications for the redreſs of grievances, have had the moſt deſirable tendencies and effects to keep men's minds in eaſe and quiet: We muſt be excuſed in thinking that the people were in truth patiently waiting for the meeting of the new Parliament & their meaſures and his Majeſty's pleaſure on: it is probable that they would every where have thus waited the great event, had it not been revealed here that the late provincial applications for redreſs of grievances, were ſome how ſtrangely obſtructed, and the province in conſequence of miſinformation and miſrepreſentation moſt unfortunately fallen under the royal diſpleaſure, and to compleat this misfortune, it was not only divulged to the other colonies, but ſome actually received the information, before it was made known here, that the Houſe had been accuſed to his Majeſty or his miniſters, or fallen under the diſpleaſure of the one, or the cenſure of the other.

"On the whole Sir we will conſider his moſt ſacred Majeſty under God, as our King, and beſt protector and common father and ſhall ever bear him true and faithful allegiance——We alſo regard your Excellency as the repreſentative of the greateſt potentate on earth; and at all times have been, and ſhall be, ſo far as was or is, or could conſiſt with the indefeaſible purpoſes of preſerving life, liberty and property, been moſt ready and willing to treat you with all that reſpect juſtly due to your high rank and ſtation: But we are conſtrained to ſay, that we are diſagreeably convinced that your Excellency entertains not that parental regard for the welfare of the good people of this province, which you have ſometimes been pleaſed to profeſs, and which they have at all times an irrefragible right to expect from their Governor. Your Excellency has tho't fit not only to deny us a receſs to conſult our conſtituents in regard to the preſent requiſition, but have aſſured us in effect, that you ſhall take ſilence, at leaſt a delay, not as uſual for a conſent, but for a denial.——You have alſo thought fit to inform us, that you cannot think yourſelf at liberty in caſe of the diſſolution of this, to call another aſſembly without the expreſs orders of his Majeſty for that purpoſe; at the ſame time, your Excellency has been pleaſed to aſſure us, you have communicated the whole of Lord Hillſborough's letter, and your inſtructions ſo far as relates to the requiſition. In all this, however, we cannot find that your Excellency is more than directed to diſſolve the preſent aſſembly, in caſe of non compliance on the part of the Houſe. If the votes of the Houſe are to be controuled by direction of a Miniſter, we have left us but a vain ſemblance of liberty. We know it to be the juſt prerogative of the crown, at pleaſure to diſſolve a parliament: We are alſo ſenſible, that conſiſtently with the great charter of this province, your Excellency, when you ſhall think fit, with or without the intervention of the Miniſter, can diſſolve the Great and General Court of this colony, & that without the leaſt obligation to convene another within the year. But ſhould it ever grow into uſe for any ill diſpoſed Governor of the province, by means of a miſtaken or wilfully wrong ſtate of facts, to procure orders for a diſſolution, that the ſame charter will be of no value. We take this opportunity faithfully and firmly to repreſent to your Excellency, that the new revenue acts are not only diſagreeable to, but in every view are deemed an unſupportable burthen and grievance by (with a very few exceptions) all the freeholders and other inhabitants of this juriſdiction; and we beg leave once for all to aſſure your Excellency that thoſe of this opinion are of no party or expiring faction: they have been, are, and at all times will be ready to devote their lives and fortunes to his Majeſty's ſervice.

Of loyalty, this majority could as reaſonably boaſt as any who happen to enjoy your Excellency's ſmiles. Their reputation, rank, and fortune are at leaſt equal to thoſe who have ſometimes been conſidered as the only friends to good government, while ſome of the beſt blood of the colony, and even in two houſes of aſſembly lawfully convened and duly acting have been openly charged with the unpardonable crime of oppugnation to the royal authority——We have now only to inform your Excellency, that this Houſe have voted not to reſcind as required, the reſolution of the laſt Houſe; and that on a diviſion on the queſtion, there were ninety-one nays, and ſeventeen yeas. In this we have been actuated by a conſcientious, and finally a clear and determined ſenſe of duty to God, to our King and country, and to the lateſt poſterity: and we moſt ardently, wiſh and humbly pray that in your future conduct your Excellency may be influenced by the ſame principles."

COMPLAINANT, [Nº 17.]

I Look upon myſelf, with regard to theſe papers, to be as ſovereign as the great Mogul is in his territories, not only as to the choice of ſubjects, but the manner and method of communicating my thoughts upon them; and therefore by virtue of my prerogative, I purpoſe that this week's complaint ſhall conſiſt of a number of aphoriſtical ſentences——thoſe that are peeping for my creed, may perhaps call them articles of faith——thoſe that care nothing about orthodoxy nor hereſy, will probably look upon them as whimſical conceits——and thoſe that don't underſtand them, and yet are wiſe in their own conceit, will undoubtedly boldly pronounce them a meſs of trumpery——having uttered this prediction, I proceed to the caſe in hand——I ſhall deliver myſelf, not in thirty-nine articles, leſt it look like ſome kind of a reflection &c.——but I will (falling ſhort ten) do it in twenty nine articles, as follows.——

1. THE moſt incompetent judges of a literary performance, are uſually the moſt forward and cenſorious, in paſſing ſentence upon it.

2. Some that in a time of ſafety, are bold in the cauſe of liberty, may be the firſt that will ſkulk in a time of danger.

3. Many a glorious victory has been obtained by drinking healths——I mean over modeſty, and temperance.

4. If the American geeſe did not cackle ſo much, they would be more likely to lay their eggs ſafely.

5. I will always be jealous of the honeſty of that man's deſigns, who manifeſts an unneceſſary and yet anxious curioſity as to my affairs, and aſſures me "I need be under no concern as to confiding in him."

6. It would be much better for us, if there was "leſs CRY and more WOOL," and it would be more to our advantage, if we did not cry "roaſt meat" ſo loud, only in imaginary proſpect of faring well.

7. When the major part of the pariſh are fornicators, 'tis no ſcandal to walk the broad alley.

8. Some people that are the moſt ſteady in going to meeting, ſleep the moſt when they are there.

9. I believe from my ſoul without equivocation, or mental reſervation, that a ſolemn countenance as often covers hypocriſy, as chearfulneſs and feſtivity manifeſt ſinful levity.

10. Lo, this have I ſeen, that ſome who have diſtinguiſh'd themſelves by alarming fears of increaſing errors, have not always been actuated by a hearty love to the truth.

11. I believe that ſome great ſticklers in church and ſtate, do not publiſh to the world, all the principles moving and all the ends aimed at, in their conduct.

12. Tho' Solomon has not left the obſervation upon record, yet it is as true as if he had [illegible] "that 'tis common for one knave to lead [illegible] fools by the noſe."

13. "As ſtorms and whirlwinds anſwer heaven's deſigns," ſo the enthuſiaſm and blind zeal of the multitude, are ſurprizing engines in the hands of a few to effect their purpoſes.

14. I hate nick names;——and truly believe that many an honeſt man has been called an Arminian; and many a rogue a Calviniſt.

15. A place of publick worſhip is in no reſpects worſe for a magnificent cupola upon the roof, and an organ in the gallery——but ſtill a devout ſoul will ſometimes find and enjoy GOD, in congregations convened under the moſt unornamented ſhelters.

16. "AN HONEST MAN'S THE NOBLEST WORK OF GOD."

17. That man who cheats his neighbour as ſoon as he is up in the morning, and then prays in his family ſomething longer to expiate the crime, is taking a direct way to bring his conſcience into ſuch a callous, inſenſible ſtate, that nothing ſhort of infernal cauſticks will ever be able to touch it.

18. I value not the particular form of the houſe in which I attend publick worſhip; and will therefore declare it as an article of my faith "that truth is ſometimes heard in a cathedral, and ſometimes falſhood and nonſenſe in a meeting houſe."

19. I am a true blue preſbyterian, I give you my word, (and that is all the evidence you can poſſibly have)——but yet I believe it poſſible for honeſty, and ſincerity to exiſt under a ſurplice; and knavery and malice under a cloak.

20. Eccleſiaſtical councils are dangerous things to meddle with, or ſpeak of. I have therefore but one article upon them viz. "that a peremptory deciſion, mantled with ire and gall, is no infallible token of a previous, calm examination of the cauſe."

21. Two things, with regard to my writings of this kind, have exalted my pride: 1ſt Some men ſmile at them, and ſhew their approbation of them——but eſpecially, 2dly Some men diſlike, and find fault with them——the latter has done vaſtly more to puff me up than the former.

22. I had rather be eſteemed by one man of ſenſe, than to be idolized by thirty Blockheads.

23. It is generally much more difficult to find a reconciled, pacifick temper towards thoſe we are conſcious we have injured than it is towards thoſe who have injured us.

24. I believe it poſſible for an atheiſt to wear a lawn band under his chin; and a coward a cockade upon his hat.

25. I believe that many, famous for their gifts, have taken more pains to approve themſelves to men than to G—d——and that in their public prayers they pay more homage to their own vanity, than to the Deity.

26. Men moſt capable of doing ſervice in the world from ſuperior genius and abilities are generally, if neglected and undervalued, the moſt miſchievous.

27. A ſolemn ſabbath day countenance will never make any attonement for the ſins of the week; notwithſtanding it may in other reſpects be of excellent uſe to ſharpers, and horſe jockies.

28. An affected ſolemn countenance; an over much lamentation of the wickedneſs of the times; a pretended conſcientiouſneſs in trifles; a whining, melting, ſighing elocution, &c. lo, theſe are the marks of a man of whom we ought to beware.

29. I believe that all the ſons of liberty in the world, will never prevent intriguing and cajoling; and that as it was in the beginning, and is now, ſo it will be to the end of the world, "that kiſſing goes by favour."

But ſo much may ſuffice for the preſent; I may poſſibly give you another 29 Credenda at another opportunity.

☞ Thoſe who have Advertiſements to inſert in this Paper, are deſired to ſend them (accompanied with the Pay) to the Printers, by Saturday Noon.

BOSTON,

The laborious endeavours of penſioners & ſeekers ſince the project of laying duties in America for the expreſs purpoſe of a revenue was adopted, has been to hide the true ſtate of things and poſſeſs adminiſtration with a belief that ſuch meaſures were not diſagreeable to the body of the better ſort of people.——That the oppoſition made thereto, is only the oppoſition of a little factious expiring party, which cannot ſtand before the exertion of power; this accounts for the pains taken by a certain G———r and others, to prevent our petitions and remonſtrances from being preſented, as alſo for the invitation of men of war, troops, &c. the carrying off veſſels in a hoſtile manner, the firing at others, & even boats, to douſe ſails, colors, &c. the ſearching of veſſels, ſtopping others and taking out the Cargo on the man of war's deck, impreſſing and impriſoning his Majeſty's ſubjects, & threatning to blow the brains out of ſuch as attempted to put their heads above the hatches, intimations and threats of firing broadſides into the town, and a moſt extraordinary letter to the G———r, handed the C———l before the late diſturbances, in which a Captain is ſaid to expreſs his hopes that he may be provoked to make uſe of the power in his hands to treat the Inhabitants worſe than he wou'd chuſe to uſe barbarians;——but this extraordinary behaviour of the Captain's is now forgot or forgiven by the people, as they have had it reported to them, that he is entirely under the directions of the board of Cuſtoms, who applied for his being ſent here——It is now to be hoped that the ſurpriſing unanimity of this town, the province and other colonies, with their ſeveral Aſſemblies, will ſerve to convince the whole nation, how much they have been impoſed upon by the accounts of intereſted and deſigning men, who have projected and recommended meaſures, which are not only diſguſtful and diſtreſſing, but if adhered to and purſued, may in the end prove fatal to Britiſh as well as American liberty.

It has been conjectured that if the ſilver already drawn from us by the new Duties, was to be beat into thin plates, that it would entirely cover the main road from this town to the borders of York Government; but this ſum large as it is, is not any way equal to the ſum loſt the Province, by the deſtruction of its trade by means of the late Regulations.

What a diſagreeable Picture of human Nature does the Conduct of ſome of its Species preſent to our View? one G———r for the Sake of doubling his Salary, and increaſing his Perquiſites, will be guilty of promoting the baſeſt Projects, by the baſeſt Miſrepreſentations, and even of Attempts to overturn the Conſtitution.———Another to ſecure or encreaſe a Penſion, ſhall go from county to county, to conciliate his Countrymen to the utmoſt humiliation and diſtreſſing Meaſures———One man, to obtain a little preſent Advantage to himſelf, ſhall knowingly ſacrifice the moſt eſſential Intereſts of his Country.———Another to ſecure a Poſt or a Seat, ſhall either withhold his Hand and Tongue, when Duty requires them to be held forth, or will traiterouſly yield them both up at the requirement of his Superiors.———Happy it is for New-England, that her Senate is yet ſo uncorrupt as that the whole Force of Prerogative exerted upon a late trying occaſion, could ſeduce from the true intereſts of their conſtituents but ſeventeen out of one Hundred and nine.

The conduct of the Houſe of Aſſembly cannot be too much admired and commended: Tho' threatned with immediate Annihiliation, unleſs they comply'd with a requiſition to Reſcind the Reſolutions of a former Houſe they have with a firmneſs and unanimity becoming the Repreſentatives of a wiſe and free People aſſerted and maintained, inſtead of giving up their undoubted Rights & privileges. Thus preferring the Life and Welfare of their Country to their own political Exiſtence———the famous Ninety-two will live forever in the Annals of America; but the Names of Seventeen will be handed down with Infamy to the lateſt Poſterity.

It is ſaid, that at the very Juncture when the Governor was pleaſed to adjourn the Great and General Court, the Honourable Board of Councellors were conſulting a humble Petition to the King, upon the important Affair of Parliamentary taxation: And the Honourable Houſe were debating upon another Petition to the ſame ſacred Perſon; for the Removal of a great Man from the high Office he holds under his Majeſty in this Province.

On thurſday laſt we the ſubſcribers being out on a party of pleaſure on the water, on our return about 9 o'clock, being two guns ſhot above the buoy of the King's ſhip Romney commanded by Capt. Corner; having a ſmall arm on board, which we carried down for the ſake of game; and it being at that time loaded, we thought it proper to diſcharge her for fear of accident: this it ſeems gave great offence to Capt. Corner, who ordered us on board. Upon our coming on board, we treated him with as much civility as we were capable of. He aſk'd us whether we knew it was contrary to the King's Ships to ſuffer a gun to be fired within their buoys? to which we anſwered, we were not within the buoys———that it was uſual for people out on their pleaſure to fire after game any where in the harbour, and even on Caſtle-Iſland, without giving offence; but that we were not acquainted with the cuſtoms of the King's ſhips, as it was not common for them to be here.———He ſaid it was high time they were, and attempted in a rude manner to ſtrike off Simeon Polly's hat,———He told us we were both drunk, and bid us be gone.———He told us that he had twenty-five ſmall arms continually kept loaded, and then, he ordered a gentleman, who appeared to be an officer, to fire a volley on the firſt boat that ſhould hereafter fire a gun within the buoy.

This we relate to give warning of this declared intention and order of Capt. Corner, to all perſons who may be concerned: and alſo to leave it to the conſideration of the world, whether he is that high good humoured and well bred gentleman, which he has been repreſented by ſome to be.

July 2 1768. SIMEON POLLY,

WILLIAM MILLER.

Laſt Saturday afternoon, we had here a ſevere ſtorm of thunder and lightning. A ſummer houſe behind the Cuſtom houſe was partly demoliſhed, and an Iron ſpire on the top of it, broke by lightning.

We have the following Account from Haverhill, Weſt Pariſh, dated June 7, 1768, Viz. About 7 o'Clock, P. M. there appeared a very remarkable Phænomenon; the Air being clear, a Ball of Fire or Meteor, was ſeen in the Horizon, with a motion from N. to S. for ſome diſtance, leaving a regular tail of Fire after it, which preſently became irregular and appeared in a curvilineal or mix'd Angular form, or like crinkling lightning; ſoon after was heard an Exploſion, exactly like the breaking of a Bomb in the Air, and appeared to be not much higher, after which followed a rumbling Noiſe like Thunder for about 20 or 30 Seconds of Time, then another Exploſion like the former was heard, but not quite ſo loud; after which a different noiſe followed like crackling Thunder, or beating of Drums, which laſted about two Minutes; ſome Perſons ſay they heard a regular beat like the beating of a Drum;——At the ſame Time a Ball of Matter fell to the Earth, which entered it ſome Feet, and it appears by the place the Matter made in the Earth it burſt there, as the Dirt and ſome ſmall Stones are ſcatter'd round ſome Rods, and we are inform'd the Reports were heard 20 or 30 miles round.

The report of the aforeſaid Exploſion was diſtinctly heard in Portſmouth, and as far eaſtward as York and Wells.

LONDON, April 2.

INTELLIGENCE EXTRAORDINARY.

LAST week, as a Weſt-country Surgeon was diſſecting an Exciſeman, who was lately executed for killing his mother, Elizabeth Freedom, upon opening the head, which was remarkably big, inſtead of brains, he found nothing but general warrants and permits; the appearance of general warrants ſo terrified the Surgeon that he dropped down and expired immediately.

It is reported, that an Officer, who often preaches to his company, will be deſired to reſign his command. This brings to mind an anecdote of a Colonel in a regiment of foot, at home, who wrote a petition to his Majeſty King George the Second, requeſting to exchange his Colonelſhip for one in a regiment then going to embark for America, concluding, as cuſtomary, with theſe words, And your Petitioner as in duty bound, ſhall ever pray. The King granted his requeſt, and returned his petition to him in perſon, but firſt ſcratched out the word pray, and wrote over it fight.

Lately died at his houſe in Clerkenwell, aged 90, Mr. William Stevens, for 55 years Grave digger of that pariſh. The following ſtory is related of him; that being once on examination in one of the Courts in Weſtminſter Hall relative to ſome parochial affairs, he was aſked by the Court, Who he was? To which he replied, "I am Grave digger to the pariſh of St. James, Clerkenwell, at your honours ſervice."

STRAY'D or ſtolen from the ſubſcriber in Farmington, a chuſnet coloured or bay horſe, about fourteen hands high, ſeven years old, with a ſmall white ſtreak in the forehead, a natural pacer, branded on the left thigh with two letters, ſhod before. Whoever ſhall take up and return ſaid horſe, ſhall be handſomely rewarded, and all neceſſary charges paid by ANDREW CULVER.

PHILADELPAIA July 11 1768

We have advices from Gibralter to the following Effect: "That they was apprehenſive of the Algerines declareing War with England as the Dey of Algiers had made a Demand of a large Sum of Money from the Governor of Gibralter, which he has thought proper to refuſe."

Extract of a Letter from a Travelling Gentleman.

"The diſtreſſed Situation of the Province of North Carolina, occaſiond by the Reſtrictions and Oppreſions of the Mother Country, and the impolitic, treacherous and arbitrary Conduct of ſome of its own wealthy Inhabitants, who have been entruſted with the Liberties of their Country, has been productive of very great Commotions, inſomuch that upwards of 1000 men aſſemb'ed at one Place in 48 Hours, in order to humble ſome of their Oppreſſors, which having effected, they then diſperſed. The People of N. Carolina, in general, have a ſtrong Senſe of Liberty, and are heartily diſpoſed to oppoſe every Species of Oppreſſion."

Yeſterday Morning arrived here the Snow Charlotte, Capt. Hine from London. She left the Downs the 10th of May laſt, but has brought no intelligence, except that Mr. Wilkes was ſtill in the King's Bench, and that it was expected his Trial was to come on about the eleventh of May.

PORTSMOUTH, (New Hampſhire) July 8.

Yeſterday a Petition, ſigned by a large Number of the reſpectable Inhabitans of this Town, was preſented to the Selectmen, requeſting them immediately to call a public Town Meeting, in order to give their Repreſentatives particular Inſtructions in the preſent alarming and critical Time:——In Conſequence of which we hear, a Meeting will be held next Monday at the uſual Place, and its hoped the Inhabitants will all be punctual in attending.

BOSTON, July 11.

Yeſterday ſailed the Schooner Maſſachuſetts Ninety-two, Capt. Samſon, for Dominica.

The reigning Toaſt in this Province is the Maſſachuſetts 92, and we hope it will ſoon be throughout the Continent, as alſo throughout Europe.

We hear that Robert Hallowell, Eſq; is appointed Deputy Comptroller for the Port and Diſtrict of Boſton; and an officer for ſeizing prohibited and unaccuſtomed Goods,

It is ſaid that one of the ſeventeen Slaves apply'd very earneſtly, to Numbers of Coaſters, bound to the Southward: for a Paſſage to Martha's Vineyard; but upon their enquiring who he was, and finding him to be a Slave, they refuſed him a Paſſage. This obliged him to conceal himſelf on board an Oyſter-man, by which Means he got a Paſſage to the Cape, where he, very fortunately came acroſs a kind good natured old Squaw belonging to the Vineyard, and homeward bound, who was very glad to ſee her Countryman, and hearing him lament his abject Condition, ſhe was moved with Pity, and generouſly received him into her Canoe, and gave him a Paſſage with her over to the Iſland.

Our Bretheren in the other Colonies may be aſſured notwithſtanding any Reports to the contrary, that the Importation of Britiſh Goods this Spring has been leſs than in former Years, and that the Sale of articles has fell vaſtly ſhort even of the laſt Year's. Happy Effects of our growing Induſtry and Frugality: it is however but juſt to acknowledge that the prodigious ſcarcity of Money, occaſioned by the late Duty, has greatly contributed to thoſe effects. What muſt we think of the policy, which thus impoveriſhes Provinces to maintain ſwarms of uſeleſs Officers in Luxury and Extravagance. May Britain think of it before it be too late.

About 7000 Ounces of Silver collected in Salem for the new Duties it is ſaid were laſt Week bro't to this Town for Exportation or Conſumption.

NEW-HAVEN, July 15.

Laſt Tueſday, Capt. Ozias Goodwin; arrived here in a ſhort Paſſage from Martinico. He informs, that on the 10th of laſt Month, an Engliſh Snow of 16 Guns from Antigua, touched there, and brought Advice that a Pirate had taken a Sloop near Antigua, belonging to Mr Payne, of that Iſland, and deſtroyed all the People on board, but One, who ſwam aſhore; and that the Snow and a French Frigate, which was lying at Martinico, ſailed the next Morning, in queſt of the Pirate; who is ſaid to be a large Sloop of 14 Guns, and was fitted out at Martinico, for trading to the Spaniſh Main, where ſhe had been one Voyage.

HARTFORD, July 18.

Meſſrs. GREEN & WATSON.

IN your Courant No. 176. I obſerve a number of queries therein inſerted, by one that ſtiles himſelf an honeſt freeman, deſiring that any gentlemen of the law, well acquainted with our conſtitutional rights and privileges, would be pleaſed to, make proper anſwers to ſaid queries.——I am truly of the honeſt freeman's mind, and ſhould deſire that ſome able pen may take it in hand, and let the matter be fairly diſcuſs'd, and ſet them in their true genuine light; and that the freemen of the colony may not be impoſed upon, or led away by deſigning men, into rules and forms, which may be the undoing of the colony.

I would likewiſe beg that the ſame able pen may anſwer one query more, viz. What right has the judges of the Superior Court, to be members of the general aſſembly? And whether it is the birth-right of the D. G. to be chief judge of the Superior Court before any other freeman in the colony?

Wheetog in Simſbury July 4, 1768.

Laſt Saturday we had here ſuch a ſtorm of hail, as perhaps has not been known in the memory of man. The forenoon of that day was extreme hot, about noon a very black cloud began to riſe which in about two hours produced a heavy rain attended with violent thunder, when the rain abated, there came an hail which increaſed ſo much that the laſt hail-ſtones which fell, were ſuppoſed to be full the bulk of gooſe eggs, rather bigger than leſs. It did much damage to the ſmaller and weaker animals and vegetables. The apple-trees, grain, and gardens were conſiderably damaged, as were alſo the ſhingles of ſome buildings. The glaſs ſuffered leſs than was expected. But had not the hail fell conſiderably perpendicular, but little glaſs would have eſcaped. Several of the hail ſtones were weighed, and amounted to three ounces each, ſo long after they fell that it was ſuppoſed one third of their magnitude was diſſolved. 'Tis impoſſible to communicate a true idea of a phenomenon ſo rare unexpected and terrible.

PHILADELPHIA, June 30.

A Gentleman in Lancaſter County, who favoured his Friend in this City, with an account of the late dreadful Hail-Storm, has ſince been pleaſed to furniſh the following Remarks, which, as they cannot fail of being acceptable to ſuch of our Readers as are of a ſpeculative & philoſophical Turn, we are pleaſed with having an opportunity to inſert them.

———— 'Upon breaking ſeveral of the Hail Stones, ſuch as were ſpherical, were found to be compoſed of various Orbs, or Boats of Ice, encompaſſing one another like the Coats of an Onion, which contained in the Middle a tranſparent Nucleus, about the Size of a Piſtol-Bullet. In ſome, this Nucleus was ſpike, with bright Radiations iſſuing from it to the Surface, like theſe diſcovered in breaking the ſulphureous Nodules, or globular Pyrites, found in ſeveral Parts of the country.—Some were encompaſſed with fine Striæ like the firſt Shootings of Froſt in damp Ground; and ſome were concreted into ſolid, but irregular Lumps of Ice.

'As the Wind from the S. E. oppoſed the progreſs of the Clouds which began in the N. W. we may ſuppoſe that the firſt Clouds, by being preſſed behind the thickening Storm, and oppoſed in Front by the Wind, were, by that means, forced up into the colder Regions, & that there this Nucleus was formed, which congealed more and more as it fell thro' the watery Clouds, and ſo received different Coats at different Stages.—Such Hail-Stones as appeared under other Forms were, in all Probability compoſed of a number of ſmall ones, which met joined, and congealed together in their Paſſage thro' different Clouds.——The dreadful Noiſe, with which this Storm approached, proceeded no Doubt, from the ſtriking and claſhing together of the large Stones in their Fall.

'How far this Storm extended I have not been able to diſcover, but from the beſt Information yet received, it began ſomewhere about Shamokin*——divided into different Branches, all keeping pretty near a S. E. Courſe, and deſtroying whole Plantations on this Side and that, without touching others which lay contiguous; and ended (at leaſt with regard to its deſtructive Fury) ſomewhere about Warwick Furnace, in Cheſter-County.*

'*How awful are the Diſpenſations of Providence!—*JEHOVAH 'rides in the Whirlwind, and directs the Storm.'—'He commands the Snow & Hail, and they obey his Word——Let us adore—let us tremble!——

"P. S.——Much as I was ſurprized at the prodigious Size of the above deſcribed Hail Stones, I was much more ſo, in reading a few days ſince an account given by Dr. HOOKE, in ſome of his Philoſophical Papers, collected and publiſhed by Mr DERHAM—that he had taken the Dimenſions & Figures of ſeveral Hail-Stones, which fell in England meaſuring THIRTEEN Inches in Circumference."

COMPLAINANT, No. 18.

Each talk'd aloud or in ſome ſecret place,
And wild impatience ſtar'd in every face.
The flying rumours gather'd as they roll'd,
Scarce any tale was ſooner heard than told;
And all who told it added ſomething new,
And all who heard it made inlargements too,
In ev'ry ear it ſpread, on ev'ry tongue it grew.

A VERY ſlender acquaintance with mankind will confirm this obſervation that multitudes value themſelves upon being buſy-bodies, & imagine mankind will eſteem them for knowing more of other men's matters than is for their reputation to know—an unreaſonable curioſity puts them upon examining into the private affairs of others, and a vain oſtentation of their own knowledge, and the confidence others repoſe in them prompt them to divulge all they know—and a little more—when the pride of a man's heart flows out in this channel, it uſually carries with it in all its currents, ſuch an inundation of defamatory filth as to ſpatter and defile all that are ſo unhappy as to be within it's reach—it generally is a ſource of confuſion and diſcord in ſocieties, whether of a larger or ſmaller extent--What can excite a man's curioſity to trample upon his manners? what can account for that impertinence with which he endeavours to pump from me that intelligence which I chooſe to withhold, when it in no wiſe concerns his own intereſt?——'tis pride---the pride of being confided in——the pride of being diſtinguiſhed——the pride of thinking that any intereſt of mine lies at his mercy——and eſpecially the pride of ſhewing that he knows more of my concerns than his neighbour; for 'tis very uncommon to find a perſon anxiouſly curious, and not officiouſly communicative——thoſe that are very importunate with me to make them my confidents, and are ardently ſupplicating an acquaintance with my ſecret matters, almoſt univerſally in return unburthen themſelves as to ſome ſecrets that others have repoſed in them heretofore——and I never can expect but that I ſhall be treated in the ſame manner the firſt opportunity that preſents——ſelf importance will operate as ſtrongly when they act in matters that may concern my reputation or intereſt as at any time. What is more common than to hear a perſon draw an argument from his own perfidy why he ſhould be truſted with ſome very intereſting ſecret?——"you may tell me" ſays he——"you need not be afraid of me" and to convince me of this he lets me know that others have truſted him in very important caſes——to prove which he communicates to me the whole betruſtment——but with the utmoſt ſafety, and fidelity to his friend——for he tells me as he does every one elſe "but don't you ſay any thing about it; it is a ſecret with me"——there may poſſibly be a curioſity of this kind unconnected with the foible I am complaining of; that is, a perſon may be curious in theſe matters for his own private ſatisfaction——but for the moſt part they gain knowledge of this kind purpoſely that the world may know they are poſſeſſed of it——Congreve has drawn this character in an inimitable manner under the name of Tattle, in his love for love; and by one expreſſion of Tattle's it ſeems as if there was perfect harmony in thought word and deed——"I know" ſays he "that is a ſecret, it is whiſper'd every where"——as if he thought the eſſence of a ſecret conſiſted in its being handed from one to another, & every one ſpoke of it to his neighbour, tho' in a whiſper.

Peter Pence is very negligent of his own affairs; and has been unable for ſeveral months to ſettle accounts with either debtor or creditor, by reaſon that his books have not been poſted up: and yet he plumes himſelf upon a very nice acquaintance with the ſtate of other men's finances, and in order to furniſh him out with materials for the converſation he affects, he is unſufferably arrogant and impertinent in peeping and prying——he can tell you how much every houſe you ſee coſt——what a fine bargain one made, and how another was bit——what advance every ſhop-keeper in town makes upon his goods, and how much he owes his merchant——who will break next, and how long firſt, and how deep &c.——by ſuch a conduct as this Peter has rais'd himſelf in his own conceit to a ſtate of great importance——and his curioſity grows bolder daily; while his own proper concerns are neglected to the detriment of his family, and the public——he begins now to talk with a pretty deal of confidence, as though he knew not only juſt how much one ſort of men owe their creditors, but preciſely how much another ſort have out at intereſt, and what ſums of caſh they have by them. I ſuſpect this career will fetch him into trouble e're long——as ſoon as he hears of a bargain's being made he ſally's out in queſt of particulars; his converſation is all interrogatory 'till he is furniſh'd for intelligence himſelf——"how much did ſuch an one give for ſuch an article purchas'd? what is he to pay in?——how long a time for payment?——will he able to come up to the terms?" with ſundry other queſtions in the ſtring ſometimes propoſed under the roſe, ſometimes openly, as the caſe requires——and having made this addition to his ſtock he ſets out to retail his knowledge when and where he can be moſt admired himſelf, and do moſt miſchief to others.

Some are actuated by the ſame temper, tho' the objects aimed at are different. They know "who marries too late to be honeſt when ſcarce any body elſe ſuſpected any ſuch thing——how many ounces of meat every neighbour eats in a week——and how many times one has viſited another in the year" with a variety of other important objects of knowledge too tedious to mention, and of no uſe but to ſtir up animoſity and jealouſy in a circle of families——may ſuch perſons henceforth find their impertinent curioſity rewarded either with contemptuous ſilence, or an effectual reproof. Inſtead of confidence may they meet with frowns——inſtead of lending an ear to their miſchief-making tongues, let every wiſe man remember what the wiſeſt of men ſaid "as the north wind driveth away rain, ſo doth an angry countenance a back-biting tongue."——

BOSTON,

The following Account of the Proceedings of The Houſe of Repreſentatives of the Province of Maryland in conſequence of a Circular Letter from the Aſſembly of this Province, &c. has been received from the Speaker of that Houſe, viz.

A Meſſage from the Governor.

Gentlemen of the LowerHouſe of Aſſembly,

THE King our moſt gracious Sovereign having been informed that a circular Letter, a Copy of which hath been communicated to his Miniſters, was in February laſt ſent by the Speaker of the Houſe of Repreſentatives of the Colony of Maſſachuſetts to the Speakers of other Houſes of Aſſembly in North America, hath been pleaſed to order it to be ſignified to me that he conſiders ſuch Meaſures to be of a moſt dangerous and factious Tendency calculated to inflame, the minds of his good Subjects in the Colonies, to promote an unwarrantable Combination, to excite, and encourage an open Oppoſition to, and Denial of, the Authority of Parliament, and to ſubvert the true Principles of the Conſtitution; but while I notify to you his Majeſty's Sentiments with reſpect to this Matter, I am alſo to tell you that the repeated Proofs which have been given by the Aſſembly of this Province of their Reverence and Reſpect for the Laws, and of their Attachment to the Conſtitution, leave little room for his Majeſty to doubt of their ſhewing a proper Reſentment of ſuch unjuſtifiable Attempt to revive thoſe Diſtractions which have operated ſo fatally to the prejudice of both the Colonies and the Mother Country, and I flatter myſelf that in caſe ſuch a Letter has been addreſſed to the Speaker of your Houſe, you will confirm the favourable opinion his Majeſty at preſent entertains of his Maryland Subjects, by taking no notice of ſuch Letter, which will be treating it with the Contempt it deſerves.

HORATIO SHARPE.

To his Excellency HORATIO SHARPE, Eſq; Governor and Commander in Chief in and over the Province of Maryland,

The humble Addreſs of the Houſe of Delegates.

May it pleaſe your Excellency,

IN Anſwer to your Excellency's Meſſage of the 20th we muſt obſerve, that if the Letter [illegible] or Repreſentatives of the Colony of Maſſachuſetts-Bay, addreſſed to and communicated by our Speaker to this Houſe, be the ſame with the Letter, a Copy of which you are pleaſed to intimate hath been communicated to the King's Miniſters, it is very alarming to find that at a Time when the People of America think themſelves agrieved by the late acts of Parliament impoſing Taxes on them for the ſole and expreſs Purpoſe of raiſing a Revenue, and in the moſt dutiful Manner are ſeeking Redreſs from the Throne, any Endeavours to unite in laying before their Sovereign what is apprehended to be their juſt complaint, ſhould be looked upon "a meaſure of moſt dangerous and factious tendency, calculated to inflame the minds of his Majeſty's good ſubjects in the colonies, to promote unwarrantable combination, to excite and encourage an open oppoſition to, and denial of the authority of parliament, and to ſubvert the true principles of the conſtitution." We can't but view this as an attempt in ſome of his Majeſty's miniſters to ſuppreſs all communication of ſentiments between the colonies, and to prevent the united ſupplications of America from reaching the royal ear. We hope the conduct of this houſe will ever evince their reverence and reſpect for the laws and faithful attachment to the conſtitution; but we cannot be brought to reſent an exertion of the moſt undoubted conſtitutional right of petitioning the throne, or any endeavours to procure and preſerve an union of the colonies as an unjuſtifiable attempt to revive thoſe diſtractions which it is ſaid have opperated ſo fatally to the prejudice of both the colonies and the mother country. We have the warmeſt and moſt affectionate attachment to our moſt gracious ſovereign, and ſhall ever pay the readieſt and moſt reſpectful regard to the juſt and conſtitutional power of the Britiſh parliament; but we ſhall not be intimidated by a few ſounding expreſſions, from doing what we think is right. The houſe of repreſentatives of the colony of Maſſachuſetts Bay, in their letter to us, have intimated that they have preferred a humble, dutiful, and loyal petition to the King, and expreſſed their confidence that the united and dutiful ſupplications of his diſtreſſed ſubjects will meet with his royal and favourable acceptance; and we think they have aſſerted their rights with a decent reſpect to their Sovereign, and a due ſubmiſſion to the authority of parliament. What we ſhall do upon this occaſion, or whether in conſequence of that letter we ſhall do any thing, it is not our preſent buſineſs to communicate to your excellency; but of this be pleaſed to be aſſured, that we cannot be prevailed on to take no notice of or to treat with the leaſt degree of contempt a letter ſo expreſſive of duty and loyalty to the ſovereign, and ſo repleat with juſt principles of liberty; and your excellency may depend that whenever we apprehend the rights of the people to be affected, we ſhall not fail boldly to aſſert and ſteadily endeavour to maintain and ſupport them, always remembering what we ſhould wiſh never to be forgot, that by the bill of rights it is declared, "That it is the right of the ſubject to petition the King, and all commitments and proſecutions for ſuch petitioning are illegal."

By Order of the lower houſe of Aſſembly,

June 23d, 1768.

Province of MARYLAND, June 24th, 1768.

S I R,

I HAD the Honour to receive your Favour of the 22th of February laſt, and on a Meeting of our Aſſembly I communicated it to our Houſe, and I am deſired to aſſure you they acknowledge themſelves obliged by a candid and free communication of Sentiments of a ſiſter colony on a Point ſo intereſting to the whole, and that their opinion of the conſequences to the colonies of the opperation of the ſeveral Acts of Parliament you allude to, coincide exactly with yours, & that they are perſuaded of the Neceſſity of harmonizing as much as poſſible in proper Meaſures for Redreſs.

This Houſe upon conſidering the Acts of Parliament, prepared an humble, dutiful, and loyal petition to his Majeſty, ſetting forth, That it is a fixed and unalterable Principle in the nature of things, and a Part of the very Idea of property, that whatever a Man hath honeſtly acquired cannot be taken from him without his conſent: that this immutable Principle is ingrafted as a fundamental into the Engliſh Conſtitution, and is declared by Magna Charta, and the petition Bill of Rights, & from thence every Britiſh Subject, the moſt diſtant, is juſtly intitled to all the Rights of Engliſhmen; that this Right is further declared and confirmed by our charter; under the confidence whereof our Fore fathers encountered every Difficulty, to ſettle this Colony, which under Providence has increaſed his Majeſty's Subjects, extended the Trade & added to the Wealth of the Mother Country: that we have always been permitted to enjoy this Right until lately; that we are not nor can we ever be effectually repreſented in the Britiſh Parliament; and that theſe Statutes do in our Apprehenſion infringe the great fundamental Principle, that no man can be taxed but with his own conſent given by himſelf or his Repreſentative. This, SIR, is the Subſtance of our Petition, & I am ordered to tranſmit it to Charles Garth, Eſq; ſpecial Agent for our Houſe of Delegates, to be preſented, and we ſhall requeſt him to cooperate with yours and the other Colony Agents in endeavouring to procure us Relief, & hope with you his Majeſty's great goodneſs of Heart will incline him to receive the dutiful Supplications of his remote Subjects with Favour and Attention.

Juſt before the cloſe of our Seſſion we received a Meſſage from our Governor, a Copy of which you have herewith; and alſo a Copy of the Addreſs by our Houſe in anſwer thereto, which will fully convey to you their Sentiments on the ſubject.

I am, in the Name and by Order of the Houſe of Repreſentatives,
Sir, with very great reſpect,
Your moſt humble & obedient Serv't,

To the Honorable THOMAS CUSHING, Eſq; Speaker of the Hon. Houſe of Repreſentatives of Maſſachuſetts-Bay.

NEWBERN, (in No. Carolina) June 27.

Laſt week the ſloop Sally, Zephaniah Pinkham, Maſter, belonging to Richard Ellis, Eſq; of this place, cleared out on a whaling voyage, being completely fitted for that purpoſe, the whole apparatus having been imported from Boſton. As this is the firſt veſſel from this town that has been fitted out on that ſcheme, it is to be hoped ſhould ſhe be ſucceſsful, it will determine others to purſue ſo valuable a branch of buſineſs; eſpecially at a time when this Province ſtands in ſo great need of a better ſtaple than naval ſtores.

It appears by the laſt accounts from England, that Lord Hillſborough, the American ſecretary, has poſitively declared himſelf againſt paper currency, at a meeting of ſeveral colony agents who waited upon him upon that head. If the colonies are reſtrained a paper currency, it is eaſy to foreſee the ruinous conſequences; this province in particular now labours under the greateſt diſtreſs for want of a medium in trade, as we have not more than 60,000 l. now in circulation, for a province that has more than double that number of inhabitants. Specie we have little or none, as we have no trade to bring it in, the ballance being generally againſt us; and ever ſpend our time and labour on a commodity of little or no value. We ſee to what a pitch of opulence our neighbours of So. Carolina, are arrived, by leaving the making of naval ſtores to their more ſharp ſighted neighbours, and purſuing the cultivation of rice, indigo and hemp; commodities which this province is equally capable of raiſing. Is it not aſtoniſhing then to ſee a planter with a number of ſlaves plodding over a tar-kiln, that, when brought to market, will not fetch 4d. a day for his ſlaves, and half that to be paid in goods; when at the ſame time he has, perhaps, a fine rice ſwamp at his door, and land capable of producing indico or hemp equal to our ſouthern neighbours. Our countrymen will pardon us theſe reflections, as they are made with no other view than the public good, and to rouſe them from a lethargy into which they ſeem to be fallen.

Among the many ſchemes of frugality and œconomy adopted by our northern neighbours, in theſe times of diſtreſs, we obſerve Labradore or Hyperian Tea to be uſhered into the moſt polite companies, and almoſt univerſally uſed as a ſuccedaneum to that moſt pernicious and deſtructive plant Bohea, which annually drains America of ſome thouſands. As diſtreſs and poverty ſtalks among us equal to any thing among our neighbours, we would, with due deference to the refined taſtes of the ladies, recommend to them the uſe of Yeopann Tea. This plant is much uſed among the lower ſort, is of great efficacy when taken phyſically, being a powerful ſudorific; is no exotic, but a domeſtic of almoſt every ſandy plantation in this province. We hope therefore ſoon to have the pleaſure of informing the public, that at a meeting of the ladies on ſuch a day, at ſuch a place, ſuch a number of ſkeins of thread were ſpun; after which they regaled with Yeopann Tea.

ANNAPOLIS, (Maryland) June 23.

Laſt Sunday departed this Life, in the 7[illegible] Year of his Age, the Hon. Benjamin [illegible], Eſq; Preſident of the Council.

On the Evening of Friday, laſt, Mr THOMAS RICHARDSON, late of this City, Merch't, was inſtantly kill'd by a Flaſh of Lightening, which melted his Watch, Shoe and Knee Buckles.——He was ſitting in a room at Mr. ADAIR's in Baltimore Town, with another Perſon, at a ſmall diſtance, who was ſtruck down, but ſoon recovered. The Damage done to the Houſe is inconſiderable, except in the Roof.——Mr. RICHARDSON was a young Man, in the Prime of Life, and poſſeſs'd many good Qualities, which juſtly entitled him to the Eſteem of a numerous Acquaintance.

THE Doctor having had one day a great many Gentlemen to dine with him, after the cloth had been removed ſome time was complaining of the diſtempers incident to old age, that then began to attack him; and in particular, a dimneſs of ſight that increaſed on him daily, and that ſometimes it held him for an hour or more. I have it, continued he, at this inſtant ſo violently, that I profeſs that I can ſee no more than that bottle on the table. Really, Sir, ſaid, a ſmart young Student, if that be the caſe, we are all under the ſame diſorder; for I am ſure we have none of us ſeen any more than the bottle on the table theſe three hours.

PHILADELPHIA, June 16.

To the FREEMEN of the Town of LEBANON, in CONNECTICUT.

GENTLEMEN,

I RECEIVE, with great Gratitude, the Honor you have conferred upon me by your late Letter, and very highly value the approbation of your reſpectable Town.

Affection for the Britiſh Colonies on this Continent, all which, without diſtinction, every true American muſt conſider as HIS COUNTRY, urged me, at this alarming Period to aſſert, as well as I could, their rights and Intereſts.

My Devotion to the cauſe exceeds my ability to maintain it; and therefore I am Induced to believe, that having been ſo fortunate as to convince you of my good intentions, your generoſity has beſtowed applauſes on my Motives, rather than on my Performance.

Could I be perſuaded, that theſe injured Colonies "cannot fail to reap important Advantages" from my dutiful "Efforts," I ſhould prefer the delightful Conſciouſneſs to all the Glory, Wealth & Power, this World can afford. But if the divine Goodneſs to which, with the deepeſt Humility I acknowledge myſelf already unſpeakably indebted, ſhall not be pleaſed to grant me THE VERY GREAT HAPPINESS OF CONTRIBUTING TO THE HAPPINESS OF MY COUNTRY, yet I ſhall reflect with Satisfaction, that I have endeavoured to ſerve her, and ſhall hope that you, and all worthy Men, who judge of me, will do me juſtice to believe that I moſt ſincerely love her.

I heartily wiſh Proſperity to you, Gentlemen, and to your Town. A FARMER.

Falmouth, (Caſco Bay) July 5.

Laſt week, during the ſitting of the ſuperior court here, John Chipman of Marblehead, Eſq; Barriſter at law (a Gentleman of a peculiar benevolent Diſpoſition, who was much reſpected and beloved) was ſuddenly ſeized in Court with an appoplectic Fit, and in a few hours died. He had for ſome time before been in an ill ſtate of health. His remains were decently interr'd, being attended by the Judges, the Gentlemen of the Bar, of the Town, and many People of the Neighbourhood.

NEW-YORK, July 21.

Extract of a Letter from Niagara, dated July 1, 1768.

"Two Days ago the famous Major Rogers, arrived here, and the unfortunate Woman his Wife. He is to remain here till further Orders, & I believe to be tried here; but ſhe goes down very ſoon; ſhe is really much to be pitied, but I believe him to be a great Raſcal."

We are inform'd by the Way of Quebec, That Rogers's Deſign was, that after having taken and plundered Detroit and the Illinois, and carried the Spoils to his Accomplice Capt. Hopkins, at New Orleans, to have return'd himſelf, & fallen upon New-England and Carolina, which he look'd upon to be two of our richeſt Provinces.——This deſign he intended to have executed laſt Spring, but was prevented by want of Money & other Conveniencies.

PORTSMOUTH, July 15.

Laſt Wedneſday afternoon departed this Life, after a long and lingering ſickneſs, in the 30th Year of his Age, greatly lamented, Thomas Wentworth, Eſq; ſecond Son to the Honorable Mark Hunking Wentworth, Eſq; and only Brother to his Excellency our Governor; he has left a ſorrowful Widow and five Children.

B O S T O N, July 21.

A Ship belonging to Portſmouth, New-Hampſhire, Capt. Rogers, from Montſerrat, bound to London, deep laden with Sugars, ſprung a Leak in her paſſage, Lat. 21. The Water made ſo faſt, that the people had only Time to get out their Boat, and take a few Biſket, when ſhe ſunk; the Captain had not Time to ſave any of the Ship's papers, or even to take any Water. They were 7 Days in their Boat without any Thing to quench their Thirſt, having reached Turks-Iſland, the Captain took paſſage in a Veſſel for this place, and arrived here laſt Monday Morning.

In Addition to the Account in our laſt, of the Hail Storm at Simſbury, we learn, That it deſtroyed great Quantities of Engliſh Grain, but did more Damage to Rye than Wheat, many large Fields of the Former having been ſince mowed for Fodder, in which Jonathan Pettibone, Eſq, Mr. Thomas Caſe, and others, have been great Sufferers. In the Park of the above Caſe, a Deer had one of his Legs broke, and was otherwiſe ſo much wounded as that he ſoon after died. Several Hogs had their Backs broke, ſome of which died ſome Days afterwards. Some Horſes, and other large Animals, were cut through the Skin, by the biggeſt and more ragged Hail-ſtones. 'Tis alſo to be noted, that great Quantities of Glaſs was broke, which the Compiler of the former Particulars was not apprized of, when he communicated the ſame to us.

Laſt Wedneſday being the public Commencement at Cambridge, there was a great Concourſe of very polite Company at Harvard College. The Exerciſes were introduced by an agreable Latin Oration; then followed a Latin Syllogiſtic Diſpute upon various curious Queſtions, which was performed to very good Acceptance by the Candidates for their firſt Degrees. In the Afternoon there was a Latin Syllogiſtic Diſpute carried on by thoſe who were Candidates for their Second Degrees. After which 42 young Gentlemen were admitted to the Degree of Batchelors of Arts, and 49 to that of Maſters of Arts.——Then followed an elegant valedictory Oration; and the whole was concluded by a beautiful Anthem.

The Candidates for their firſt Degree appeared in the Forenoon in black Habits, as uſual: But in the Afternoon, they were dreſſed entirely in our own Manufactures, agreable to their laudable Reſolution laſt Fall; and were permitted by the Honorable and Reverend Corporation and Overſeers, to receive the public Honor of the College in the ſame.

MONDAY, AUGUST 1, 1768. [NUMB. 188.]

THE Connecticut COURANT.

Containing the freſheſt Advices Both Foreign and Domeſtick.

The following is a Copy of a LETTER wrote by the Houſe of Repreſentatives, in the laſt Seſſion of the General Aſſembly, and ſince tranſmitted to the Right Hon the Earl of Hillſborough, occaſioned by his Lordſhip's extraordinary Letter to the Governor of this Province, of the 22d of April laſt.

HIS Excellency the governor of this Province has been pleaſed to communicate to the Houſe of Repreſentatives extracts of a letter he had received from your Lordſhip, dated Whitehall, 22d of April, 1768; wherein it is declared to be the royal pleaſure, that he ſhould require of them, in his Majeſty's name, to reſcind the Reſolution, which gave birth to a circular letter, from the Speaker of the laſt Houſe, and to declare their diſapprobation of and diſſent to that raſh and haſty proceeding.

The houſe are humbly of opinion, that a requiſition from the Throne of this nature, to a Britiſh Houſe of Commons, has been very unuſual; Perhaps there has been no ſuch precedent ſince the revolution: If this be the caſe ſome very aggravated repreſentations of this meaſure muſt have been made to his Majeſty to induce him to require of this Houſe, to reſcind a reſolution of a former Houſe upon pain of forfeiting their exiſtance; For, my Lord, the Houſe of Repreſentatives, duly elected, are conſtituted by the royal charter, the repreſentative body of his Majeſty's faithful commons of this Province, in the general Aſſembly.——Your Lordſhip is pleaſed to ſay, that his Majeſty conſiders this ſtep "as evidently tending to create unwarrantable combinations, and to excite an unjuſtifiable oppoſition to the conſtitutional authority of Parliament;" The Houſe therefore tho't it their indiſpenſible duty, immediately to reviſe the Letter referred to; and carefully to recollect as far as they were able the ſentiments which prevailed in that Houſe, to induce them to revert to, and reſolve on the meaſure.

It may be neceſſary to obſerve, that the people in this Province have attended with a deep concern, to the ſeveral acts of the Britiſh Parliament, which impoſes duties and taxes on the Colonies; not for the purpoſe of regulating the trade, but with the ſole intention of raiſing a revenue. This concern, my Lord, ſo far from being limited within the circle of a few inconſiderable perſons, is become univerſal: The moſt reſpectable for fortune rank and ſtation, as well as probity and underſtanding in the province, with very few exceptions, are alarmed with apprehenſions of the fatal conſequences, of a power, exerciſed in any one part of the Britiſh empire, to command and apply the property of their fellow ſubjects at diſcretion! this conſideration prevailed on the laſt Houſe of Repreſentatives, to reſolve on a humble, dutiful, and loyal petition to the King, the common head and father of all his people, for his gracious interpoſition, in favor of his ſubjects of this Province.—If your Lordſhip, whom his Majeſty has honored with the American department, has been inſtrumental in preſenting a petition, ſo intereſting to the well being of his loyal ſubjects here, this Houſe beg leave to make their moſt grateful acknowledgment, and to implore your continued aid and patronage.

As all his Majeſty's North American ſubjects, are alike affected by theſe parliamentary revenue acts, the former houſe very juſtly ſuppoſed, that each of the Aſſemblies on the continent, would take ſuch methods of obtaining redreſs, as ſhould be thought by them reſpectively to be regular & proper: And being deſirous, that the ſeveral applications ſhould harmonize with each other, they reſolved on their circular letter; wherein their only view ſeems to be, to advertiſe their ſiſter Colonies of the meaſures they had taken upon a common and important concern, without once calling upon them, to adopt thoſe meaſures or any other.

Your Lordſhip, ſurely, will not think it a crime in that Houſe to have taken a ſtep, which was perfectly conſiſtent with the conſtitution; and had a natural tendency to compoſe the minds of his Majeſty's ſubjects of this and his other colonies, until in his royal clemency he ſhould afford them relief: At a time, when it ſeemed to be the evident deſign of a party, to prevent calm deliberate, rational and conſtitutional meaſures from being purſued; or to ſtop the diſtreſſes of the people from reaching his Majeſty's ear, and conſtantly precipitate them into a ſtate of deſperation, and melancholly extremity! Thus, my Lord, it appears to this Houſe: your Lordſhip will impartially judge, whether a repreſentation of it to his Majeſty as a meaſure "of an inflammatory nature"—as a ſtep evidently tending "to create unwarrantable combinations," and "to excite an unjuſtifiable oppoſition to the conſtitutional authority of the Parliament," be not injurious to the Repreſentatives of this people, and an affront to his Majeſty himſelf.

An attempt, my Lord, to impreſs the royal mind, with a jealouſy of his faithful ſubjects, for which there are no juſt grounds, is a crime of the moſt malignant nature: as it tends to diſturb and deſtroy that mutual confidence between the Prince and the ſubjects, which is the only true baſis of public happineſs and ſecurity; Your Lordſhip upon enquiry may find that ſuch baſe and wicked attempts have been made.

It is an inexpreſſible grief to the people of this province, to find repeated cenſures falling upon them, not from miniſters of ſtate alone but from Majeſty itſelf! Grounded on letters and accuſations from the Governor, a ſight of which, tho' repeatedly requeſtd of his Excellency is refuſed. There is no evil of this life which they ſo ſenſibly feel as the diſpleaſure of their Sovereign; it is a puniſhment, which they are aſſured his Majeſty would never inflict but upon a Repreſentation of the juſtice of it from his Servants whom he confides in.—Your Lordſhip will allow the houſe to appeal to your own candor, upon the grievious hardſhip of their being made to ſuffer ſo ſevere a misfortune, without ever being called to anſwer for themſelves, or even made acquainted with the matters of charge alledged againſt them: A right, which by the common rules of ſociety founded in the eternal laws of reaſon and equity, they are juſtly intitled to. The houſe is not willing to treſpaſs upon your patience: They could recite numbers of inſtances, ſince Governor Bernard has been honored by his Majeſty to preſide over this Province, of their ſuffering the King's diſpleaſure, thro' the inſtrumentality of the Governor, intimated by the Secretary of State without the leaſt previous notice, that they had deviated from the path of their duty. This, they humbly conceive, is juſt matter of complaint and it may ſerve to convince your Lordſhip that his Excellency has not that tender feeling for his Majeſty's ſubjects, which is characteriſtick of a good governor, and of which the Sovereign affords an illuſtrious example.

It is the good fortune of the Houſe to be able to ſhow, that the meaſure of the laſt Houſe referred to in your Lordſhip's letter to the Governor has been groſly miſrepreſented, in all its circumſtances: And is matter of aſtoniſhment, that a tranſaction of the Houſe, the buſineſs of which is conſtantly done in the open view of the world, could be thus colored: a tranſaction, which by ſpecial order of the Houſe was laid before his Excellency, whoſe duty to his Majeſty, is, at leaſt, not to miſinform him.

His Excellency could not but acknowledge in juſtice to that Houſe, that moderation took place in the beginning of the ſeſſion: This is a truth, my Lord: It was a principle with the Houſe, to conduct the affairs of government in their department, ſo as to avoid the leaſt occaſion of offence: As an inſtance of their pacific diſpoſition, they granted a further eſtabliſhment, for one of his Majeſty's, garriſons in the Province, rather to gratify his Excellency who had requeſted it, than from a full conviction of its neceſſity. But your Lordſhip is informed, that this moderation "did not continue;" and that "inſtead of a ſpirit and prudence and reſpect to the conſtitution, which ſeemed at that time to influence the conduct of a large majority of the members, a thin Houſe, at the end of the ſeſſion preſumed to revert to, and reſolve on a meaſure of an inflamatory nature."——That it was an "unfair proceeding."——"contrary to the real ſenſe of the Houſe." And "procured by ſurprize.——My Lord, the journals and minutes of the Houſe will prove the contrary of all this: and to convince your Lordſhip, the Houſe beg leave to lay before you, the ſeveral Reſolutions, relating to theſe matters, as they ſtand recorded.

The Houſe having finiſhed their petition to the King and their letters to divers of his Majeſty's miniſters ; a motion was regularly made on the 21ſt of January, which was the Middle of the Seſſion, and a reſolution was then taken, to appoint a time to conſider the expediency of writing to the Aſſemblies of the other Colonies, on this continent, with reſpect to the importance of their joining with them in petitioning his Majeſty at this time. Accordingly, on the day aſſigned, there being eighty-two members preſent, a number always allowed to be ſufficient to make a full Houſe, the queſtion was debated ; in conſequence of which a motion took place, that letters be wrote to the ſeveral Aſſemblies of the Provinces, and colonies on the continent, acquainting them that the Houſe had taken into conſideration the difficulties to which they are, and muſt be reduced, by the operation of the late acts of Parliament, for levying duties and taxes on the colonies, and have reſolved on a humble, dutiful, and loyal petition to his Majeſty for redreſs, and alſo upon proper repreſentations to his Majeſty's miniſters on the ſubject : And to deſire that they would ſeverally take ſuch conſtitutional meaſure thereupon as they ſhould judge moſt proper. And the queſtion upon the motion paſſed in the negative.——On thurſday the 4th of February it was moved in the Houſe, that the queſtion be reconſidered, ſo far as to leave it at large ; and conformable to a ſtanding rule of the Houſe that no vote or order ſhall be reconſidered at any time, unleſs the Houſe be as full as when ſuch vote or order was paſſed ; the number in the Houſe was called for, and it appearing that eighty two members were preſent, the queſtion was put and paſſed in the affirmative by a large majority : And by an immediate ſubſequent reſolve, the firſt vote was ordered to be eraced——The ſame day, the reſolution which gave birth to the circular letter took place : a queſtion being regularly moved and fairly debated, whether the Houſe would appoint a committee to prepare a letter to be ſent to each of the Houſes of Repreſentatives and Burgeſſes on the Continent, to inform them of the meaſure which this Houſe has taken with regard to the difficulties ariſing from the acts of Parliament for levying duties and taxes on the American colonies, and report to the Houſe, which paſſed in the affirmative ; and a committee was appointed accordingly ; This committee, after deliberating a week, reported the letter which was read in the Houſe and accepted almoſt unanimouſly ; and fair copies of the ſame were ordered to be taken for the ſpeaker to ſign and forward as ſoon as might be : And this day there were eighty three members in the Houſe.

The day following an order paſſed, that a fair copy of the letter be tranſmitted to Dennis DeBerdt, Eſq; in London. The deſign of which was, that he might be able to produce it, as neceſſity might reuqire, to prevent any miſrepreſentation of its true ſpirit and deſign.

On Saturday the 13th of February, in order that no poſſible occaſion might be taken by the Governor to think that the debates and reſolutions were deſigned to be kept a ſecret from his Excellency, the Houſe came into the following Reſolution, viz. Whereas this houſe hath directed that a letter be ſent to the ſeveral Houſes of Repreſentatives and Burgeſſes of the Britiſh Colonies on the Continent, ſetting forth their ſentiments of the Houſe, with regard to the Great Difficulties that muſt accrue by the operation of divers acts of Parliament, for levying duties and taxes on the colonies, with the ſole and expreſs purpoſe of raiſing a revenue ; and their proceedings thereon, in a humble, dutiful and loyal petition to the King, and ſuch repreſentations to his Majeſty's miniſters as they apprehend may have a tendency to obtain redreſs : and whereas it is the opinion of this Houſe, that all effectual methods ſhould be taken to cultivate an harmony between the ſeveral branches of this Government, as being neceſſary to promote the proſperity of his Majeſty's Government in this Province : Reſolved, that a committee wait on his Excellency the Governor, and acquaint him that a copy of the letter aforeſaid will be laid before him as ſoon as it can be drafted : as well as of all the proceedings of this Houſe relative to ſaid affair, if he ſhall deſire it. And a committee was appointed who waited on his Excellency accordingly.——On Monday following, the Houſe reſolved on the eſtabliſhment already mentioned, which is obſerved only to ſhew your Lordſhip, that there was at this time no diſpoſition in the Houſe " to revive unhappy diviſions and diſtractions ſo prejudicial to the true intereſt of Gr. Britain and the Colonies.

The Houſe beg leave to apologize to your Lordſhip, for the trouble given you, in ſo particular a narration of facts ; which they thought neceſſary to ſatisfy your Lordſhip ; ——That the reſolution of the laſt Houſe, referred to by your Lordſhip, was not an unfair proceeding, procured by ſurpriſe in a thin Houſe as his Majeſty has been informed ; but the declared ſenſe of a large majority, when the Houſe was full ; That the Governor of the Province was made fully acquainted with the meaſure ; and never ſignified his diſapprobation of it to the houſe, which it is preſumed he would have done, in duty to his Majeſty, if he had tho't it was of evil tendency ; & that, therefore, that houſe had abundant reaſon to be confirmed in their own opinion of the meaſures, as being the production of moderation and prudence —— And the houſe humbly rely on the royal clemency, That to petition his Majeſty, will not be deemed by him to be inconſiſtent with a reſpect to the Britiſh conſtitution as ſettled at the revolution by William the 3d That to acquaint their fellow ſubjects, involved in the ſame diſtreſs, of their having ſo done, in full hopes of ſucceſs, even if they had invited the union of all America in one joint Supplication, would not be diſcountenanced by our gracious Sovereign as a meaſure of an inflamatory nature ; That when your Lordſhip, ſhall in juſtice lay a true ſtate of theſe matters before his Majeſty, he will no longer conſider them as tending to create unwarrantable combinations, or excite an unjuſtifiable oppoſition to the conſtitutional authority of the parliamment ; that he will then clearly diſcern, who, are of that deſperate faction, which is continually diſturbing the public tranquility ; and, that while his arm is extended, for the protection of his diſtreſſed and injured ſubjects, he will frown upon all thoſe, who to gratify their own paſſions, have dared even to attempt to deceive him !

The houſe of Repreſentatives of this Province, have more than once, during the Adminiſtration of Governor Bernard been under a neceſſity of intreating his Majeſty's Miniſters to ſuſpend their further judgment upon ſuch Repreſentations of the temper of the people, and the conduct of the Aſſembly as they were able to make it appear to be injurious. The ſame indulgence this Houſe now beg of your Lordſhip ; And beſeech your Lordſhip to patronize them ſo far as to make a favourable Repreſentation of their conduct to the King our Sovereign ; It being the higheſt ambition of this houſe, and the people whom, they repreſent, to ſtand before his Majeſty in their juſt character of affectionate and loyal ſubjects.

Signed by the Speaker.
